The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DANNEMEYER moves that the House recede from disagreement with the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 and concur therein.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, how will the time be allocated concerning the motion in disagreement offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from California requesting one-third of the time?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] opposed to the original motion?

Mr. GALLO. No, Mr. Speaker, I am not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the question on the preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be divided.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the three Members, the two gentlemen from California and the gentleman from New Jersey, will be entitled to 20 minutes each?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is objecting to is the compromise language that has been worked out as it relates to what has been referred to as the Georgetown University amendment, or the Armstrong amendment.

I guess we cannot say it any plainer than to say that if one is interested in religious liberties in our country, certainly we are interested in protecting the rights of all individuals and institutions, and in this case the Armstrong amendment is one that the university does not want. An agreement has been reached. Several Members on the floor have, in fact, chastised the university for their exercise of their own right. They disagree with what the university did, but certainly it is the university in fact that has the right to exercise that freedom and enter into an agreement if they so desire.

The language in the bill that the conferees agreed to provides that educational institutions affiliated with a religious organization may allow discriminatory practices in the free exercise of its religious liberties, where specific homosexual and heterosexual lifestyles or beliefs are contrary to the institutions's particular religious doctrine. That means if Georgetown has some religious tenet or doctrine that does not agree with homosexual lifestyles or some form of heterosexual lifestyles, that they in fact do not have to grant any endorsement or recognition. They do not have to allow them to meet in building or places set aside for religious purposes.

It seems to me with all parties to the instance having already agreed that for Congress to assert itself on the individual liberty of the university to enter into an agreement is just entirely wrong.

Now, there are some organizations, as I have pointed out before, that have some problems with this, and I would like to point out again that one of them is the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, but they also say:

Be it further resolved that the Baptist Joint Committee calls upon religious institutions that wish to claim their right to discriminate on the basis of religion to refuse direct government funding because accepting it compromises the free exercise of rights of such institutions and leads inevitably to an unhealthy entanglement between church and state.

I absolutely agree with them. Georgetown University does not want to exercise that right. They would prefer to have some governmental support, and that is the reason they have entered into an agreement. They feel that it is an appropriate agreement. The District feels that it is an appropriate agreement. The gay community feels that it is an appropriate agreement. The only ones who do not think it is an appropriate agreement is Senator ARMSTRONG on that side and some people in the House.

It just does not make any sense that if you are really concerned about protecting liberties, religious liberties, that you would not allow people to exercise their own first amendment rights and exercise them in a way in which they can reach a compromise that everyone can live with.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the conference language, because it addresses the concerns expressed in the original motion to instruct, but does so in a way that is all-inclusive.

Since the founding of the Nation, we have recognized the constitutional right of religious freedom, including the right to separate religious belief from government restriction.

With the report language, the conferees have supported the rights of religious institutions to exercise their freedom, consistent with our constitutional guarantee of religious separation, in the broadest possible terms.

We not only have met the requirements of the motion to instruct, Mr. Speaker, we have exceeded them.

We have strengthened the basic concept of religious freedom with this amendment by broadening the protections to include any lifestyle or belief that is contrary to religious doctrine.

We must take great care to promote religious freedom without discrimination, because that was the original intent of the first amendment. We must remember that there is a difference between moral questions and legal ones.

I believe that this amendment addresses the concerns of the original Armstrong amendment, but further broadens the protection of religious liberties so that a great institution like Georgetown can be true to its religious heritage and still participate in activities within a diverse community.

Mr. Speaker, for those who are truly concerned about religious freedom, my response today is, "We have done more than you asked," I urge support for the conference language.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Let me first of all say that I fully believe that the conferees in this were acting in good faith and were trying to resolve the issue. I have to also say, however, that on the legal merits and the issues involved, they did not meet the issue. In fact, I am a little surprised, given the fact that the Senate adopted the Armstrong language overwhelmingly and we voted in this House overwhelmingly to concur with the Senate language, why they say they fulfilled their task, when in fact they come back to us with new and different language.

I must say that unfortunately the language does not address the issue, the legal issue, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] has suggested, the legal issue of religious liberty.

I want to say at the outset that the issue here is not that of homosexuality nor is the issue of morality or ethics or lifestyle. It is a religious-liberty issue. It is the question as to whether or not an educational institution associated with, controlled by a religious order or organization has the right to enforce its tenents in its institution. It is as if the Government could force Hebrew Union College to subsidize the Campus Crusade for Christ.

The issue is when one has a religiously organized institution, whether it has the liberty to uphold its tenents in its personnel policies, in its hiring policies in its student admission policies and in its student disciplinary and code policies. It goes well beyond the issue of the homosexual issue.

I want to give the Members some other examples as to where it touches. For example, in my district I have a small Baptist college which at one time was having a problem with an equal rights compliance issue because they refused to hire members on their staff or faculty who had ever been subject to divorce unless the grounds for divorce met their confessional standards for divorce, given their religious traditions. The issue was: was that an arbitrary discrimination based on marital status? They were protected on that ultimately saying that, no, it was discrimination based on their religious confessions of that institution.

Another issue which I read about in a magazine 2 weeks ago, and I am just throwing them off to show the range of this problem, the Philadelphia Bible Institute recently appointed several women to its board of trustees. In protest, a number of faculty members resigned because they thought women in such positions was contrary to the religious purposes of the institution relative to their tenets. I am not justifying or supporting or attacking. I am trying to help us focus on the range of problems which this question gives before us.

Many religious institutions establish criteria both for faculty and for students on such issues as social dancing, use of tobacco, use of alcohol.

The issue has now come to us in this form relative to this issue of sexual orientation or advocacy of sexual practices. Does a Christian institution have a right to insist that its faculty uphold the trinitarian standard, or would a Jewish institution have a right to insist that its faculty uphold a Jewish standard, a nontrinitarian concept of the Deity?

These are the kinds of issues we are struggling with, and I really do not want to debate homosexuality or, if we do, let us at least try to keep the tenor constructive as it has been the last two times we have addressed the issue.

In the language that the committee reports to us, they substitute for the Armstrong criteria two specific clauses. One, it exempts religious-oriented or affiliated institutions in regard to the use of any facility, service, or benefit set aside for the practice or promotion of religion. That would suggest, for example, that a chapel or a church on that campus would be in fact totally exempt from the law of the District of Columbia in this instance on religious grounds, and once again, remember that the issue is not that of discrimination but when a religious right is being exercised.

The question also, however, is more complex than we might suggest. Because where does religious activity begin and end? Is a Christian liberal arts education, for example, to give one type of example, does it cease and end when a student enters or leaves the chapel?

I would simply say that that is an arbitrary distinction. If the same language were applied to an entire college or university or educational entity, we would not have a problem.

The second phase, and the second clause, clause (b) on the grant of any endorsement, approval, or recognition to a person or persons that are organized for, et cetera, does not protect the institution from having to lend the use of its facilities or give comparable institutional support, albeit without endorsement, to such activities. In other words, it still falls short of the religious-freedom protections that Mr. ARMSTRONG and some of us have been advocating for.

I realize that there are some religious organizations which have in fact subscribed and agreed to this as a compromise, but I think the record should show that is by no means universal. The National Association of Evangelicals is explicit in its rejection of this language. The Christian College Coalition rejects this language. The Public Affairs Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention is opposed to this language. The Association of Christian Schools International is opposed to this language. The Lutheran Church Missouri Synod, the largest of the Lutheran bodies in America, is opposed to the language, the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, the Good News Movement of the United Methodist Church, the Center for Catholic Policy, the American Association of Christian Schools, and the National Committee of Catholic Laymen.

Members have to understand that in many instances many of the religious institutions that find the language acceptable are those who do not have in their bodies institutionally religious tenets that are opposed to the practices that are at issue. That is why they have no problem with the language, but for those religious traditions that do, and they are widespread from confessional to free church to fundamentalist to main-line churches do have problems.

I suggest that we could find a solution to the problems if we do not accept the Armstrong language by coming up with constructive language saying that nothing in the District law would infringe on any religious right exercised on behalf of the defense of a religious tenet.

The gentleman from California knows that I have suggested that, and I have suggested that to the gentleman from New York. Perhaps we could come back with that, although quite frankly I do not know why, for the life of me, we have rejected the Armstrong language when just last week we agreed to accept it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY].

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER because it seeks to treat people differently by affirming discrimination and it makes a mockery of the U.S. Constitution.

The Dannemeyer motion would have the Congress embrace the so-called Armstrong amendment which, by its terms, seeks to insert the view of some in the Congress while replacing the view of the local government on a matter that is of purely local concern.

Congress could not insert its view in Wisconsin, which has a similar law, nor in California, where the courts have interpreted that State's civil rights law as prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation. Indeed, one or both houses in eight States have passed laws including sexual orientation in recent years, and at least eight States ban such discrimination in public employment by either executive order or regulation, while 16 counties and over 60 cities have similar laws. The District of Columbia's human rights law is no different than many other State and local laws prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation.

The Armstrong amendment would allow "any educational institution that is affiliated with or closely associated with a religious organization" to affirmatively discriminate against "any person or persons that are organized for, or engaged in, promoting, encouraging, or condoning any homosexual act, lifestyle, orientation, or belief."

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this language is so broad and sweeping that any one of us could be said to be in violation of it. If I hired a gay person, am I "condoning a homosexual act, lifestyle, orientation, or belief"? If a gay person attends my church, and I refuse to banish him or her, am I in violation of this amendment. If a doctor treats a patient with AIDS, is that doctor subject to dismissal from an institution affiliated with a religious organization? You may say that these questions stretch the language of the amendment, but I would say to you, read it.

If the amendment is not constitutionally defective because of its overbreadth, consider how it steps on the first amendment, the Armstrong amendment allows discrimination against an individual's point of view and imposes penalties on the beliefs and advocacy positions of an individual. That kind of frenzy has never been at the foundation of this Nation, and I would suggest that we consider this matter with great care.

Just because something may not be popular or politic, we should not allow a rigidly determined few to dictate our deeds. Reason should rule.

Keep in mind that the courts have considered and settled this matter. The parties to the lawsuit which gave rise to this amendment are satisfied with the agreement they have reached, and they are standing by it. They do not want us to act. No hearings have been held on the Armstrong amendment, nor has any deliberative consideration been given to it. And, the House and Senate conferees, after careful consideration, have offered language which meets the concerns of the Armstrong amendment.

I ask that each Member vote his or her conscience and not his or her politics. If my colleagues will do that, I believe Mr. DANNEMEYER's motion will and should be defeated.

□ 1550

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], also a member of the committee.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, from the discussions thus far, one would think this is an extremely complicated subject. I should like to suggest it is very easy, because there are two distinctions between the language that the committee brings back from conference—which I should point out to my colleagues was proposed by the Senate conferees—and the language that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is offering us.

One is the issue of access to facilities, particularly meeting places; the other is the question of recognition by the institution.

As to the question of access to facilities, there is no question that the language that was brought back from conference and being brought to us today by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] is somewhat weaker than the Armstrong amendment, because it protects only facilities that are used for religious purposes, like chapels.

However, my colleagues should be aware that the language we brought back from conference is much stronger in its protection of institutions than the Dannemeyer language when it comes to the issue of recognition, of forcing religiously affiliated institutions to recognize groups, because the Dannemeyer amendment protects the college, Georgetown, from having to recognize only groups involved with homosexual issues.

The language we bring back from conference gives much more protection to a Georgetown, because it says that a Georgetown does not have to recognize a group that wants to advocate open marriage, a group that wants to advocate premarital heterosexual promiscuity, a group that wants to advocate sex with children.

So the fact of the matter is if Members vote for the Dannemeyer motion, they are voting to force a Georgetown to recognize a group that advocates sex with children; they are forcing Georgetown to recognize a group that advocates open marriage; they are forcing Georgetown to recognize a Georgetown Free Love Society; none of which Georgetown would be forced to do under the language we brought back from conference.

I think that is a very crucial distinction. I think Members should understand that the language we brought back from conference is much stronger on the recognition point.

If Members want to force Georgetown to recognize the Georgetown Free Love Society, vote for Dannemeyer; but if Members do not, then I suggest voting for Dixon.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I agree with everything the gentleman said, other than his presentation of the position of the gentleman from California, Mr. DANNEMEYER's position, because I think it is in error. It is true, however, that first of all there is an absolute exclusion relative to the places of worship on a campus. Granted. It is also true that the committee's report clearly gives a religiously affiliated institution the right to refrain from endorsement, approval, or recognition.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will allow me to reclaim my time, yes, the committee's report does that, but the Dannemeyer motion would not.

Mr. HENRY. But what the gentleman's language does not do is protect the same institution from having to support on a nondiscriminatory basis any student organization or association which is operating contrary to the tenets of that organization.

Mr. GREEN. I think what I said is plainly we do not offer the same protection to the institution in terms of facilities and those kinds of things, that the Dannemeyer motion does. I started off my remarks by acknowledging that. That is plainly the case. But we provide much more protection to the institution when it comes to the nature of the activities that it does not have to endorse.

We have made it clear that in the case of a Georgetown, they not only do not have to recognize a homosexual group, they do not have to recognize groups advocating other sexual practices, heterosexual practices, that are contrary to their religious doctrine. The result under the Dannemeyer motion is that a Georgetown would have to recognize a Georgetown Free Love Society. I think that is very plain. That is a matter of sexual orientation. Or a group that advocates sex with children, another matter of sexual orientation.

All those organizations Georgetown would have to recognize under the Dannemeyer amendment. We protect Georgetown from having to do that, and for that reason I think our amendment is much more supportive than the Dannemeyer motion.

Mr. HENRY. That means these organizations have to have an equal degree of support, in addition to equal recognition.

Mr. GREEN. If I could reclaim my time, the homosexual group, right, has to be permitted to have a meeting place, but not in a religious facility. So I agree with the gentleman from Michigan, in terms of facilities we are providing somewhat less protection than the Dannemeyer motion, but we are providing much more protection when it comes to the issue of the kinds of groups that have to be recognized by an institution.

I think that what we bring is much more helpful to the cause of religious liberty and protects groups from having to endorse things that their tenets do not permit them to endorse. We are much broader and much more helpful to the groups in that than the Dannemeyer motion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate initially to say that the House voted overwhelmingly on this issue last week by a vote of 264 to 152, in effect confirming the position advocated by this Member from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Why we are here now discussing it again I can only ascribe to the tender mercies of the conferees who in the isolation of the activity labored forth and brought to us a total rejection of what the House of Representatives voted to last week and the U.S. Senate voted to do last week as well.

Now my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] has the uneviable task of attempting to defend this absurdity.

But let us really list where we are. Last year the House and Senate voted very clearly that the District of Columbia was to amend its ordinance so that Georgetown University would have the legal authority not to charter an organization based on sexual preference, specifically homosexuals.

The circuit court of appeals just within the past month ruled that the direction of Congress last year was unconstitutional because it took away the freedom of speech and the right to vote of the members of the District of Columbia City Council.

This year Senator ARMSTRONG began this effort again on the Senate side and got language into the bill on the Senate side which reached into the generic role of the District of Columbia which under the Constitution Congress can clearly do.

Rather than directing the council to amend, as was done last year, this year Senator ARMSTRONG's amendment amended the generic law of the District of Columbia to effectively say to Georgetown University and any religious institution in America, "You have the religious freedom right not to charter an organization which is in violation of the tenents of your religion."

Then the House last week, we had three votes my colleagues will recall, the first one was on a procedural matter where this Member from California had to climb the mountain on the procedure just to offer the amendment. We won that by a margin of 25 votes, as I recall.

The second vote was the definitive vote up or down on the issue of whether we could conform to the Senate language. That, as I say, carried 264 to 152. I believe the House and the Senate have voted clearly and distinctly that we want to preserve the ability of Georgetown University, the right, if they choose to do so, in response to the religious tenets of their organization not to charter an organization that is in violation of the tenets of that religious group, namely homosexuals.

I want to point out another little interesting wrinkle to the conference report that I ask my colleague to reject, being offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

The Senate language reads: "The use of any funds, service, facility, or benefit." The compromise language brought back by the conferees reads: "The use of any facility, service, or benefit." They have omitted, the conferees, the word "fund".

Now there is no question in this Member's mind that by the omission of the word "fund" from the conference report, the argument will be made that with the adoption of this language Georgetown University could say to the homosexual student groups on its campus, "You can't use the chapel, but you will have to use Georgetown University money to provide funding to that student group on campus." I do not believe that that is anything that this House should be doing.

I believe we should be respecting the right of Georgetown University. Reference has been made to the fact that the leaders of Georgetown University are not supporting this. This came out last week.

The reason for it is that the District of Columbia is asserting its muscle in the sense that Georgetown wanted to obtain the benefit of some tax exempt bonds and the message was delivered to Georgetown University that if they were to be able to get those bonds they were going to have to stop this 7-year battle that had been going on with the District of Columbia to preserve the ability of Georgetown University to conform to their religious tenets.

So I think we should, as a matter of religious freedom, say for all of us that Georgetown University or any other religious institution in this country should have the privilege of reserving its facilities on its campus in a way that gives respect to the tenets of that religion.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER], a member of the committee.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think that committee, contrary to what the gentleman from California observed, went into the conference and tried to make some more precise definitions of the language that was sent to the conference. And I frankly think it has done just that.

I frankly do not know what "or closely associated with the tenets of a religious organization" really means. "Closely identified with the tenets of." No conferee, not one knew what that language meant. We struck that language.

In point of fact I do not like the amendment the way the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] has offered it. I am not sure that any Member of the conference specifically likes the language, per se. What we believe it is an improvement on and a better clarification of the language that the House sent to the conference.

Now clearly the conferees would not have come out with this language if the House had not voted as it had; it sent the conference a message. The conference has essentially come back with, I think, a clarified, more specific, more accurate protection of religious institutions, those properties which they use for the purposes of promulgating their religious tenets, and will in fact, as the gentleman from New York has pointed out, have a broader protection because we have added "heterosexual lifestyle or belief that it is contrary to its religious doctrine" to the language.

So in fact I think the gentleman from California is incorrect. We did not go in a vacuum. This language came back specifically because of the House's vote.

I would suggest to those House Members who voted for the Dannemeyer motion previously that they can be comfortable with voting for the Dixon language now because it is in fact perfecting language.

Let me make it clear, this would not be the language that I would like to see; let me make it clear I would prefer this amendment were not on the floor. But having said that, I think it is perfecting language and I think the House ought to support it because if we are going to take this position what we clearly want to do is protect the religious institution in its religious tenets. I do not think any of us disagree on that.

I said that in the first debate on the floor. My friend Mr. HENRY and I agree on that proposition. From my own reading of the court decision they protect that.

Now there can be a distinction or a difference of opinion as to whether or not what the court decided ultimately defends it.

Notwithstanding that I think in all fairness this does in fact what the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Colorado say they want to do, and that is protect the religious institution in its position as it relates to the promulgation of its faith.

Let me say further that the reason I rose to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] to yield to a question, he said on the floor that this language dealt with every religious institution in America. I think the gentleman misspoke. It clearly deals only with those institutions located in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I used that statement in reference to the principle that is being established. Clearly the gentleman is correct; we are only dealing with the District of Columbia. But let us not kid ourselves: This principle of religious freedom is going to have applicability and effectiveness and influence across this country.

Mr. HOYER. Let me in concluding say I am a Southern Baptist, which is a group very strongly committed. It is committed, as most groups in this country, to the separation of church and state. They feel very strongly about that.

Baptists throughout history have been discriminated against by the state. So I feel very strongly on that issue.

I think this language affects that and it affects it with integrity and I think the conference report ought to be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment of the chairman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The Chair will announce that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] has 12 minutes remaining, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] has 7½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the gentleman from California's motion. The conference committee has developed compromise language which addresses the concerns raised earlier by Senator ARMSTRONG and others. It reflects the intent of the House and Senate amendments to protect the rights of religious institutions, while also meeting constitutional objections and protecting home rule for the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement allows any religious educational institution to deny "endorsement, approval, or recognition" to groups which promote sexual lifestyles contrary to its religious doctrine. It also allows the denial of the use of religious facilities and services such as the campus chapel, to such groups.

This compromise reflects the intent of the Armstrong amendment, without the far-reaching implications of the original language. Georgetown University is well satisfied with its current agreement with campus organizations, and the D.C. Court of Appeals decision in the matter. Further, the university opposes congressional action to overturn the agreement, and believes that home rule should be upheld. Religious leaders also oppose the Armstrong language, and have asked Congress to reject it.

Mr. Speaker, the conference committee provision addresses the concerns which have been raised by Members with regard to the rights of religious institutions, without threatening the civil rights of individuals. I urge my colleagues to support the compromise agreement and oppose this effort to adopt the Armstrong language.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot today about compromise language, about classification of the language of amendments offered by Senator ARMSTRONG and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

However, it is clear that the intent of Senator ARMSTRONG and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has been changed by the conference committee. The conference agreement is nothing more than a gutting of the Armstrong amendment, and it defies common sense, and it defies democracy.

Now, I am a freshman, and I have to notice the way things are done, maybe this is the way things are done here. However, last week this House debated this question, and we reached a decision by an overwhelming margin. The House, by an overwhelming vote, instructed our conferees to agree to the Armstrong amendment which had already been adopted by the Senate.

Now, one would think that once both Houses have decided this, that the Armstrong amendment should be agreed to, that the issue would then be settled. Well, not according to our conferees. There is all kinds of compromise language and clarification that takes what we are voting on, and in a totally different direction. Our conferees decided to substitute basically their own judgment for the judgment of the House of Representatives.

This House decided that the status quo needed to be changed to protect religious freedom of colleges and universities in the District of Columbia. Our conferees, who are supposed to be our agents, decided that no, the status quo does not need to be changed in that direction, and came back with a conference agreement which does not change things as we voted to change them.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that has most amazed me as a freshman is the extreme lengths to which committee leaders go to, on both sides of the aisle, simply to avoid up or down votes on this or that issue. In this case, complicated maneuvers of this ilk are employed after they failed on the floor, and the House had clearly expressed its will.

Meanwhile, the Senate conferees can now go back to the Senate and say, "Sorry, we tried to preserve the Armstrong amendment, but the House just would not agree." Well, the House did agree. It is only the House conferees that would not agree, and did so in total defiance of their instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to give these conferees a rebuke of their actions, and I ask my colleagues to overwhelmingly defeat this motion to gut the intent and the word of the Armstrong amendment, and tell our conferees on any legislation, that when the House gives them instructions, that those instructions are to be followed, not to be thrown out the window. I ask for a no vote on the chairman's motion and support for the gentleman from California, Mr. DANNEMEYER's motion.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute in response to the gentleman from California. The first issue involved is whether conferees are bound by an instruction of the House. I would inform the gentleman that they are not.

So as far as a rebuke of the House is concerned, the conferees exercised their judgment as conferees, and their action was under the authority of this House.

Second, I would inform the gentleman that the compromise amendment was offered by the Senate; however, the Senate conferees did not support that amendment on the floor, and of course did not support it in conference. We accepted an amendment by the Senate conferees and that is where the language that we are offering as an amendment came from. I just wanted to clarify that, because when the gentleman talked about rebuffing the conferees, I do not think they should be rebuffed for exercising the authority that is given to them by this House.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I rise in opposition to the motion offered by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER]. In doing so, Mr. Speaker, I would make a few points, the first point being historical.

First, the human rights law adopted by the D.C. Council, the elected representatives of the people of the National Capital, is a well-reasoned law carrying into effect the principles of our National Constitution. It strengthens the civil rights laws of the city to attack many subterfuges and subtle forms of discrimination against the physically handicapped, against families with children, against women, against students, against people speaking other languages, against single people, and against individuals of different races, colors, religions, sexual orientation, personal appearance, or politics. Congress itself continues to strengthen antidiscrimination laws. This is as it should be.

Second, Georgetown University has made it clear that it does not want action by Congress. The students and the university have reached a compromise that the university is not asking to have scuttled. Congress should let well enough alone and not create a problem where none exists.

Third, the vague language of the amendment clearly illustrates the dangers of trying to design exceptions to human rights laws. The amendment uses incredibly fuzzy terms as "condoning a lifestyle." What does that mean? And "condition the use of a benefit." What does that mean? And "associated with the tenets of a religious organization." What does that mean? This amendment does not clearly state anyone's right to do anything or not to do anything.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, this is an extraordinary indication to endless conflict, pain, and litigation.

Further, Mr. Speaker, last year Senator ARMSTRONG was successful in getting an amendment attached to the D.C. appropriations bill that would have required the District of Columbia to pass a law that would have made it lawful to discriminate against individuals of a religious institution, if the religious institution did not find a particular lifestyle acceptable. Fortunately 2 weeks ago the D.C. Court of Appeals ruled that amendment to be unconstitutional.

This year an amendment that directly legislated the right to discriminate was added to the D.C. bill by the Senate, and this past Tuesday the House voted to instruct the D.C. appropriation conferees to include Senate amendment No. 22.

During the meeting of the House-Senate conferees, a compromise was reached and is reflected in the conference report on page 20 under section 141. While this gentleman might find even this version going beyond the bounds of reason, in fairness to my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee I will not object.

With all due respect to religious institutions in America and their great centers of learning that have flourished from coast to coast and border to border, have we come to the time once again when it is allowable to discriminate against individuals because they are different from what we perceive to be an acceptable lifestyle. This gentleman can recall the days that the color of his skin and therefore by inference his lifestyle as a black American was basis for the denial of membership in any white church in the country. And the reasons given were exactly those used by the proponents of Senate amendment No. 22, that is religious organizations in America have constitutional rights to decide who can and cannot be a member based on their own biased judgment.

It is mind boggling that we are now ready to put into law by congressional mandate exactly what many in America have fought too long to overcome and this is actions by any organization anywhere at anytime that would say that because of one's race, religion, creed, and now lifestyle, one may not be a part of us.

Mr. Speaker, no right thinking American is going to understand a logic that says that Congress has the right to provide the basis for discrimination and that we are doing so to protect religious freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, we are on the verge of setting a precedent which could do much greater damage than the Jim Crow decisions. Vote "no" on the Dannemeyer motion.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, let me say to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] that I marched with Martin Luther King in this city August 28, 1963, and I am very proud of it. I sat right in the front row with the late Robert Ryan and Sammy Davis, Jr., and Paul Newman and all those people, and then I went down to Alabama and Mississippi and registered voters. I got a little Republican twist in there. I said that Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves, not Franklin Delano Roosevelt, although he did some good stuff.

I enjoyed it tremendously. As a Republican conservative, I was down there thinking that my country would never be totally free, especially in the 1950's, after I had flown with black fighter pilots; some of them could outfly me, and I could not believe that we could not send a whole team of black Thunderbirds for an Air Force demonstration down to the South to show the young white kids that these black pilots were as good or better than many white pilots, and that equality was for everybody.

But I say to my friend, the gentleman from California, that the road to Selma did not lead to the road to sodomy. And I am amazed that we would come to a day and use the term, "boggle the mind," that we would equate the Afro-American heritage, the Jewish-American heritage, the Irish-American heritage, or gender, women, with sodomy. This is a crazy day in this House. It is Alice in Wonderland.

To tell college kids—and I repeat that I was a freshman at 17, until April of my freshman year—to tell college kids that they can form a club around anal intercourse if they are males but not if they are a heterosexual club, to tell them that they can have every room on the campus at Georgetown except the chapel is absolute craziness.

It bears repeating again, although I know one of the other gentlemen has already done this, that here is the National Association of Evangelicals, and that is 15 million Christian Americans, probably 10 to 20 percent black, and it is 45,000 churches, with probably more than that number of blacks in our country represented here, and they say that this Adams-Hoyer substitute to Senator ARMSTRONG's amendment is a terrible blow to religious freedom.

Decent people can disagree on this, but I would like to know who agrees with them. Here is the Christian College Coalition, the Public Affairs Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention, the Association of Christian Schools Internationale, the Christian League Society, the Lutheran Church of Missouri Synod, and the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights. I have been a supporter of theirs since 1974. The founder is a Jesuit priest, Father Virgil Bloom, may he live to be 100. Then there is the Good News Movement of the United Methodist Church, the Center for Catholic Policy, whom I support, the American Association of Christian Schools, and the National Committee of Catholic Laymen, of which I am a member.

I tell the Members that it is insanity that on a Catholic Jesuit College campus they say they have no interest in this. That is not what the Jesuits I talked to say. It is crazy to say that you cannot form a heterosexual club of 17-year-old freshmen swingers of mixed sex, but for same sex orientation or for lesbian or male homosexuals, you can. And note that I am not using the adjective, "gay," because that adjective, which used to mean happy, merciful, or cheerful, is totally inappropriate when a plague is sweeping across our country that is killing hundreds of thousands of homosexuals before this plague has run its course, and we do not know what is going to stop its course. To use the word, "gay," instead of "sad" is an idiotic acquiescence to a public relations ploy that started 15 years ago when they said, without the great author who did books on Burr and Lincoln and everything, without his acquiescence, it is an idiotic word. They changed the word, "homosexual," to "gay." They changed a medical word to a public relations thing, just as they torture and twist the whole vocabulary of "gay bashing," "homophobe," "discrimination," and "intolerance," all around anal and oral sex. This is for college kids, freshmen and sophomores?

What idiocy is this? It has nothing to do with bigotry. I matriculated at Jesuit schools for 7 years at Loyola High and Loyola University in Los Angeles, and I was taught carefully the difference between a venial sin and a mortal sin. How great an offense is this?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] has expired.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to take this opportunity to remind those Members controlling the time that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has 1 minute remaining now, that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], who has the right to close, has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield briefly to me?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I yield briefly to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to my colleague that I stood in the well of this House to argue for the right of people to choose and for freedom. I was not talking about sodomy, and I would just suggest to my colleague that it is a grossly unfair effort to walk into this well and attempt to say what this gentleman is more than capable of saying himself. I resent the gentleman doing that.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I will reclaim my time.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should apologize.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman described sodomy on college campuses as a lifestyle. This is my time, and I say that it is not a lifestyle. If I may come down and refer to my Christian teaching at a Jesuit institution, it is a mortal sin, a grievous offense, a felony. As compared to a venal offense or a misdemeanor, it is something that is a grievous matter requiring sufficient reflection and full consent of the will.

But if a Jesuit institution so confuses its principles and is lecturing to freshmen and sophomores, some of whom may be minors, that it says it is a grievous matter, "but your will can be so screwed up here because we are going to let our facilities be used by clubs based on sodomy," the road to Selma, I repeat, was not the road to the approval of sodomy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, but let me say that I would like to reserve the right to close, and I would ask that other Members yield time now to their colleagues.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has 1 minute remaining.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the vote be on whether there will be a division?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, the question has been divided. There has been a division, and the first question will be: Will the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 22?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. That is the first vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the first vote.

The second vote will be, if the House does recede: Will the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON]?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. And, Mr. Speaker, in order to get to the position that this Member, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], has offered, we must defeat the issue that is being presented by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON]; is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Because the argument is getting a little hot and steamy, I thought maybe we ought to pose exactly what the legal question is once again.

Despite all our preferences and strong feelings—and obviously, I feel strongly, too—the issue before us is really very clear. It is a legal question, and let me try to clarify it. The issue is the rights of religiously affiliated and attached educational institutions vis-a-vis the District of Columbia nondiscrimination law. The conference committee report allows an educational institution to exert its rights absolutely on its places of worship, on its campus, and qualifiedly on its nonplaces of worship.

Mr. Speaker, it would say that while they would not have to give endorsement, approval or recognition to a person or a group promoting any homosexual or heterosexual lifestyle, they would, however, on the other hand, have to fund, service and facilitate those groups as they do any other organized group granted recognition.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, my clarification of the pending business is a little different from that of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY]. It seems to me there are two issues here, and I return to those two issues: one, the question of the meeting place, the facilities; the other the question of endorsement. There is no question that the proposal of the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] offers more protection to a religious institution than the conference report because the conference report protects only religious facilities. But the Dannemeyer proposal is much less help to the religious institution in terms of not having to endorse or recognize groups with whose views on sexual matters it disagrees, because the Dannemeyer amendment is limited in that respect only to groups that are advocating or condoning homosexuality, whereas the conference report covers homosexual and heterosexual practices.

So, Mr. Speaker, under the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] a Georgetown has to recognize a group that supports sex with children, if it is heterosexual sex, free love, open marriage. That is implicit in the Dannemeyer proposal. He may not like it, but that is the way his proposal is drawn.

Our proposal, what we brought back from conference, the Senate language that we got in conference, essentially protects a Georgetown against having to recognize or endorse groups which have views on heterosexual sex that it does not support religiously. So I think the conference report is much broader. I think from a religious point of view, we give much more protection than the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], and I therefore urge my colleagues to support the Dixon proposal and to defeat the Dannemeyer proposal.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] for closing.

Mr. Speaker, there are no further requests on my side for time, so pending that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, who is entitled to close in this debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] is entitled to close debate.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], my colleague, so that I would have an opportunity then on the next vote, if that prevails, to have my motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment approved, which would reinstate what the House voted last week to do by a vote of 264 to 152.

To the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], my colleague, let me say that. I wonder sometimes if we are talking about the same issue. The basic argument that would be used by whatever sexual group came along would be the District of Columbia ordinance, and since the prohibition on discrimination is only related to relief relating to homosexuals, I do not believe that that ordinance can be used as a means whereby they could force the leaders of Georgetown University to do what he claims they would be able to do.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, the language is sexual preference, not just homosexuality, in the D.C. ordinance. That is the point.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. My colleague will have to go back to the basic document of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I would remind my colleagues of one thing. The central point is missing here. No one has ever questioned the right of Georgetown, or any other university, to teach whatever it wants to teach. Its message could be one of hate, it could be one of love, it could be one of inclusion, one of exclusion. That is its business and its business alone, and no one has the right to interfere with that.

Mr. Speaker, the question here is whether any institution, whether it wants to preach racism, sexism, or whatever it might preach, is entitled to public funds in support of that message. This issue rose only because the university sought the backing of publicly guaranteed bonds with the full faith and credit of the District of Columbia Government.

Mr. Speaker, that is the issue. It is not one of religious freedom. It is whether or not religiously operated institutions are entitled to public support and public funding regardless of their views.

No one in this land that I know of would question the right of any university or any individual, even the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], to believe or to say anything they wish. The only question comes in the support of public funds.

Mr. Speaker, that is the question, and through all the commotion Members ought to see that and see it very clearly.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to my colleague and friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] for yielding and thank also the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] for agreeing to language with Senators FOWLER and ADAMS, and I think it really goes to the essence of what this debate has been about for the last several weeks.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to remind ourselves that 62 municipalities of all sizes have agreed to language exactly like that that was agreed to by the city council of the District of Columbia. Obviously, as is our wont, we throw out that fact and debate this issue on the merits simply because we have the approval authority here for all those ordinances.

However, Mr. Speaker, why are we dealing with this issue? I do not really think it is impossible to discern that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], my colleague, has a broader issue that he wants to bring to the attention of the House, and that is, as he says, the society's acceptance of people who have a different sexual preference, people who are clearly understood as homosexuals, as people who want to exercise their rights and who have found many institutions, many levels of Government, who agree that they must be protected by our laws.

This is not here because of any request of any college or university. Georgetown University has made it clear that they neither asked for, nor participated, in the legislative process involving the amendment that was offered by Senator ARMSTRONG. Indeed they have indicated to us on countless occasions that they have accepted the resolution of their 8-year-old dispute with the gay rights student groups on campus and really do not want this issue to be brought before the body.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the thoughtful concerns of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] have to be discussed and have to be resolved. I cannot think of a better way to resolve this very difficult clash of rights, the right to freedom of religion and the public interest in the quality of a secular education, and the individual's right to a sexual preference and their right to be protected in that.

Mr. Speaker, this clash of rights is being well handled, I believe, by this amendment offered by the Senators, Mr. ADAMS and Mr. FOWLER. They have essentially made a dividing line between those activities that occur on campus that are related to religion and those that are not, and it is totally appropriate, it seems to me, to protect those religious institutions against having to use their chapel, chancery, or other aspects of the religious aspect of the particular institution to foster any kind of activity that they find religiously reprehensible. At the same time this amendment does not intrude into the constitutional protections of homosexual students, and in fact, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] has said, it offers broader protection of religious freedom than the Armstrong amendment.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] was quoted earlier as saying that there are many religious institutions concerned about heterosexual lifestyles. This would not discriminate against homosexuals. It would say to religious institutions that they could exercise their rights to take stands against heterosexual or homosexual activity, if it were not appropriate and in keeping with the respective denominations or the faith community.

I want to make clear that there are many religious organizations that do not believe we should be debating this. The United Church of Christ, the Evangelical Lutheran Church, the American Jewish Committee, the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church all ask us to accept this compromise, and I do as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House concur in the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 with an amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 170, nays 252, answered not voting 10, as follows:

Messrs. DINGELL, ESPY, PARRIS, and SPRATT changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the House refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate Numbered 22 with an amendment.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 3015, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION, 1990

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3015) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. COUGHLIN

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COUGHLIN moves that the managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 3015, be instructed to agree to Senate amendments numbered 9, 17, 18, 142, 143, and Section 405 (a) and (b) of Senate amendment 140, and Section 407 of Senate amendment 141.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the transportation appropriations bill as passed by the Senate contains critical parts of the President's drug strategy programs. The motion to instruct the conferees instructs them to accept the Senate provisions.

If indeed we are serious, my colleagues, about the war on drugs, we should support this motion to instruct the conferees.

The motion instructs the conferees to support Senate appropriations that would increase funding for the Coast Guard, our No. 1 interdicter of drugs, by $37.4 million.

Mr. Speaker, the motion to instruct requires that colleges and universities adopt drug-free campus plans and policies, including user sanctions. It requires local educational agencies to adopt drug and alcohol abuse programs in our elementary and secondary schools.

Mr. Speaker, these provisions are vital if we are to educate our young people to the deadly dangers of drugs. They provide user accountability in our colleges and in our elementary and secondary schools.

Further provisions in the Senate bill which the motion to instruct covers requires States to develop statewide drug treatment plans, including performance-based criteria.

A recent study by the General Accounting Office which the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse, of which I am the ranking member, received, indicates that treatment slots vary all over the lot and around the country in terms of quality.

This would help to assure quality and availability for drug treatment. The provisions further provide that we can use forfeited drug assets for antidrug programs. This means that millions of dollars in forfeited assets by drug pushers could be used for antidrug programs.

The provisions also would allow us to give drug-related assistance to Colombia, Peru, and Bolivia for police and law enforcement in those countries. Mr. Speaker, those are the key countries in the cocaine trade that is so deadly and that is affecting our people, our young people in particular.

We have to be able to help them.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUGHLIN. I yield to the distinguished ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the gentleman in the well [Mr. COUGHLIN] for his motion to instruct conferees. I had every intention of doing it for the Coast Guard to go along with the Senate figure of $37,400,000 more than was appropriated in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was interested in putting in the instructions for the drug issue which he is now explaining to the House of Representatives.

The demands placed upon the Coast Guard have never been greater. Over 30 percent of their operations are directed to drug interdiction, and their efforts are getting results. Just 1 week ago the Coast Guard Cutter Cushing made the biggest maritime drug seizure in history. Nearly 6 tons of cocaine were seized on a Panamanian freighter sailing off of Galveston, TX. That cocaine will never hit the streets because the Coast Guard was there.

Their drug interdiction is paying off, but it is also stretching their resources in other areas. I want to make sure that they can continue to focus resources on drug interdiction without cutting back on protecting the environment, enforcing our fisheries laws, keeping our waterways safe, and saving lives. That's where a higher level of funding helps.

The $31.4 million for acquisition, construction, and improvements will establish two more search and rescue satellite terminals. It will improve shore facilities and aids to navigation, and it will support vessel traffic monitoring systems to keep those tankers from collisions and groundings. The extra $2 million for the Coast Guard Reserve will help the Coast Guard with extra manpower for all the added responsibilities which are coming on the oilspill response legislation. And the $4 million more for research and development will be used for research into ways to protect the environment from the effects of oil and hazardous chemical spills.

I want to thank the gentleman for including my part of the motion to instruct on the Coast Guard and I certainly support the gentleman's efforts.

Mr. COUGHLIN. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has always been a strong, loyal supporter of the Coast Guard throughout many, many years, and I certainly appreciate his willingness to let us also put the drug provisions in this motion to instruct.

Mr. CONTE. We will make a good team.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the gentleman's motion.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the drug provisions that are in this bill are a critical part of the President's drug strategy. They were thoughtfully drafted by the administration. They were drafted by the drug czar whom we created in this Congress to develop that drug strategy and to develop that drug legislation.

They were examined extensively by the other body. They were adopted by an overwhelming bipartisan vote in the other body, in the Senate. They should be adopted by this House.

As I said, if we are serious about the drug war, we must put our votes where our mouths are and support the motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for the House to speak up in a loud and unified word. Mr. Speaker, I know there has got to be a great deal of reluctance to put this type of language on an appropriations bill. However, it is a vehicle that is out there now, and I would hope that we would take the same opportunity that the other body took and I believe we would pass this quickly and that would have the overwhelming support of both Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, title IV—the drug title, includes nine amendments, eight of those amendments are legislative in nature.

The Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the committees of legislative jurisdiction, persuaded the majority leader of the Senate to take those eight legislative amendments and put them into a freestanding bill which was done—S. 1735 passed the Senate last Thursday and has been referred by you to the appropriate committees in the House. This has been done to ensure that the committees or jurisdiction—those with the most knowledge about the legislation—can work their will.

Mr. Speaker, the motion would deny that right to the committees of jurisdiction and also, and equally important, limit the flexibility inherent in the appropriations process.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct conferees to accept higher levels of funding for the U.S. Coast Guard. I would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts for offering this important motion.

During the past several years the U.S. Coast Guard has had its budget reduced while simultaneously being asked to expand its mission. Part of the Coast Guard's expanded mission is to assist in the war on drugs. The Coast Guard is on the frontlines in this war—patrolling our waterways and interdicting drugs before they reach our children.

Just last week, on October 2, the brand new, 110-foot Coast Guard cutter, Cushing, succeeded in making the largest cocaine seizure in maritime history. The Cushing and her brave crew confiscated over 6 tons of cocaine from a Panamanian vessel and made several arrests.

This seizure illustrates how vitally important the Coast Guard's efforts are. If we are going to fight a real war against drugs, we are going to have to give our troops the ammunition they need to fight back against drug criminals.

Mr. Speaker, the President recently went before the American people to ask for their strong support in the battle against drugs. And the Members of this body were at pains either to endorse the President's proposals or to urge him to go further.

So what kind of a message will it send if we are unwilling to approve higher levels of funding for the Coast Guard, which is daily on the frontlines in this crucial battle? It will send a message that this body is not willing to stand by the President, and this body is not willing to stand by its own commitments to fight a real war against drugs.

Mr. Speaker, today, we should have the courage to stand by our commitments. Let us send the Coast Guard into the battlefield with the tools they need to win. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the motion.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—yeas, 402, nays 15, answered "present" 1, not voting 14, as follows:

Mr. FORD of Michigan and Mr. HAYES of Illinois changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. LIVINGSTON changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion to instruct was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The Speaker will appoint conferees upon his return to the chair.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2991, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2991) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONTE moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 2991 be instructed to agree to Senate amendment numbered 189.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that on this occasion both managers of this motion to instruct would be in favor of the motion, and since I am opposed to it in its present form, I would be allotted 20 minutes of time in opposition. If my parliamentary understanding is correct, I would respectfully request to be assigned that 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] is correct.

Is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] opposed to the motion?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to vote against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] opposed to the motion?

Mr. CONTE. No, Mr. Speaker; it is my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 20 minutes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am offering this motion to instruct the conferees on the Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill in order to give the House an opportunity to endorse heartily the international drug summit, and to vote against Manuel Noriega.

My motion directs the conferees to agree to Senate amendment 189, which calls on the President to include in the agenda of the proposed international drug summit the removal of Noriega from any position of power in Panama. Such a summit was recommended in the Anti-drug Abuse Act of 1988. And just this morning, we have the news that President Bush has accepted the invitation of the leaders of the three drug-producing nations, Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia, to meet along with European leaders within the next 90 days.

This is good news. As called for in my motion, the United States will intensify our efforts at the unilateral, bilateral, and multilateral levels for a more effective war on drugs, and to kick that repugnant thug out of Panama. It is especially timely, today, that the House has the opportunity to cast an overwhelming vote supporting these developments.

Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress fully share the frustration of the American public at the inability of the Panamanian people, our Government, or any international body to restore to power the duly elected Government of Panama. I know that President Bush shares our disgust at the scenes of legitimate and elected opposition leaders being beaten and terrorized.

Noriega sends his goons out with rubber hoses, chains, and clubs to beat up on candidates whose only offense was to beat the socks off him in the election. He has transformed Panama into a haven for drug lords and money launderers. He is the cocky schoolyard bully who is bringing shame and despair on all Panamanians.

If we are ever to send the signal that we are going to regain control over our southern border, this tinhorn dictator and his parasitic cronies have to go.

It turns my stomach to watch this guy, who I call Dr. Pock, to watch him strutting around giving the Panamanian salute to the United States. I have this irrepressible urge to step on him, to squash him like the cockroach that he is. But being the gentleman that I am, I am offering this motion instead.

So if you want to register your revulsion, and your support for stronger international action to bring democracy to Panama, and to step up the war on drugs, vote for the previous question and for the Conte motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do not usually support instructions on appropriation bills, but I would not want to oppose language supporting the war on drugs. We all know that the President has agreed to an international drug summit, so this language is appropriate for matters that we believe should come at the summit; but also, I have another reason for not opposing this motion.

I am informed that the opposition wants to defeat this motion to instruct the conferees so that they can offer a motion requiring that the Census Bureau not count some of the persons who are in the United States on the date that the 1990 census is taken.

Now, if the Census Bureau were required to exclude any group, let me tell you what some of the problems would be.

First of all, the census is primarily taken by mail. The Bureau sends out the questionnaires by mail and then they have follow up interviews for those who did not answer the mail questionnaire.

Well, one option at this point if the Senate amendment an excluding illegal aliens were to be adopted, would be to have an independent second census. The Bureau would have to design a whole new questionnaire and have a new census later. That could cost $1 billion, but that money is not in this bill. There is not $1 billion to do that even if you wanted to, even if there were time to do it, and there is not another appropriations bill that is going to be passed in the Congress, in time. So that is not a viable option.

The second option would be to reprint the questionnaire. Reprinting the questionnarie could cost $40 million and other associated costs could bring the total of this option to $250 million. We do not have $250 million in the bill for that purpose, so the only thing that could be done within the money in the bill is not to have any follow-up interviews after the Census questionnaries are returned by mail. There are some people who do not answer the mail questionnaries, so by not having the followup interviews on those people, possibly they could find the money. But that is not a viable option, either, because we would end up without a full count of the citizens of the United States. We would not have counted those who did not respond by mail.

Under either option, you would need a series of questions to identify whether or not the respondents were legal aliens, illegal aliens or citizens of the United States. It would be an almost impossible task to identify which ones were legal and which ones were illegal. The truthfulness of the respondent in answering these questions would be almost impossible to detect. The Senate amendment would also delay the delivery of the Census counts for the purpose of reapportionment beyond December 31, 1990, and for the purpose of redistricting beyond April 1, 1991 as required by law. By April 1991 most of the States will already have enacted their reapportionment legislation. They would have to have special sessions in order to consider redistricting legislation.

So we have to come to the conclusion, I think, that this is really not a very viable possibility.

Now, in addition to that, the Senate amendment is unconstitutional. It is just plainly unconstitutional. The Constitution says that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State.

I think it is very clear that if we were to try to require the Census Bureau to do something different than the Constitution requires, there would for sure be a constitutional challenge. It takes time for the courts to consider that. There would be even more months, if not a year, before the Census Bureau could know whether or not they could proceed with the census questionnaire that they now have, so I say that agreeing to the Senate amendment is not a good thing to do.

Now, the administration says they will veto the bill if the Senate amendment requiring the exclusion of the counting of illegal aliens for reapportionment purposes is in the final version of the bill. Usually threats of vetoes do not affect me very much. We get such threats all the time up here and we still do whatever we think is right. If the President wants to veto it, we draw the line; however, in this case I am convinced that the President does not have any alternative. There is no alternative if he gets this bill, with this kind of a provision in it, but to veto it. That means that all the other good things that are in this bill cannot be enacted except through a continuing resolution. Under a continuing resolution a number of things will be cut back because you use the lower of the current level, the House level or the Senate level, so this is not a good thing to do.

So I am here today to support the Conte motion to instruct and I am opposing the Ridge motion to instruct that I understand will be offered if the previous question on the Conte motion is not voted up. I ask you to vote today for the previous question and for the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to instruct the conferees.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make the procedural question very, very clear. I am asking you to vote against the previous question, not against the motion to instruct that I support and I would wholeheartedly endorse and encourage all 434 of my colleagues to support. I am asking you to defeat the previous question so I can add additional language to the Conte motion, not to delete the Conte motion, not to change it, not to modify it, but so simply that I may add, with the support of probably a couple hundred of our colleagues, hopefully 218, language dealing with the question of illegal aliens.

Remember, I am asking you to defeat the previous question. I am not going to change the gentleman's language. The language of my amendment shall include his completely, but it will also include the Shelby amendment, which reads:

None of the funds appropriated or made available by this Act to the Bureau of the Census shall be used to count aliens in the United States in violation of the immigration laws for purposes of subsection (B) of section 141 of title 13 of the United States Code.

I want to defeat the previous question so I can add that to the gentleman's motion to instruct. I want to make everyone understand that very, very clearly.

There have been some questions raised about the constitutionality of our tampering or changing or modifying the census in any way. I would share with my colleagues that as the Constitution and its interpretation continues to evolve, we continue to likewise remind ourselves of the vision and the mastery of those men who wrote it, because within the Constitution itself they empowered us to change the laws relating to the census. Article I, section 2 itself says that the census is to be done "in such a manner as they"—the Congress—not somebody in the executive branch of the Government, not somebody working for the Census Bureau, not somebody at the White House, but as Congress may direct.

Section 5 of the 14th amendment gives Congress the power to enforce by "appropriate legislation" the entire article.

The power of article I by which Congress can regulate commerce with foreign nations and can establish uniform rules of naturalization, these powers give Congress great latitude with respect to dealing with aliens, undocumented aliens and documented aliens. We are empowered by this Constitution to make changes in the constitutionally mandated census.

So I am going to ask my colleagues to defeat the previous question. Give us the opportunity to add this language to our colleague's motion dealing with Noriega.

Remember, defeat the previous question. Give us a vote on this up or down. That is all we are asking for.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and in opposition to any attempts to force the conferees to accept the Senate-passed language, which prohibits the Census Bureau from counting illegal aliens in its 1990 census.

I am, of course, from Texas and everyone knows that Texas stands to gain if illegal aliens are counted in the 1990 census. But that is not the only reason that I come before you today. It is a fiscally unsound policy to force the Census Bureau to change its guidelines a mere 7 months before its census is to begin.

The Census Bureau has already printed 170 million questionnaires and over 1 million training kits. The cost of printing these materials is approximately $44 million. If the bureau is forced to change its guidelines, those questionnaires and training kits will have to be trashed and the bureau will have to replace them. That's $44 million down the drain right here. However, the cost of replacing these materials will well exceed $44 million because of time constraints—after all, the census is scheduled to begin in April. In addition to the costs of replacing the materials, the Census Bureau projects that its process will be delayed if its guidelines are changed at this point. That, in turn, means that office space leases will be extended, computer and equipment leases will be extended, et cetera. The ripple effect of these costs—estimated to exceed $100 million—will have a significantly negative impact on the Census Bureau and its very important task.

The Census Bureau, as members on the subcommittee can attest to, just does not have money to throw away this year. It is operating under a tight budget and does not need the added expense and confusion that will result if its guidelines are forcibly changed at this late date. I urge my colleagues to support Mr. CONTE's motion to instruct and oppose any attempts to fiscally cripple the Census Bureau by forcing it to exclude illegal aliens in its decennial census.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately a number of my colleagues and members of my own committee like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, both of my committees, and there are two gentlemen from Pennsylvania involved in this fight on the other side, are beguiled by the fantasy, and it is a fantasy, that somehow by not counting illegal aliens in the 1990 census their State will not lose one or more congressional seats than it might otherwise lose. I wish I could share this fantasy. As a matter of fact, nobody wishes they could share the fantasy more than me, because my State stands under the present estimates that the census gives us to lose two seats, and everyone is looking at one of the most likely seats to be lost in southeastern Michigan.

Mr. Speaker, I have not stayed here 25 years by not fighting to hold on to my seat. If I thought there was any chance at all that anyone could muddle around with the census and help save a seat for Michigan, I would have been out in front doing it, because my committee has jurisdiction to oversee the census and to tell them how to take it each time they come up.

The truth of the matter is that there is not a constitutional scholar anyplace to be found in any law school in this country who will not tell us that since the passage of the 14th amendment there has been no question at all that what was intended is to count all persons found on April 1 wherever they are found in the United States. They could be a Martian visiting from another planet, and the Constitution contemplates if they are someplace here on April 1 and the census taker can find them, they count them. That is why people in prisons who have lost all of their civil rights are counted. I get a free ride in my district because I have a Federal prison. The Federal prisoners cannot vote, but they get counted on census day.

Do not be fooled. I suggest that the Members stay with the committee on this one, because mischief might be done, particularly if they come from a State that has a large city that is already going to suffer from an undercount. Add this illegal alien business to the already existing problem of undercount and people will hide when the census taker comes.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately many of my colleagues are beguiled by the fantasy that somehow by not counting illegal aliens in the 1990 census their State will not lose one or more congressional seats that it will otherwise lose. I wish I could share this fantasy. I particularly wish I could share it since my State, Michigan, appears likely to lose two seats as a result of the 1990 census, one of which may be mine. However, there is absolutely no evidence that continuing to count all persons including illegal aliens in the census, as we have done for 200 years, will significantly advantage or disadvantage any particular State.

Instead of saving any seats for particular States, the result of an effort not to count illegal aliens will be a severe disruption of the census effort. The census is a monumental undertaking. It is the largest civilian project undertaken by the Federal Government. Census day is next April 1 but the census is already very far down the track. Over 170 million questionnaires have already been printed. Instruction manuals and training guides for enumerators have been prepared. Computer software for tabulating the census is on line. If the census is required not to count illegal aliens, all of the forms and manuals will have to be scrapped and new ones printed. All the computer programs will have to be revised. All this will cost tens of millions of dollars. Talk about waste in Government. To what end will all this be done? To the end of pursuing the political illusion that some States' representation in the House will be strengthened.

Instead of chasing this illusion all Members should be working with their States and local communities to insure the maximum participation in the census. That is the best way to insure that each State receives fair representation and a fair share of the Federal funds that are allocated on the basis of census data.

Finally, I ask my colleagues to consider the practical absurdity of trying not to count a group of people. The census in the United States is conducted on the basis of households. Each household regardless of the number of persons in it is mailed a census questionnaire. Nearly 80 percent of the data in the census is gathered by someone in the household filling out the questionnaire and mailing it in to the Census Bureau. I would ask those who do not want illegal aliens counted how they are going to insure that households do not report the illegal aliens who might be living there on the questionnaires they mail in? How are those in a household even going to know who the illegal aliens in the household are? The households which do not return the questionnaire are visited by enumerators who ask whoever answers the door the questions on the questionnaire. When standing face to face with whoever answers the door, how is the enumerator going to determine if that person is or is not an illegal alien? How is the enumerator going to know whether any of the other persons in that household are illegal aliens? It cannot be done.

When you think about the practicalities, the amendment forbidding the Census Bureau from counting illegal aliens is revealed for what it really is. It is irresponsible political posturing that will have no impact on whether illegal aliens are or are not in fact counted. But what it will do is cripple the census and undermine a fair and accurate count to the detriment of everyone.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice and State, I would ordinarily stand here and ask the Members to vote down the previous question, but although I support the motion of my full committee ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], the motion to instruct, I hope my colleagues in this case will vote down the previous question so that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] can offer the amendment to the motion to instruct and correct a very, very important injustice, in my judgment, to every lawful resident of this Nation, to every constituent of ours, every person entitled to representation in this Chamber.

Let me address a moment the constitutional question that the gentleman earlier raised. Because of the 14th amendment, the Census Bureau is required to count all persons in this country on census day next spring. What do we count? Do we count foreign tourists? No. Do we count ambassadors? No. Do we count all the diplomats in this country? No. Why not? Because they do not have usual residence in this country, and since 1790, that is what the Census Bureau has been guided by.

Who has usual residence in this country? By their very definition, illegal aliens have crashed the barriers and do not have their usual residence in the United States and, therefore, should not be counted for representation in this Chamber, and I would hope we would bear that in mind.

Mr. Speaker, no court has ever ruled, to my knowledge, on this precise question, and I submit to the Members that if the Census Bureau excludes all of those who do not have usual residence in the United States that that would be the fair thing and that would be the correct thing, and it would be the constitutional thing to do.

I submit the Ridge amendment will do just that. I hope that, as we consider the motion that is before us and whether or not to shut off debate so that Ridge can offer his amendment, the Members would at least give him the chance he and his colleagues, give them the chance to have their grievances heard. Let us have an up-or-down vote. This does not do violence to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] to instruct. I support that motion. All of us do, I think. We will not change that.

However, we do want to add to it language agreeing to the Shelby amendment in the Senate that will disallow the count of illegal aliens for the makeup of this body.

Give our legal residents of this Nation our best shot. Defend them. They are the people who sent us here, and I submit should be the ones who sent us here, not the crashers of the gate.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to express the sense of Congress urging President Bush to condemn the actions of Gen. Manuel Noreiga of Panama. The events of last week again point out the lawless nature of President Noreiga and his dictatorship.

Some Members may oppose the motion in an attempt to amend it to forbid the Census Bureau from counting certain individuals. I want to assure those Members that current census procedures to not legitimize those in the country illegally, do not give illegals the right to vote, and do not differ from the way we have counted residents or allocated government services in the past.

We do not need to change the way the Census Bureau has counted the people in this country for the past 200 years. Continuing established census policy will allow the census to be conducted on time and will avoid the costly delay of a last minute change in a two centuries' old procedure.

We should continue to follow the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution for a number of reasons.

First, we need to know where people in this country live. The census helps businesses target consumers and helps government allocate services. Excluding illegals from the census will not prohibit them from receiving Federal aid. It does mean legal residents will be denied some of the funds they deserve.

Second, maintaining current census procedure will avoid the expense of reprinting 170 million questionnaires and retraining thousands of census takers. Changing census procedure at this late date will cost millions of dollars.

Third, I urge my colleagues to support this measure so the census can be conducted on time. Imposing new census regulations will guarantee confusion and postponement of the 1990 census.

Consider the consequences of this proposed policy: reprinting 170 million new census forms; retraining thousands of census takers; and delaying the constitutionally mandated decennial apportionment.

The choice is ours: Mass counting confusion or census stability.

Again, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the gentleman from Massachusetts, express your outrage for the actions of Gen. Manuel Noreiga, and vote for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Conte motion to instruct the conferees and would urge my colleagues to oppose any effort to defeat the previous question which would allow an amendment instructing the conferees to accept Senate language limiting the counting of persons in the 1990 census.

Our country has a longstanding 200-year history of counting all "persons" in the decennial census as required by the Constitution. We have always included undocumented residents in the State population totals used for congressional apportionment. The continuation of this practice will ensure the proper allocation of congressional seats throughout the next decade. Failure to count all "persons" will result in unequal representation in the U.S. House of Representatives. Equal representation in the U.S. House of Representatives is at the very core of our constitutional system.

Last year, in commenting on a bill similar to this amendment, which would eliminate illegal aliens from U.S. Census tabulations in apportioning Representatives in Congress, the U.S. Justice Department took the position that the bill was unconstitutional, and that, if it were passed, the Department would recommend that the President veto the bill. The Justice Department has reiterated this position as recently as 2 weeks ago.

In a letter to Senator JEFF BINGAMAN on September 22, the Assistant Attorney General for Legislation stated:

> In the past, the Department of Justice has taken the position that section two of the fourteenth amendment which provides for "counting the whole number of persons in each State" and the original apportionment and census clauses of article I section two of the Constitution require that inhabitants of States who are illegal aliens be included in the census count. In our review of this issue to date, we have found no basis for reversing this position.

In interpreting the 14th amendment, the Supreme Court has read the word "person" to include illegal aliens. In Plymer v. Dole, 457 U.S. 202, 210 (1982), the Court said,

> Whatever his status under the immigration laws, an alien is surely a "person" in any ordinary sense of that term. Aliens, even aliens whose presence in this country is unlawful, have long been recognized as "persons" guaranteed due process of law by the 5th and 14th amendments.

Adoption of a provision such as the Senate's census amendment, one that is so clearly unconstitutional, will do nothing but disrupt, delay, and confuse preparations for the 1990 decennial census and the 1992 reapportionment of the U.S. House of Representatives. I would urge my colleagues to acknowledge our responsibility to uphold the Constitution and to vote for the previous question.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, as I stated with others on numerous occasions before this body, the current policy of the U.S. Census Bureau that permits a counting of undocumented residents for the purpose of apportioning congressional seats is wrong and should be changed. From all indications, however, the Census Bureau has no intention of changing it and will proceed with the same policy that some Members have said here has been in existence for 200 years unless we in this House force them to change.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleagues who have talked here about the constitutional aspect of this question, I introduced into this body a resolution calling for an amendment to the Constitution about 6 months ago. I welcome those Members who feel that the problem should be addressed but are concerned about constitutional matters to join us in this effort. We have about 39 cosponsors.

If we cannot correct this problem now, we can at least correct it sometime in the future. If it has been going on for 200 years, then we have been wrong for 200 years.

It is not right that people who are in this country illegally be counted for the purpose of apportionment in this body. If they are counted, then some State that does not have these people within its borders will lose representation.

That is wrong. If it has been happening for 200 years, it has been wrong for 200 years. No amount of conversation, speeches, or rhetoric from others who might benefit from it can make it right.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the previous question so that we can have a vote on this. It is difficult to get these matters before the Members of this body if certain leaders do not want us to vote. We are entitled to express ourselves. Vote against the previous question and let us express ourselves on this question.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the motion offered by my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE, and I oppose the motion to defeat this previous question. I commend the gentleman for offering this motion to assist the House efforts in adopting H.R. 2991.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of the Conte motion is straightforward, laudable, and necessary, instructing our House conferees to accept Senate language condemning the actions of Panamanian strongman Manuel Noriega. Despite the controversy surrounding the administration response to last Tuesday's coup attempt, we in the Congress should join together in condemning the illicit trafficking and actions of General Noriega both prior to and in the wake of the attempted overthrow.

The Panamanian experience of last week amply demonstrated the frustration felt among citizens and members of the Panamanian Defense Forces, confirming the old adage that violence begets violence. Having exhausted peaceful solutions to change, the last unfortunate resort may well prove to be violent revolt, such as we witnessed last Tuesday. Regrettably, General Noriega responded to the unsuccessful coup attempt with typical resort to brutality. Let us join in condemning this vicious cycle by renewing our cry for General Noriega to step aside and peacefully resolve his inevitable fall from power.

Mr. RIDGE and Mr. GOODLING seek to defeat the previous question, so that they can amend the Conte motion to instruct the House conferees to accept the Shelby language in an amendment to H.R. 2991. The Shelby amendment excludes illegal aliens from the 1990 census for apportionment purposes. I submit that this amendment is unsound, administratively unworkable, and legally questionable. If the Ridge-Goodling proposal is adopted, it could have disastrous consequences for this body for the next decade.

This amendment would subvert the Census Bureau's efforts to ensure an effective and complete count. It would be totally infeasible to ask the Census Bureau to carry out such an exclusion from the census count. It is not practical or by any means easy to ask census enumerators to determine if a person is legal or not. Public confidence, perception, participation, and confidentiality would be greatly undermined, especially in minority communities where the Bureau has made substantial efforts to expand its outreach and promotional programs.

The inclusion of the Shelby citizenship question only serves to confirm the suspicions and fears of many legal residents regarding the Government intervention into their lives. This could further reduce the number of persons responding from the communities that historically have been undercounted.

Moreover, the Census Bureau has already printed 170 million questionaires and mailing labels, and assembled packets in preparation for the 1990 census. The estimated cost to reprint and reassemble new questionnaires should the Ridge/Goodling amendment prevail would be more than $100 million; finally, the census would be delayed, resulting in litigation which could require a second census at a cost of over $1 billion.

We must also consider that the administration opposes this amendment. Secretaries Mosbacher and Thornburgh have stated that they would recommend that the President veto the Commerce, State, and Justice appropriations bill should it contain this Shelby antialien provision.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the Conte motion, and vote for the previous question, rejecting any attempts to defeat the previous question.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES].

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, the Census Bureau will accomplish a momentous feat on April 1, 1990. This date will mark the 21st census in our Nation's history.

The Constitution requires that the House of Representatives be apportioned based on the "whole number of persons." Citizenship has never been a prerequisite to being counted. This constitutional charge and statuatory require the Census Bureau to count every person, regardless of alienage or citizenship status.

The Shelby amendment, which was adopted by the Senate to the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill seeks to prohibit the Census Bureau from including undocumented residents in the 1990 census count. I oppose this proposal because it is unconstitutional and it would further augment the undercount of Hispanic Americans.

The points I want to make are simple:

This amendment would put all census data in jeopardy and add to the historic undercount already acknowledged in the Hispanic and other minority communities. This undercount is estimated at six times that of the general population; it would elevate the fear factor already present in the Hispanic community and negate the incredible amount of resources being spent to promote a complete and confidential count; it would, in essence, grant the Census Bureau reponsibilities charged to the Immigration and Naturalization Service—turning the agency into an investigative force while allowing enumerators to make decisions regarding legal status—a responsibility that the Census Bureau itself has determined it is not now equipped, capable, or legally qualified to do.

This last point is especially relevant in mixed households where some residents are in legal status and others are not. Take for example that family where the parents qualify for amnesty under IRCA and the children did not meet the residency requirement. This family, clearly, would not have any incentive to volunteer information.

The Census Bureau is investing millions of dollars to promote the count as "safe, easy, and confidential." This amendment would irreparably undercut this effort and result in another undercount in minority communities across the country. Let's not be accused of sending mixed messages to our constituencies. We all want a fair and complete count.

I urge your "aye" vote on both the previous question and the Conte motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

My colleagues, the term "person" is constitutionally imprecise. So for all of those members who have taken the floor of the House of Representatives and said that there is a clearcut definition constitutionally of the term "person" as it applies to the census, that is inaccurate.

There is a considerable body of legal opinion emanating from the Supreme Court that says that illegal aliens are not members of our political community. As legislators we derive our authority to govern from a political community. The inclusion of those individuals whom if they were discovered would be deported or could be deported as members of a political community from whom we derive our authority I think is unwise and a bad policy.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Conte motion to instruct and to oppose the effort of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

It is a difficult thing because I have great respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But I think the importance of this whole matter rests on two things: One, obviously the Conte effort is noble and important because of Noriega and our desire to express our concerns. The issue of the illegals and whether we count them or not is not one of whether you think the illegals ought to be here. There is nobody in this body who does not have a stronger feeling and stronger position on opposing illegal immigrants being in this country than I do. I have always taken that position.

I have opposed legalization. But once they are here, they are here, they are present. We have to have a way of dealing with them in some form or fashion, whether that be reapportionment of our own body or the way we abide by the grant system that apportions and allocates resources to States for their burdens.

My State of Florida does not stand to gain anything in terms of reapportionment from this battle. We are going to have the statisticians say what we are going to have.

I urge my colleagues to support the effort on the previous question and to defeat the Ridge effort.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCCLOSKEY].

Mr. MCCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, last year, when the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings on the counting of illegal aliens for apportionment it became apparent that there was an abysmal lack of any credible authority that the word "person" in the constitutional clause establishing a census means "citizen."

The Department of Justice and legal scholars of all philosophies have stated that it would be clearly unconstitutional to exclude illegal aliens from the census count. Section 2 of the 14th amendment provides for "counting the whole number of persons in each State." Whether we like it or not many illegal aliens do have usual residence in the United States. Obviously, persons means inhabitants, not just taxpayers, voters, or citizens.

In addition, the Census Bureau would have to contend with a logistical nightmare to exclude illegal aliens.

The Commerce Secretary has said:

> Many aliens do not know precisely what their legal status is. Neither the census nor its enumerators in the field have the legal qualifications to assist respondents in answering such a question.

It would be a gross injustice to require census enumerators to become de facto INS agents.

Last year at a field hearing, I requested a constitutional analysis from a witness who opposed counting illegal aliens. He stated he did not have one, but would provide the committee with the analysis when he received it. Well, we are still waiting. We have yet to receive any constitutional arguments supporting his position.

Those who would arbitrarily impede the census-taking process, the smooth functioning of which has always proven efficient, should reconsider their actions. Until such time as those opposed to counting illegal aliens go through the process necessary to amend the Constitution, we should continue to count all persons in the census.

All of us understand the heat and hostility that surround this issue. However, in taking the oath of office we have pledged to uphold the Constitution as it is, not as we would like it to be. Vote "yea" on the previous question.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] has 10½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 11½ minutes remaining; and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge all my colleagues to vote against the previous question on this motion to instruct so that we may further instruct our House conferees to agree with the other body's provision excluding illegal aliens from the census count used for reapportionment.

I urge this because it is simply wrong to apportion congressional seats by counting people who would be deported if our immigration laws were enforced. To do so violates the basic right of equal representation.

In fact, one almost never hears anyone argue that it right to include illegals in the census count for apportioning representation among the States. Instead, those on the other side of this issue argue that it's not feasible, or not constitutional, to exclude them.

Now it seems to me we ought to start out by asking what's right and then figure out how or whether we can do it. And I don't think the vast majority of Americans has any difficulty whatever figuring out what's right here. It's to provide equal representation for lawful residents. And you can't do that if you include illegal aliens because they are unevenly distributed among the States.

Providing equal representation for illegal aliens produces unequal representation for lawful residents, inevitably. So we have to choose. We can provide equal representation for illegal aliens or for lawful residents but not for both. Clearly we should choose to provide it for lawful residents.

Now what about the various excuses as to why we supposedly can't do what's right? We have had expert testimony that the Constitution is no hindrance, since the very concept of an illegal alien did not exist when the 14th amendment was written, and since we have never counted the "whole number of persons" anyway.

And as for feasibility, let's just tell the Census Bureau to do the best job it can. Even if that is imperfect, it will be better than what they are preparing to do now.

All I'm asking is that we do our best to do what is clearly right. Again, I urge all my colleagues to vote against the previous question.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] for an explanation.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I support the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I was quite surprised to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] try to inform us that the Constitution was imprecise when it used the words "persons". We are not talking about the Constitution, we are not talking about the law, we are talking about English. A person is a human being.

The Founding Fathers, we heard somebody expound about before in a great enlightened state, were so enlightened that they did not give the founding mothers the right to vote. But yet they recognized that they were persons and counted them in the census for purposes of representation.

Further, they did not even recognize slaves as human beings. Yet they counted them for purposes of representation, at least three-fifths of them.

What would the gentleman from Pennsylvania do about the Amish who do not participate in the political process?

What would he do about the Jehovah Witnesses? Which minority group would we go after next?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Conte motion to instruct the conferees to agree to Senate language condemning Gen. Manuel Noriega and his brutal regime.

Last Tuesday's attempted coup demonstrated to the world the unrest and dissatisfaction of the Panamanians for their oppressive government. It is distressing, but very predictable, that General Noriega responded to the civil unrest with more violence, brutality, and oppression. I commend my colleagues in the Senate for including this language to the bill and wholeheartedly agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that this body concur with the Senate and call for the resignation of Manuel Noriega.

However, Mr. Speaker, some of our colleagues have urged members to defeat the previous question in order to amend the Conte motion to accept the Senate language to exclude illegal aliens from the census count used for apportionment.

Mr. Speaker, the Ridge Goodling amendment has not been considered by any committee of the House. That such a significant issue that would affect every member of this body, be considered without committee action is beyond my comprehension.

As a former member of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, I am acutely aware of the problems this amendment would create. Dr. John Keane, former Director of the Census Bureau, testified before the subcommittee that the Census Bureau has not found an acceptable method of excluding illegal aliens from the apportionment count. Significant errors would most likely result and the allocation of at least one or more congressional seats would be affected.

Preparation for the 1990 census is well underway. The Bureau has been planning the 1990 census since 1982. Census questionnaires are printed and have been assembled for mailing to the public in March 1990. With census day less than 6 months away, we are attempting now to undermine thousands of hours of work which the Bureau has undertaken to make the 1990 census the most complete and accurate census ever taken.

Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about undercount, and extensive outreach to minorities is planned.

What a chilling effect to ask whether one is illegal or legal, what a chilling effect to have our numerators to become INS agents.

Mr. Speaker, the Ridge-Goodling amendment should be rejected because it is unconstitutional, impractical, and poor administrative policy. It would cost the taxpayers an additional $100 million to reprint census questionnaires, and in all likelihood require a new census, which would cost over $1 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this body should made every effort to assure that the 1990 census provide us with the most complete count possible. The Ridge-Goodling amendment is infeasible and unworkable and I strongly urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the previous question.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Conte motion and in opposition to the activities embraced in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Thousands of documented aliens live in my district in the San Diego County area, in Orange County. Thousands of them in the hooches, in the spider webs, in the brushes, they live there and they are documented and will not be counted under the normal census process.

To not count those who can be reached would literally be devastating to those that have been documented and are here.

INS says about 70 percent of the aliens in my district are now documented. Yet many of them will not be counted.

Can you imagine the nightmare that will be placed on the census takers as they go out and try to determine which ones of those are not documented, which ones are documented, which ones should be counted? It would be an absolute travesty, it would bring about much, much mischief.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend a strong vote against the effort of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], who has been working with me on this issue for the last year and a half.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote down the previous question so we may amend the motion to instruct the conferees.

For the first time, I would like to say, let Members go and have the court decide, once and for all, what is legal and what is illegal. Let them make a decision. This is the only way Members can give them that opportunity. Let them make a decision based on the merits. They have never considered the case other than that it is procedurally incorrect, and that is why they have not heard the case. Therefore, let Members give them that chance once and for all.

Second, I hear people say that they know exactly what our forefathers meant when they said "persons." Members are doing a darn sight better than they have ever done down in the Census Bureau because, let me tell Members who they called "persons" one time and did not call "persons" the next time.

In 1940 when we had a tremendous influx into this country of people working for embassies, they decided they were not persons. No matter where they resided in the United States, they were not persons. They made that decision on their own. They did not ask the country. In 1950 they decided "OK, you are a person." If you work in the embassy and you live there, we will not count that person, but if that is a person who does not live on the embassy grounds, but that person lives some other place.

Do not tell this Member that anyone knows precisely what they mean when they talk about persons 200 years ago. The Census Bureau has no idea.

Then, like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], I want equal representation. That is exactly what I want. I want equal representation for American citizens, because if he is representing 518,000 people and 100,000 of those happen to be illegal aliens, I am representing 518,000 people who are American citizens. That is not equal representation for my people at all, and that is all I ask.

Then we hear the question, "at this late date, at this late date." Ten years ago I was told, "at this late date." Twenty years ago, my father in this institution was told, "at this late date." Whenever is the right date and the right time to do something about it?

Let the court finally make a decision. Give Members an opportunity to put this before the court. Then we will know, once and for all, where we stand.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, although a great deal of hand-wringing and finger pointing is continuing this week in the wake of the failed coup attempt against General Noriega, we should not overlook one key factor: Getting rid of Noriega remains a major priority for the United States.

In fact that the ouster of Noriega from power in Panama appeared to be so close only heightens our desire to see him gone. If anything is to be learned as we review the events of last week and the actions of those involved it is the importance of keeping our attention on the primary objective: Getting Noriega out of power.

Based on comments of many in the Congress, I get the impression that a more active role by the United States should be considered in opposition to Noriega. I have believed from the beginning that that was desirable to protect our interests in the Panama Canal and our American military forces stationed on our strategic military bases in Panama.

The wording of the language adopted by the Senate—even before last week's events—make it clear that the removal of Noriega from power must be one of our top priorities in this hemisphere. That is true not only for our own security interests in Panama but also for our concern about democracy in Panama and for our efforts to remove Noriega from his drug-trafficking operations.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion to instruct conferees and the previous question on this vital issue.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is unworkable. It would require the Census Bureau to make determinations as to whether a respondent is in the country in violation of immigration law—a determination the Census Bureau is neither equipped nor authorized to make. The determination of legal residency is a complex process that requires special expertise and careful adjudication.

The Secretary of Commerce and Attorney General will recommend a veto of the entire appropriations bill if it contains language to exclude undocumented aliens from the census.

I challenge the supporters of the amendment to explain how a census enumerator would list the status of a person without resorting to the most presumptuous, inaccurate, and ultimately bigoted assumptions about our national identity. Is an accent, or skin color, or dress indicative of one's legal status? Under such prejudice because they lack the expertise to judge legal status.

The process of identifying and then excluding respondents on the basis of legal status would severely damage the execution and accuracy of the census. The inaccuracies would be most pronounced in urban and minority communities.

An inaccurate and flawed census would have an adverse affect on Federal funding allocation for all communities for years to come.

Implementation of this measure would be extremely expensive. Census questionnaires would have to be reprinted at a cost estimated to be over $30 million. Ironically, a census taken under these provisions would be inaccurate, unfeasible, yield less information, and ultimately, more expensive.

According to the Census Bureau there is no acceptable method of excluding the undocumented from the census count and any effort to do so would seriously flaw the census figures. Excluding the undocumented from the census would compel the Bureau to adopt untested techniques to determine every persons citizenship and immigration status.

Any attempt to count, and then exclude, undocumented residents from certain census counts will jeopardize the accuracy of the entire census in every community in the United States.

The Secretary of Commerce says:

. . . excluding illegal aliens would be entirely infeasible and would considerably undermine critical efforts being undertaken by the [Census] Bureau to assure an effective and complete count in 1990.

The Secretary of Commerce and the Attorney General will recommend a veto of the entire appropriations bill if it contains language to exclude illegal aliens from the census.

Federal fund allocation to every community will be adversely affected because large numbers of people, even those whose presence here is lawful, will be afraid of participating in the census.

Only a small portion of the undocumented population in the United States is actually counted in the census because the Census Bureau makes no special effort to include them and because many undocumented persons simply do not want to be counted.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS].

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the effort to defeat the previous question and allow a vote on the Ridge-Goodling motion to instruct conferees. Whether your state is affected or unaffected, Illegal aliens should not be counted to determine representation in the House of Representatives.

The opponents of this motion point to section 2 of the 14th amendment saying that illegal aliens are persons, and thus must be counted. But the Census Bureau does not count everyone who happens to be in the country on April 1. Foreign diplomats and foreign tourists are not counted, even though they are persons, and they are in the country legally. But people who cross the border in violation of our laws are counted. This is not the Constitution according to James Madison, but rather Lewis Carroll. Only the Mad Hatter could have dreamed up such a policy.

The passage of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 removes any justification for counting illegal aliens for congressional apportionment. Congress made a determination as to who would be eligible for legalization under the act. The deadline for applying for this legalization has passed. The issue should be considered settled. A person who has not applied for legalization should not be counted for apportionment.

The opponents of this motion prefer to use the euphemism, "undocumented alien." By doing so, they show that they miss the entire point of the controversy. These people have not lost their identification papers, they are in the country illegally. If the census includes illegal aliens, representation in Congress and the electoral vote for President will be determined by people who are not legal residents, who can never become legal residents, who are violating the law just by being here, and who would be deported if the government could catch up with them. Regardless of questions of cost and difficulties, the fabric of social contract that binds the government to the people is torn when the makeup of the government is determined by people who came to the country in direct violation of the law.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution guarantees these people due process, it does not give them congressional representation. I urge the House to defeat the previous question and support the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The time remaining for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] is 3½ minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 8 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has 4½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has the right to close debate.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN].

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the previous question, and in opposition to legislation that would exclude undocumented residents from the 1990 census count. I oppose this proposal because it is unconstitutional and would increase the undercount of Hispanic Americans. In my State, this legislation will guarantee an undercount of Haitian, Nicaraguan, and Cuban Americans.

The administration has been very clear on this issue. The Justice Department has told us that is unconstitutional, and the Secretary of Commerce has indicated he would recommend a veto of this legislation because it is unworkable. It is unworkable because:

First, the Census Bureau cannot act as a surrogate Immigration Service. Census enumerators are neither qualified nor capable of interpreting immigration law and passing judgment on every person's citizenship and immigration status. Only a month ago, the INS settled a lawsuit for $110,000 with a young Hispanic man that it had wrongly deported. Now if INS doesn't even know who's deportable, how can we expect the Census Bureau to make that judgment?

Second, attempts to identify undocumented residents would frighten away citizens and immigrants alike from being counted, and the Census Bureau would lose any credibility about maintaining confidentiality. This will significantly decrease the accuracy of the census.

Third, after the census, when State and local elected officials begin threatening lawsuits because their numbers don't add up, the Census Bureau won't be able to tell us if minority populations were again undercounted, or if undocumented and legal residents were simply scared off.

Excluding anyone from the census count is bad public policy. It will take away the hope that the census will one day correct the historical undercount of Hispanic Americans and other population groups.

We should not put our President in the position of vetoing an appropriation for three Cabinet departments simply because we insist on ignoring the Constitution and the practical matters involved in this case.

I strongly urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the previous question and to support the Conte motion. I also urge the conferees on H.R. 2991 to report back to this body a conference report free of this unconstitutional and unworkable amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Conte mission to instruct. The language on Panama and its dictator, Noriega, is clear and should be supported. But let's be honest in this debate. We are not here to debate United States policy toward Panama, but whether or not the census should count undocumented aliens.

The arguments heard have made the issues very clear: The Shelby amendment which Mr. RIDGE proposes to adopt, is flatly unconstitutional. If that is not a convincing argument alone, add to it that the proposal is totally unworkable and is inappropriate for inclusion in an appropriation bill.

Still, many Members are swayed by the patrictic appeals that have been forwarded. The idea that we should exclude undocumented persons from the census for purposes of apportionment is a deceptively appealing argument. After all, why should noncitizens be counted when we are determining the number of representatives for each State?

Appealing, this is, until you start to think about the ramifications of the proposal—the real constitutional question and discrimination questions it raises—how you would actually make such a provision work.

The constitutional arguments have already been discussed and addressed. Fair versus Klutznick, a 1980 Federal district court decision, left little doubt about how that court felt. But, I concede this issue has not been before the Supreme Court.

Rather than dwell on constitutional issues, let us consider how this would actually work.

First, you already have more than 160 million census forms printed. Are you going to throw them out? Will you add a supplemental form to it?

What about the millions of instruction packets for the census takers? Will those have to be redone? The Census Bureau has already said this provision, if added to the bill, would be fatal to the 1990 census. It just plain couldn't be done next year, and redistricting couldn't take place in 1992.

Speaking of census takers, consider that all of them are temporary employees, with training to do one very specific task: count people, not act as INS agents.

Mr. Speaker, let me refresh my colleagues memories on a not-unrelated debate in this body. Simpson-Rodino. Remember it? Remember the anguish we went through when that legislation was debated. Now, in the blink of an eye it is proposed to turn the census taker into a walking court of law to determine the legal status of every man, woman, and child in America.

This is a daunting task—even the INS would stumble. But the census faces even a greater obstacle; 90 percent of the census is taken by mail. The forms go out and return by mail. What kind of response are we going to get from families where there might be a relative of doubtful status, or even a new refugee or a new citizen that somehow misperceives the legality of his or her status?

So you say: fine. You don't want to count those undocumented aliens, anyhow. So, they just won't get counted. But, no Shelby-Ridge proposes that indeed we do count them. After all, we need to know who they are for purposes of allocating Federal dollars. We're just not counting them for apportionment purposes. So, how do we assure they get counted, then exclude them for one purpose and only for one purpose?

That leads us to another curious anomaly of Shelby-Ridge. It says we won't count undocumented persons for purposes of apportionment only. So we take them out when the numbers are delivered to the President in December 1990. That way, we don't include them in determining which States gain or lose representatives. But when the numbers are delivered to the State on April 1, 1991, they are included. So, State legislatures have to consider the undocumented alien when they draw new congressional district lines.

Is that fair? Or, more to the point, does that make any sense?

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude: it is not those who oppose Shelby-Ridge who want to do anything different in the 1990 census. We say: do the census just as you have always done. Count people. Get the most accurate count you can. That is the way it has been since 1970.

It is the proponents of Shelby-Ridge that want to change the census. They want to make the census bureau into a a law enforcement bureau—investigator, judge and jury.

Don't let this happen. Don't destroy the census. Vote yes on the previous question.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, today, by adopting the previous question, we are doing what we all too often do in this House. We are shutting off debate and preventing a very legitimate amendment from being offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. When our Constitution was framed, there were no legal aliens, and I think it is now up to us here in the Congress to decide by a majority vote whether or not we should count illegal aliens in the census or whether we should not, and by attempting to shut off the presenting of that amendment by the gentleman, I think it is another disgrace in this body.

Mr. Speaker, we should face the issue. We should decide which way it should go. I favor the gentleman's amendment because I believe that, had the framers of the Constitution intended to count illegal aliens, they would have had to be present at the time. Their intent was that they would count every person who was legally a resident of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, that was their intent, and that should be our intent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at this argument about persons. As my colleagues know, 202 years ago, before the adoption of the Constitution, there were no persons in this country under the definition that I hear today because we were all illegal aliens under Indian law.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the previous question. I think the constitutional argument is clear in terms of persons. If that is not enough, why are we going to deal with adjustment formulas? First it is for this, and then it is for that. We are supposed to be counting people. Third, in terms of reapportionment there is no conclusive evidence that one seat would be shifted. People do not understand the relatively complex formula for allocating seats.

Mr. Speaker, just because we subtract a seat from one State does not mean another State gains it. There are adjustments in overall population.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, who do we represent? Just the registered voters who vote for us? Or just registered voters? Or just those people who could be registered? Or just citizens? The Bill of Rights goes to all people, and I do not know about my colleagues, but I represent everyone in my district, and I want everyone in my district to be counted.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to some of the issues that have been raised during this thoughtful and provocative debate. We are pretty unsure as to who loses seats, but demographers tell us it is pretty clear who gains seats, and that is the States of California and Texas. It is a zero-sum gain. There will be Members who lose their seats because illegal aliens are counted, so if my colleagues are not interested in principle, they might think about it in terms of just self-interest.

Let me share some things with my colleagues. I understand the opinions of the Secretary of Commerce, the Justice Department, the Census Bureau, legal scholars, whatever. They are all entitled to their opinions. But none of them are constitutionally empowered to do anything about the census.

Again article I, section 2, says that we, as Members of Congress, are entitled to set the rules and regulations dealing with the census, and we are the only ones empowered to do anything about the census, and I am encouraging all of my colleagues to defeat the previous question so that we can offer the amendment to let the House speak.

I told one of my friends and colleagues walking over that maybe if I just said, "If you give RIDGE a vote, he'll go away on this issue for 8 or 9 years," and if that would motivate my colleagues, just give me the vote, and I promise I will not bring it up again until I have another opportunity depending on what happens.

Mr. Speaker, we are empowered. We, as legislators, conduct and control that census. Article I, section 2, gives it to us. I do not think there is any constitutional dispute about this.

Let me tell my colleagues that the Supreme Court has spoken on this issue indirectly. The exclusion of aliens from governmental process is not a deficiency in the democratic system, but a necessary consequence of the community's process of self-definition. By definition aliens are outside our political community. They are here without the consent of the Government. Their presence in and of itself is in violation of laws that we, as Members of Congress, have established and that the Department of Justice, and the Census Bureau and the Department of Commerce should be enforcing.

We have the opportunity to change this. We are empowered to do so. I encourage my colleagues to vote against the previous question so we can offer the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished subcommittee chairman, Mr. SMITH, for yielding to me, and rise in strong support of the Conte motion. The instruction is straightforward, clearly meritorious, and deserves unqualified support in the House.

Unfortunately, however, some of our colleagues are urging us to vote against the Conte motion so they might instruct conferees to call upon the Census Bureau for the first time to take aggressive action to exclude U.S. residents from the census counts used for the purpose of apportionment.

Mr. Speaker, we have visited the issue before but we have not come to grips with exactly what is at stake here. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, I am compelled to speak in strong opposition to the Ridge-Goodling amendment.

This debate has been centered, around the possibility that a few States might somehow be deprived of seats in Congress. That focus, however, is unequivocally wrong.

The real question is whether, if we take this ill-advised step, we will harm directly the accuracy of the entire census and undermine the Bureau's efforts to collect accurate data in every single community in this country.

That risk is great. We're not counting pebbles on the shore. This is a dynamic human process.

There are millions of people in the United States who do not want to participate in the census. They believe the census process is too intrusive; or that it won't be confidential and somehow will be used against them. They just don't see the benefits of participating in the census.

As abstract as that process may be, however, its goal is simple. We are just trying to count everybody, just as we have for 200 years.

Any effort to inject another factor into the census process, a factor that demands strict confidentiality, a factor that involves the most intricate legal determinations that part-time census takers clearly are not qualified to make, most certainly will drive away a great many people.

The simple fact is this is not NASA. These are not rocket scientists. They are not even the INS. They are a half-million part-time folks willing to do hard work for low pay in counting our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, it will drive away a great many people whose presence in this country is perfectly legal.

I represent a district in Ohio. Ohio is one of the States my colleagues have argued might somehow be harmed by the inclusion of illegal aliens in this apportionment. They mention 10 other States that might be hurt. But the fact of the matter is that the real damage is that it will make it impossible for the first time in living memory to execute a timely and accurate census. It may cost tens or hundreds of millions of additional dollars, perhaps a billion dollars more, to execute; that at the same time there is simply no evidence to support the claim that all or any of the States that have been listed risk losing any representation in Congress because the Census Bureau does what we would have them do today.

Last month the expert demographer for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] in his lawsuit testified that at the most 1 to 2 million illegals might actually wind up in the count. He stated that this estimate probably was "on the high side." And the CRS has concluded that even if 1 million were counted and then excluded from the census apportionment counts, that no congressional seats would be affected. If there were 2 million, twice as many as most think are likely, no more than one congressional seat in the entire country would be affected.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, no one can say where that seat might be, but what I can tell you with a great deal of confidence and certainty is what the Census Bureau is trying to tell you, what the Secretary of Commerce is trying to tell you, and now what OMB and the administration in the last few minutes have been trying to tell you. That is that if we divert from our 200-year course of counting all persons who actually reside in the United States, then the ability to carry out the census in a timely and efficient manner will be severely impaired, and the accuracy of all data will be irreversibly jeopardized. The resulting distortion will affect redistricting everywhere in the country and the allocation of Federal funds to every community in this Nation for the next 10 years.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me return to the concern of many Members. I realize it is possible, though unlikely, that one congressional seat might be affected today. Some do not want to risk the possibility that their own district might be harmed. To them I say simply and honestly that by supporting the Ridge-Goodling amendment your district and every other district in the country most certainly will be harmed because the ability to take an accurate census will be destroyed everywhere. By opposing it, you will likely harm no one at all.

I urge you to consider whether you can accept the very real possibility that all census data will be inaccurate and distorted if we try to determine every respondent's legal status during the census.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a strong and confident "yes" vote on the previous question.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].I90[H11OC9-1046]{H6962}FISH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, while at first blush, the idea of not counting illegal aliens in the census may seem logical, there are some fundamental legal and policy reasons why such a restriction is not a good idea.

First and foremost, it is highly likely that such a limitation is unconstitutional. Section 2 of the 14th amendment to the Constitution reads in part: "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State * * *." This language had led the Department of Justice to take the position that the census cannot make a distinction between inhabitants who are legally present in the United States and those who are not. Their legal opinion was most recently reiterated in a September 22, 1989, letter to Senator JEFF BINGAMAN in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Information and Regulation.

Second, this idea is also strongly opposed by the U.S. Department of Commerce which, of course, contains the Census Bureau. Specifically, the Census Bureau is extremely concerned that attempts to exclude undocumented aliens could seriously jeopardize and undermine the accuracy of the census itself. Persons who are illegally present in the United States may either seek to avoid the census altogether, or could deliberately misreport themselves as legal residents in the census. If large numbers of undocumented aliens avoid the census, then the 1990 census count will be inaccurate—harming both States and cities in terms of their eligibility for many Federal programs. The Commerce Department is also concerned about the public perception of the confidentiality of census data, and they feel that this provision may undermine that confidentiality principle. From its very beginnings, the census has not made a distinction based upon a person's citizenship, but rather has sought to count all persons present in the United States.

While I understand the concerns raised by my friends and colleagues from Pennsylvania, it is my view that, both for sound constitutional and good public policy reasons, the Shelby amendment should not remain in the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill—H.R. 2991—for fiscal year 1990.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to reclaim 1 minute of my time to remind the House what my motion says.

My motion instructs the conferees to agree to a Senate amendment calling for the ouster of Manuel Noriega. It also endorses the planned international drug summit and U.S. participation in it.

This is a timely motion. It is clean and clear. It puts the House on record in regard to recent events in Panama. It calls for stronger U.S. leadership on the issue of Noriega.

I assure the Members that there is nothing in my motion that is unconstitutional. There is nothing in it that pits State against State, or Member against Member. As far as I know there is no pro-Noriega lobby.

Noriega publicly insults our Nation on a regular basis. He is a barbarian with his own people. He deserves to be removed from power, at the very least.

Cast your clear and unequivocal vote against this despot.

Vote for the previous question, and for the Conte motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my support and urge my colleagues to support the Ridge-Goodling motion to instruct the conferees to accept the Shelby amendment to the Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990.

The main purpose of this amendment is to instruct the Census Bureau to remove from its count any resident in the United States who does not legally and permanently reside here, for purposes of reapportionment.

Our Nation now faces a situation where some States in our country have more voting power than others because of the number of illegal aliens estimated to live in those States. If we allow the Census Bureau to continue estimating the illegal alien count in the upcoming census, we will continue to undercut the concept of "one man, one vote," and in effect water down the voting power of those legally enfranchised to participate in our democratic process. Granted it is not the fault of the State benefiting from the inclusion of illegal aliens in the count that this problem exists. However, the sad fact remains that many of the folks that have heretofore been included in the decennial census count are in this country illegally. To base the operation of our country's Government and legal system on a count that is tainted by the inclusion of such "illegals," seems to me to be a glaring contradiction.

I again urge my colleagues to support the Ridge-Goodling motion so that we may amend Mr. CONTE's motion to instruct the conferees on H.R. 2991 to call on the conferees to agree to this amendment adopted by the Senate on September 29.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the counting of illegal aliens is not what the Founding Fathers had in mind when they drafted the Constitution. Nonetheless, today we have a situation where citizens of the United States who deserve more representation are denied it because we count illegal aliens. Because of this practice, States like California which have large numbers of illegal aliens get more seats in the House—at the expense of States without those populations. I don't think that's fair.

We, as a body, should not allow certain States to gain seats in the Congress because of people who are in this Nation against our laws. Every citizen of the United States is entitled to equal and fair representation in Washington. The principle of "one man, one vote" is part of the foundation on which our Nation is built, but it should not be extended to people who are here in violation of our law. To use population figures that include these people hurts legal citizens and the practice should be stopped.

In 1980, both Georgia and Indiana lost a congressional seat because other States had enough illegal aliens to raise their population figures. This same situation will exist in 1990, but on a larger scale. I strongly urge my colleagues to do the right thing and vote in favor of the Ridge amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, the Ridge-Goodling amendment would, in effect, instruct the Census Bureau to violate the U.S. Constitution. The 14th amendment to the Constitution states that "representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state * * *" The Supreme Court has ruled that undocumented aliens are "persons" under the due process and equal protection clauses, and the history of the 14th amendment clearly indicates that all individuals who reside in the United States are "persons" within the meaning of the Constitution.

In a letter to Senator BINGAMAN, dated September 22, 1989, Assistant Attorney General Crawford stated:

> In the past, the Department of Justice has taken the position that section two of the Fourteenth Amendment which provides for "counting the whole number of persons in each State" and the original Apportionment and Census Clauses of Article I, Section 2 of the Constitution require that inhabitants of States who are illegal aliens be included in the census count. In our review of this issue to date, we have found no basis for reversing this position.

Undocumented aliens are people; every person counts and should be counted.

The census should not be confused with the right to vote. While this right belongs only to citizens of the United States, all individuals have voices that must be heard. To deny these people representation—people who often embody the most powerless elements of our society—is to deny them justice.

I believe that the practical effect of this amendment would be to drive many illegal aliens underground. It would exacerbate undercounting in minority and ethnic communities—a situation which the 1990 census was designed to avoid. It would raise the specter of census enumerators acting as immigration agents and cause unnecessary turmoil in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, the Ridge-Goodling amendment is both unconstitutional and unworkable. It should be opposed.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to take up the previous question of Representative CONTE's motion to instruct the conferees on the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations measure before us today. I urge my colleagues to oppose the previous question so that Representative RIDGE may offer a motion to instruct the conferees to accept an amendment authored by Senator SHELBY which would prohibit the Census Bureau from spending any funds to count undocumented aliens in the upcoming census for reapportionment purposes.

The inclusion of illegal aliens in the Federal census count that is used to apportion the seats in the House of Representatives among the States is of concern to Kansans, because of the likelihood that we will lose one of our five House seats following the 1990 census. This is a zero sum game. In 1992, 435 men and women will be elected to serve in the House of Representatives. Will they be elected to represent U.S. citizens in Kansas, or will they be elected to represent undocumented aliens living in other parts of this country?

I have been outspoken regarding the blatant unfairness of counting illegal aliens in the census for reappointment purposes. As a result of the inclusion of illegal aliens in the 1980 census, New York and California gained House seats which otherwise would have gone to Georgia and Indiana. I have reviewed data based upon the projected results of the 1990 census which indicate that if illegal aliens are not included in the census count, Kansas will not lose a House seat.

Supporters of the inclusion of illegal aliens in the census count claim that the Constitution requires that all "persons" in the United States be counted for reapportionment purposes. I disagree with this interpretation of our Constitution because, at the time the Constitution was ratified, there was no such thing as an "illegal alien": Our borders were open and all immigrants were welcome. Immigration into the United States was first restricted in 1875. Surely we have the right to bar inclusion of individuals who are in this country illegally when we calculate how the elected representatives of American citizens are to be apportioned among the States. I argued for the exclusion of illegal aliens from the reapportionment count in an article I recently authored for the winter 1988 issue of the Washburn Law Journal: "The Right to Govern Is Reserved to Citizens: Counting Undocumented Aliens in the Federal Census for Reapportionment Purposes."

I also joined with 40 other Members of Congress and the States of Kansas, Alabama, and Pennsylvania in a lawsuit against the Secretary of Commerce—who supervises the Census Bureau—which sought to prevent the counting of illegal aliens for reapportionment purposes. Unfortunately, the court dismissed the lawsuit on procedural grounds, without reponding to the merits of our case.

This House has the opportunity today to take a firm position in support of the proposition that the right to govern in our democracy is reserved to American citizens. House seats should not be apportioned on the basis of how many people are residing illegally in certain parts of the country. I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing the motion to take up the previous question.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Conte motion to instruct and urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, for 200 years the Census Bureau has been charged with the massive task of counting all of the persons residing in this country. To serve the Nation well, Congress, the executive branch, and thousands of State and municipal jurisdictions are dependent on reliable and accurate census data. Compiling this information is not an easy job, however.

Undercount problems, particularly in our country's minority communities, have been extensive. To its credit, the Census Bureau has undertaken an unprecedented outreach program to educate the public about the census. They are attempting to reduce the level of suspicion and fear which census enumerators encounter in conducting the decennial census, and I applaud their efforts.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, all of these efforts will be for naught if the Shelby amendment is enacted into law. For the first time in 200 years, the Census Bureau would be required to exclude undocumented aliens from the count. This misguided measure would have the effect of turning census enumerators into agents of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

If we think we have seen fear and suspicion in minority communities in the past, the past will seem like a picnic compared to what we will see if the Shelby amendment is adopted.

In preparation for census day on April 1, the Census Bureau has begun printing questionnaires. They have already printed 170 million of them. The Shelby amendment would turn those questionnaires into a $30 million pile of garbage. The Census Bureau would have to start over with a new form, and the Bureau considers it highly unlikely that the census could be performed on time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Constitution clearly states that the census shall be of the whole number of persons in the United States. Debates during the Constitutional Convention of 1789 as well those within Congress regarding the 14th amendment to the Constitution made it crystal clear that the distinction between citizens and noncitizens and between legal and illegal aliens was understood and considered.

There is no question that this same distinction was deliberately left out of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, the integrity of the census in every single congressional district in this country is at stake. The Constitution wisely demands that the Census Bureau make a full count of the inhabitants of the United States. The Shelby amendment would render that task impossible. I urge my colleagues to support the Conte motion to instruct and vote "ayes" on the previous question.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the Ridge motion to instruct, which this body is considering today in conjunction with the Commerce-State-Justice appropriations bill.

Our colleagues from Pennsylvania would have us exclude undocumented residents from the apportionment base beginning in the 1990 census. The most unjust effect of this amendment would be its effect excluding many recent immigrants who were beneficiaries of the 1986 immigration reform and control from the apportionment base. Many individuals who qualified for temporary resident alien status are now in the process of securing permanent status, and denying them representation in Congress would not only be unconstitutional, but would exclude them from full participation in our democracy. These individuals fully believe in our system of government and now are now in the process of seeking permanent status as a prelude to applying for naturalization. Temporary residents, refugees, and political asylees would also be excluded from the apportionment base.

A strict interpretation of the applicable provision of the U.S. Constitution indicates the adoption of the proposed amendment violates the spirit of that document and would be unconstitutional. The current policy of counting undocumented residents is strongly rooted in the provisions of the 14th amendment, which states that representatives are elected to represent the people, not the citizens, of the States. The specific language states the House of Representatives is to be reapportioned among the States based on the "whole number of persons." Unlike other parts of the Constitution which make clear distinction between rights granted to citizens and noncitizens, this provision does not.

It is clear that this proposal is put forth by our colleagues from Pennsylvania exclusively in their self-interest. Estimates of where the majority of undocumented individuals presently reside indicate they mostly live in the States of California, Texas, Florida, and New York. Speculation of how redistricting plans may be drafted after the 1990 census abounds, and surely our colleagues from Pennsylvania are aware of their State's congressional representation is expected to diminish. Aside from the fact that my State of Texas clearly has an interest in the inclusion of undocumented residents in the apportionment base, I strongly believe that these individuals deserve representation in Congress out of a sense of fairness.

Proponents of this amendment have also introduced free-standing legislation in this body similar to this amendment. The committees with jurisdiction re expected to consider such legislation, and a hearing on one such bill took place this morning. I believe such proposals should be considered on their own merit, not as part of an approprations vehicle, as is being attempted today.

One of the arguments used in favor of excluding such individuals from the apportionment base is that they do not have the right and thus should not be entitled to representation. Yet there are other individuals who do not enjoy such a right who are still included in the apportionment base. The most obvious example of this is the status of children. Furthermore, there are other individuals who are eligible to vote but do not exercise this right. Would our colleagues further propose that only voting citizens be included in the apportionment numbers?

Another significant effect of this amendment is that it would result in even a larger undercount of minority residents in our country, which at present is estimated at about 6 percent, as opposed to the 1-percent undercount believed to exist for the general U.S. population. In addition, the amendment's provisions could be unworkable for the Census Bureau in carrying out. The methodology for its implementation simply does not exist at present. Excluding undocumented residents from the census would require the use of untested techniques to determine each person's citizenship and immigration status. The Census Bureau is not an enforcement agency and should be put in a position of evaluating immigration documents in the census court.

I intend to oppose the motion should a vote arise on it and urge my colleagues who swore to uphold the Constitution to abide by the spirit of the law and strictly adhere to its provisions.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 232, nays 184, not voting 16, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Annunzio for, with Mr. Nielson of Utah against.

Messrs. WELDON, SPENCE, CAMPBELL of Colorado, VOLKMER, and ROSE changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So, the previous question was ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 399, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 32, as follows:

□ 1923

Mr. SAVAGE changed his vote from "yea" to "present."

So the motion to instruct was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SMITH of Iowa, ALEXANDER, EARLY, DWYER of New Jersey, CARR, MOLLOHAN, WHITTEN, ROGERS, REGULA, KOLBE, and CONTE.

Without objection, the Chair reserves the right to appoint additional conferees.

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 3015, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION, 1990

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees:

Solely for consideration of Senate amendments numbered 1 through 135 and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. LEHMAN of Florida, GRAY, CARR, DURBIN, MRAZEK, SABO, WHITTEN, COUGHLIN, CONTE, WOLF, and DELAY.

As additional conferees solely for consideration of Senate amendments numbered 136 through 144 and modifications committed to conference: Messrs. WHITTEN, NATCHER, SMITH of Iowa, YATES, OBEY, ROYBAL, BEVILL MURTHA, TRAXLER, LEHMAN of Florida DIXON, FAZIO, HEFNER, CONTE MCDADE, COUGHLIN, REGULA, EDWARDS of Oklahoma, GREEN, ROGERS, and SKEEN.

Without objection, the Chair reserves the right to appoint additional conferees.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, due to engagements in the South Bronx, I was unable to be present to record my votes on Wednesday, October 11. If I had been present, I would have voted in favor of the conference report on H.R. 2990, the labor-HHS-education appropriations for fiscal year 1990. I also would have voted "yes" on the amendment to H.R. 3026, D.C. appropriations for fiscal year 1990, regarding Federal funding of abortions in cases of rape and incest, and for final passage of the bill. I also would have voted "yes" on Senate amendment 22 to the D.C. appropriations bill, regarding the use of Federal funds with respect to religious liberties.

Further, I would have voted in favor of the motion to instruct the conferees on H.R. 3015, Department of Transportation and related agencies appropriations, to approve higher levels of funding for the Coast Guard to fight the war on drugs. I supported Mr. CONTE's motion to instruct the conferees on the Justice, State and Judiciary Committee encouraging a "drug summit" to combat Manuel Noriega, and would have voted against the Ridge amendment excluding illegal aliens from the 1990 census, had he had the opportunity to present such a motion.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBER OF THE FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1, Public Law 94-371, as amended, the Chair appoints on the part of the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY] to the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission to fill the existing vacancy thereon.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE ROBERT H. MICHEL, REPUBLICAN LEADER

The Speaker laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 10, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 6160, Public Law 100-690, I hereby appoint the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] to fill an existing vacancy on the National Advisory Commission on Law Enforcement.

Sincerely,

BOB MICHEL,
Republican Leader.

CONGRATULATING HIS HOLINESS THE XIV DALAI LAMA OF TIBET FOR BEING AWARDED THE 1989 NOBEL PEACE PRIZE.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 75), to congratulate His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet for being awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAGGERS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to recognize the two chief sponsors of this resolution, and I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE].

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, it is a great pleasure for me to be a part of this resolution. I want to thank the members of the committee for allowing this commemorative to be brought to the House today.

Recent events in Tibet and China have drawn the eyes of the world to the tragic circumstances under which the Tibetan and Chinese people suffer. Many firsthand accounts from tourists, human rights advocates and journalists confirm that China continues to apply oppressive measures against the Tibetans that are reminiscent of the infamous "Cultural Revolution." Certainly, the world takes no pleasure in witnessing, and being remined of, the inhumane and terrifying treatment that some people, or groups of people, mete out to follow human beings. Unfortunately, mankind has not yet determined how to free itself of the recurrence of such tragedies as the Holocaust, the Killing Fields of Cambodia and the Cultural Revolution.

Perhaps one bright spot, in this otherwise abysmal situation, is that the world has become intimately acquainted with the character and leadership of His Holiness the Dalai Lama and the courage of the Tibetan people. Even under the most dire circumstances, the Tibetan people, as a whole, continue to heed the Dalai Lama's call to express their desire for independence from Chinese rule and to confront their oppressors in a peaceful manner. The Dalai Lama recently summed up his philosophy in a recent interview with a Time correspondent by saying, "As people who practice Mahayana Buddhist teaching, [Tibetans] pray every day to develop some kind of unlimited altruism. So there is not point in developing hatred for the Chinese. Rather, we should develop respect for them and love and compassion." In this spirit, the Dalai Lama has formally made proposals to the Chinese Government for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the ongong crisis in Tibet. Although the Chinese have rebuffed the Dalai Lama's offers to begin earnest negotiations of the future status of Tibet and have condemned international expressions of concern for the tragic situation in Tibet, the Dalai Lama and his representatives continue to pursue a peaceful resolution to the growing conflict in Tibet. Indeed, such leadership is rare today and can easily be placed in the same mold that made such leaders as Martin L. King, Jr. and Mohandas K. Ghandi.

I have had the great pleasure of knowing the Dalai Lama for a number of years, and I can personally attest to the fact that, in all my associations with him, whether in public or in private, he never fails to express his sincere concerns for the need of all human beings to act with "universal responsibility" and compassion toward one another. Although the Dalai Lama serves in many capacities, from the leader of the Tibetan people to a "simple Buddhist monk," he is known first and foremost as a man of peace, tolerance, and great understanding.

In these days when many world leaders have turned to terrorism as an expression or act against a policy or a government, I sincerely believe that the peaceful efforts of the Dalai Lama and the Tibetan people to end oppressive rule in Tibet should be strongly supported by all governments—not only in an effort to end human rights abuses in Tibet, but also as a strong statement that efforts to peacefully resolve conflicts take precedence over and transcend acts of violence and terrorism. It is my sincere hope that each of us will give careful consideration to the significance of Nobel Committee's decision to award His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize; take heart to the plight of the Tibetan people; and renew our commitment to aid the Dalai Lama and the people of Tibet in their efforts to bring democracy to Tibet and to China through peaceful means.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD]; the chairman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER]; the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE]; and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE] for expeditiously bringing this resolution to the floor.

It was with great pleasure that we learned that His Holiness, the Dalai Lama of Tibet, has been awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize by the Norwegian Nobel Committee. There are few people who are as deserving as His Holiness to win this prestigious award. I have met His Holiness on several occasions, and just as recent within the last month and I feel confident in saying that he is truly a remarkable man. Not only does he bring kindness, clarity, and insight to world affairs and the tragic plight of his nation, he also is a physical embodiment of those very virtues.

The Dalai Lama's five-point peace plan on resolving the problems facing Tibet and in his Strasbourg statement on the same issue, he has come more than half way in meeting the demands laid down by authorities of the PRC. Many Tibetans are upset with him in that he spoke of allowing the PRC to handle Tibetan foreign affairs and military matters. They say, and rightfully so, that tibet has always been an independent nation so why should they compromise their nation away?

But His Holiness has stood up to the pressure even though his nation, people and their sacred religion has been ravaged by the Communist Chinese. He still holds no grudge and speaks of compassion for those who have and continue to repress Tibet.

Through a process of colonization, Chinese settlers now outnumber Tibetans in their own land. The very real danger now is that Tibet will be forgotten as her monasteries and sacred temples are made into tourist attractions.

His Holiness, in the face of this greatest threat still talks of forgiveness. He is a walking lesson in humility for all of us and I invite my colleagues to join in congratulating the Dalai Lama on this auspicious occasion.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. STAGGERS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 75

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet, spiritual mentor to millions of Buddhists throughout the world, and the leader of the Tibetan people;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet has persistently promoted justice, offered hope to the oppressed and upheld the rights and dignity of all men and women regardless of faith, nationality, or political views;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama is a world leader who has admirably and with dedication advanced the cause of regional and world peace through adherence to the doctrines of nonviolence and universal responsibility;

Whereas His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama has, through his example, his teachings, and his travels, furtherd mutual understanding, respect, and unity among nations and individuals; and

Whereas the Norwegian Nobel Committee has awarded His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress commends His Holiness the Dalai Lama for furthering the just and honorable causes that he has championed, and congratulates him for being awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL RED RIBBON WEEK FOR A DRUG-FREE AMERICA

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 213) to designate October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to identify the good work of our colleague, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], who is the chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 373, and likewise to recognize for a few remarks in support of the resolution, our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 213, designating October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America," and I want to commend the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] for his leadership in bringing this measure to the floor of the House for consideration.

Senate Joint Resolution 213 commends the hard work and dedication of concerned parents, youth, law enforcement, educators, business leaders, religious leaders, private sector organizations, and government leaders for their efforts to help achieve a drug-free America, and it encourages anti-drug activities to take place during National Red Ribbon Week.

The resolution also encourages all Americans to wear or display red ribbons to symbolize their commitment to a healthy, drug-free lifestyle and to develop an attitude of intolerance to the use of drugs.

As a senior member of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I can assure my colleagues that this resolution, which I am pleased to cosponsor, represents an additional effort to raise the public's consciousness as to the dangers of drug abuse and to develop an attitude of intolerance as to the use of illicit drugs.

If our Nation is to win the war against drug abuse, then attitudes regarding the use of illicit drugs must be changed and the public must reject these deadly drugs. Senate Joint Resolution 213 is an important step in that direction. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] is particularly generous with the time, especially in light of the fact that I did vote against him on the amendment which was of particular interest to him today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the author, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] but I also think it is very important that we congratulate the real workhorse on dealing with this issue, someone who has been one who has labored over the years on trying to turn the corner on the plight of drugs and what it has done to our society, and of course I am referring to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], our friend, who just spoke. This issue bringing the Red Ribbon Day to the forefront is something that is going to be put right out there for all to see, and not many people are aware of the fact that this kind of expression would not be able to be exercised were it not for this gentleman.

I, Mr. Speaker, would simply like to express my hearty congratulations to the distinguished ranking member of the Select Committee on Narcotics.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 213

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse has reached epidemic proportions and is of major concern to all Americans;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse is a major public health threat and is one of the largest causes of preventable disease, disability, and death in the United States today;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse costs American society nearly $100,000,000,000 a year;

Whereas illegal drug use does not discriminate on the basis of age, gender, or socioeconomic status, as evidenced by the facts that—

(1) 23,000,000 Americans age 12 and over currently use illicit drugs;

(2) a nationwide Weekly Reader survey revealed that of the 68,000 fourth graders polled, 34 percent reported peer pressure to try wine coolers, 41 percent to smoke, and 24 percent to use crack or cocaine; and

(3) the 15- to 24-year-old group is dying at a faster rate than any other age group because of accidents, homicides, and suicides, many of which are related to drug and alcohol abuse;

Whereas the drug problem appears to be insurmountable, but Americans have begun to lay the foundation to combat it;

Whereas we must continue the important strides we have made in our efforts to prevent alcohol and other drug abuse;

Whereas the most recent national polls reveal that progress has been made in that—

(1) since 1979, there has been a steady decline in the use of marijuana on a daily basis among high school seniors, and in 1987, marijuana use amoung this group was at its lowest level in 11 years;

(2) in 1987 there was a significant drop in the use of cocaine, and the number of high school seniors associating great risk with trying cocaine once or twice rose from 34 percent in 1986 to 48 percent in 1987; and

(3) illicit drug use of stimulants and sedatives continues to decline among high school seniors, college students, and young adults in general;

Whereas according to public opinion polls the American people consider that drug abuse is one of the most serious domestic problems facing this Nation and have begun to take steps to fight it;

Whereas the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth has declared October 22 through October 29, 1989, and "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America", and has called for a comprehensive public awareness, prevention, and education program involving thousands of the parent and community groups across the country;

Whereas other outstanding groups, including the National Parents Resource Institute for Drug Education, the Council for Drug Education, Just Say No International, the National Crime Prevention Council, the Chief of Police National Drug Task Force, the National Hispanic Family Aganist Drug Abuse, national youth organizations, national service organizations, and others have demonstrated leadership, creativity, and determination in achieving a drug free America;

Whereas any use of an illegal drug, is unacceptable, and the illegal use of a legal drug cannot be tolerated; and

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse destroys lives, spawns rampant crime, undermines our economy, and threatens our national security; Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 22 through October 29, 1989, is designated and "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America". The United States recognizes and commends the hard work and dedication of concerned parents, youth, law enforcement, educators, business leaders, religious leaders, private sector organizations, and Government leaders, and urges that meeting, conference, and fundraising activities that support community and alcohol education take place during National Red Ribbon Week for Drug-Free America with other appropriate activities, events, and educational campaigns. Every American is encouraged to wear and display red ribbons during National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America to present and symbolize their commitment to a healthy, drug-free lifestyle, and to develop an attitude of intolerance concerning the use of drugs.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the several resolutions just considered and adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO RUSS TOWNSLEY, EDITOR AND COPUBLISHER OF RUSSELL DAILY NEWS

(Mr. ROBERTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, Kansas is known for many things: Dorothy and Toto, the Nation's breadbasket, mamas who encouraged their babies to grow up to be cowboys, "Home on the Range," aviation, and people who achieve greatness by following our State motto, "To the Stars Through Difficulty"—people like Dwight Eisenhower and Amelia Earhart. And, Kansas is also known for its pioneer, rambunctious country newspaper editors in the image of William Allen White.

One of the best of those editors retired several months ago—Russ Townsley, editor and copublisher of the Russell Daily News. Russ came from a most respected journalism family, carried on the tradition and for 40 years added his name to Kansas journalism greats. The Salina Journal recently ran a full-page feature highlighting Russ' career. He has been an old-fashioned stickler for accuracy and fairness as he led Russell as a progressive editor. His scope was national but his touch was pure hometown. And, just for the record, he has been a valued and trusted friend. Well done, Russ Townsley.

I commend the following article to my colleagues.

[From the Salina (KS) Journal, Aug. 13, 1989]

RUSS TOWNSLEY ENDS 42-YEAR PUBLISHING CAREER AT RUSSELL

(By Sharon Montague)

(Russ Townsley, in one of his last few days as co-owner and publisher of the Russell Daily News, sits behind the desk, ignoring the mess and instead facing a computer terminal.

(He reads the copy on the screen, occasionally changing a word here or a word there. Several minutes pass, then, without looking up, Townsley quips, "I keep telling everyone I can't leave until I've cleared my desk—and that could take years."

(The man who has been publisher of the Russell Daily News for 42 years pushes a button on the computer terminal to typeset the stories he has just edited, spins around on his chair, picks up a gold pica pole from the desk and begins to tell his story.)

In selling his controlling interest in the Russell Daily News last month to co-owner Allan D. Evans, Townsley, 69 ended a Townsley newspaper tradition that began with his grandfather, Channel P. Townsley.

Channel P. Townsley had been a captain in the Civil War before being named municipal judge in Sedalia, MO.

"Being a rock-ribbed Republican in the Missouri judicial system was not exactly what Capt. Townsley wanted in life," Townsley said, so his grandfather moved to Great Bend, where he bought the Tribune in 1876.

Ownership of the weekly newspaper passed on to Townsley's father, Will L. Townsley, who began operating the newspaper daily instead of weekly. When he died in 1935, the newspaper was run by Russ Townsley, his mother, Alice, his sister, Helen, and his brother, Will Jr. Alice Townsley died in 1942.

The partnership expanded into radio, and purchased the Great Bend radio station KVGB.

"When we bought it, it was a 100-watt, and we built it into a 5,000-watt station that was an NBC affiliate," Townsley said.

Townsley was the radio man in the family in those early days, working at the station as newsman, engineer, announcer, advertising salesman, copy writer and janitor.

"I feel we had an unusual family operation," Townsley said. "Helen was the brains, Will was the politician and public relations counselor, and I generally did about what they told me to do."

The partnership sold the Great Bend Tribune in 1966 and the radio station in 1969, but by that time, Russ Townsley already was an established newspaperman in Russell.

Russ and his wife, Janie, moved to Russell in 1947, when his family joined with Evans to buy the weekly Russell County News. The name was changed to the Russell Daily News, and daily publication commenced the day after Labor Day that year.

In 1970, Townsley bought out his brother and sister, so he and Evans were the only stockholders.

"June 16, 1947, was my first day as publisher," Townsley said. "I had always been in radio before, then I came here and found myself publisher. I had no idea what to do."

But Townsley quickly found his niche in Russell—as the newspaper's primary reporter, covering "everything from people burning up in trucks to visiting politicians," taking photographs and writing editorial columns.

One thing his staff wouldn't let him write, Townsley said, were weddings and obituaries.

"They were afraid they'd all end up sounding like car wrecks," Townsley said.

When his family bought the Russell Daily News, it was the small newspaper competing against an established weekly—The Russell Record, which had been owned since 1872 by a long-time Russell family. The Daily News had been started as a weekly in 1930.

"It was pretty tough competition," Townsley said. "When we came, the Record had all the major advertisers. They had history and family behind them."

Garnering its share of advertising dollars wasn't the only problem the Daily News faced in the beginning, Townsley said.

Local officials weren't used to having reporters at every meeting of the city council, Townsley said, and were somewhat weary of discussing their business in front of an outsider.

"There was a three-member council back then," Townsley said, "and they'd have some long meetings, and I'd start nodding.

"Every week, they'd try to sneak out and leave me asleep at the table. They almost made it a couple of times."

But Townsley later learned a trick to keep himself awake at school board, city council, planning commission and other meetings that could sometimes last until the wee hours of the morning.

Along with the small notebook he carries in his shirt pocket, Townsley carries a supply of cryptographs, or word games, on small slips of paper. He pulls them out when his attention begins to wan.

"Crossword puzzles are too obvious," he said.

The Daily News gradually found its spot in the daily lives of Russell residents, and in 1962 the Daily News took over the Record and continues to publish it semi-weekly.

The publishing company also purchased and operates The Hoisington Dispatch and the Natoma-Luray Independent. The Independent has been consolidated with the Record.

Townsley never went to journalism school to learn to write the news, but he learned from experience.

"My writing is basically radio style," he said. "I go with the standard textbook style—inverted pyramid."

In his newswriting, he underplayed rather than overplayed, he said, as was befitting a country editor.

"In every story, I try to be as straightforward and objective as possible," he said. "You get the same coverage, and you don't create the problems. In country press, you can underplay something and make it just as well."

And he learned that sometimes, it's better to editorialize about national issues, or criticize your wife's casseroles, than to criticize city officials.

"You learn that instead of tackling city hall, it's rather easy to complain about casseroles," Townsley said.

That philosophy led to Townsley's Saturday column, "Coffee Time Notes," and his reputation as one of the last "paragraphers" in Kansas journalism.

Townsley was of the tradition of Kansas journalists that began in William Allen White's time—when country editors poked fun at each other and bandied about personal insults to rile each other.

Townsley's partners in crime were Rolla Clymer at El Dorado and Leonard Sekavec of Holyrood, both of whom are dead.

"I'd make derogatory comments about Sek—that pot-bellied Bohemian—and other Bohemians, and Sek would write something about me in his column," Townsley said. "We'd go back and forth.

"That's the kind of tradition that gives Bob Dole his sense of humor."

Coffee Time Notes also consisted of short quips that had a "backward twist" or sorts, Townsley said, such as an item commenting on the national deficit.

"One of the TV fellows hit upon the way to solve the national debt and end deficit spending," Townsley wrote in one column. "All we have to do, he claims—is make Japan the 51st state."

Martha Brack, who put together an exhibit of Townsley's wit and wisdom that will be displayed at the Russell Public Library through August, said Townsley's writing "had so much practical wisdom and common sense I became somewhat of a student of it."

Brack lived on the West Coast for many years before moving to Kansas, she said. She found that in the Midwest, "people are quieter and speak fewer words, but they seem to say more. His (Townsley's) understatement is that way."

Townsley's role at the Russell Daily News also included training new writers; the turnover was large, because the newspaper was so small.

"We had quite a few, some good and some not so good," Townsley said. "We've trained as many writers here as some of the journalism schools in the states."

Even those who had received training needed to be retrained to become good "country reporters," Townsley said.

"The best thing I could teach them is that names are important, people are important, and very few local items are not worth using," he said.

And he couldn't emphasize enough the importance of being objective.

"We're just here to tell what happened on any day," he said.

Leroy Jaggers, superintendent of the Russell School District, said Townsley always was objective in covering school issues.

"He's a very professional person—most professional and factual," Jaggers said. "I enjoyed him, even at the times he was putting me on the spot. I found him to be more than fair."

Townsley did have his own opinions about issues, though, Jaggers said, and didn't back down on those opinions.

"I consider him a good friend, but he never let that interfere with his reporting," Jaggers said. "If he thought I was making a mistake, he wrote it that way.

"And I told him I don't fight with anyone that buys ink by the barrel."

Though Townsley said there are no "big stories," that stand out in his mind, and that, "trying to be an advocate of the public has kept me busier than trying to get the big stories," he said covering the Russell appearances of Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, the senior Kansas senator from Russell, has been exciting.

Dole, a Republican, was one of the more interesting subjects, and a very good friend, Townsley said.

"I never asked him for anything, and he didn't ask me for anything," Townsley said. "We did exchange friendly criticism, though."

Dole said Townsley was a "tough newspaperman, and very independent.

"He gave me a hard time sometimes when I deserved it, and sometimes when I thought I didn't. But he was a part of Russell, and his retirement will be the end of an era."

A framed newspaper from Aug. 19, 1976—the day after President Gerald Ford picked Dole as his running mate during his race for a second term—is tacked on the wall of Townsley's office.

The banner headline on the front page proclaims, "Ford Picks Bob Dole," and the front and back pages are covered with stories about the selection, with reactions from local residents and officials.

Townsley said that August day was one of the most hectic of his career.

"We had no idea it was coming," he said. "We had to gather every little bit of information we could from wire services and from his family in Russell, and we had just a few hours to put it all together."

The newspaper had no photographs of Dole, and no background information on his career to pull out and use that day.

But the next day, Townsley said he began gathering that information, borrowing early day photographs from Dole's family members and clipping articles about the senator from other newspapers and periodicals.

Now, a shelf in Townsley's office is reserved for the many manila envelopes that hold that information.

Those envelopes are one thing that Townsley left behind when last Saturday he vacated his office and his position as publisher of the Russell Daily News.

Townsley said he also left many stories undone, as a country editor never has the time nor the strength to do everything. But now was the right time for him to hang up his hat, he said.

He said it isn't the best time to sell a newspaper—what with the oil and farm economies that supported Russell through the years in a state of decline.

"If I was a good economist—which newspapermen seldom are—I would either have sold ages ago or I would wait," he said.

"I'm having more problems getting stories done, and spending more time than I used to have to with stories. Pressure just keeps building all the time."

Townsley and his wife plan to stay in Russell, he said, and he hopes to spend time restoring antique cars that he has collected through the years.

"I keep several in a shop at the airport," Townsley said. "I could work eight hours a day for two years just getting them fixed up."

He's not a mechanic and is a lousy painter, he said, "but by the time I get through, I will have found out how to paint."

And if he gets done with that, his wife has plenty of things to keep him busy.

COUNTRY MUSIC AWARD WINNERS

(Mr. CLEMENT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, Monday night in my hometown of Nashville, TN, the winners of the 23d Annual Country Music Awards were announced.

It was quite a night to behold as the stars came out to honor our country recording artists. From the newset country star on the horizon, Clint Black, to the male and female country vocalists of the year, Ricky Van Shelton and Kathy Mattea, to the country entertainer of the year, George Strait, Monday night's program showcased the best and the brightest of today's country music scene.

I would like to congratulate all of the winners. And I would like to congratulate the country music association, its executive director, Jo-Walker Meador, Irving Waugh, who produced the show, and its members for an exciting television production. I was proud to be among those in the audience commemorating country's contribution to the American music tradition.

On a personal note, I would like to commend the choir from Christ Church who performed with Dolly Parton. I am a member of the Christ Church congregation in Nashville and I have the pleasure of hearing the choir and it's minister Reverend L.H. Hardwick when I attend Sunday services. I was proud to see their singing shared with a national television audience.

Mr. Speaker, October is country music month, as now decreed by both the House and the Senate. Monday night's country music awards show demonstrates the vitality, excitement, and history associated with country music. I am proud to be their representative here in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I include a list of the Country Music Award winners.

NASHVILLE, TN.—Winners in the 23d annual Country Music Awards show Monday night:

Entertainer of the year: George Strait.

Female vocalist of the year: Kathy Mattea.

Male vocalist of the year: Ricky Van Shelton.

Single of the year: "I'm No Stranger to the Rain" Keith Whitley, RCA.

Album of the year: "Will the Circle Be Unbroken Vol. II" Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Universal.

Song of the year (awarded to songwriter): "Chiseled in Stone," Max D. Barnes and Vern Gosdin.

Vocal group of the year: Highway 101.

Vocal duo of the year: The Judds.

Vocal event of the year: Hank Williams, Jr. and Hank Williams, Sr.

Musician of the year: Johnny Gimble, fiddler.

Horizon Award: Clint Black.

Music video of the year (awarded to performer and director): "There's A Tear in My Beer," Hank Williams Jr., Ethan Russell.

Hall of Fame: Jack Stapp, music publisher; Cliffie Stone, music publisher; Hank Thompson, singer.

THE DRUG WAR DILEMMA

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, before coming to Congress I served as a criminal court judge. I tried many drug cases.

I remember one time we had a 53-year-old man who was seeking probation in a drug case. He testified that 4 years earlier he had a business where he made well over $100,000 a year; he had a beautiful home, a wife, and two daughters. Then he became addicted to drugs and ended up losing his business, his home and even his family.

I asked him if he thought anyone could really handle drugs. He said, "No, Judge, not me, not you, not anyone else. They always get you in the end."

I heard many young people testify they started up the drug ladder by first using marijuana, thinking they could handle it, and moving on to harder drugs. I tell the young people in my district I am scared to death of drugs. I am afraid if I tried cocaine even one time, I would run the risk of being hooked.

As our late colleague, Larkin Smith, pointed out in his series of talks on the floor, we need do away with the congressional drug maze. We need one committee to coordinate the drug war. Both in tribute to Larkin Smith and because of his good legislation, I urge my colleagues to support the Drug Committee Reorganization Act.

Congress created the job of drug czar to oversee and coordinate all aspects of the war against drugs. However, here in the House, there are as many as 53 committees, subcommittees and select committees where anti-drug legislation is referred. We cannot effectively address the Nation's drug pestilence with this costly, untimely, and inefficient process.

One of the reoccurring themes in the President's National Drug Control Strategy is coordination. We should take heed here in the Congress and seriously evaluate how we can develop effective and timely anti-drug legislation. It is time to practice what we hear so often on this floor, get waste and inefficiency out of Government. Well, we have a solution to get the process moving.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring House Resolution 216, the Congressional Drug Committee Reorganization Act of 1989. This legislation will establish a single standing committee with exclusive authority on all Federal anti-drug efforts.

This legislation will go a long way to improve our effectiveness in developing a drug-free America.

As we all know, recent polls indicate that most Americans remain convinced that drugs represent the most serious threat to our national well-being.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce estimates the annual gross sales of illegal drugs at $110 billion. Larkin emphasized that in order to address successfully this enormous problem, we must have a coordinated, structured, and responsive effort from the Congress—not a tenuous, tentative, hesitant or irresolute commitment.

I urge my colleagues, especially in memory of Larkin Smith, to support the Congressional Drug Committee Reorganization Act and help put an end to this drug maze here in the Congress.

APPELLATE PROCEDURE FOR THE HIGH COURT OF SAMOA

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation which will improve the procedure for appeals from decisions of the territorial courts of American Samoa.

American Samoa is the only territory of the United States which does not have a mechanism whereby decisions of the High Court of American Samoa can be reviewed by courts created under article III of the United States Constitution. This bill provides judicial review by writ of certiorari in the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and in the Supreme Court.

In the past, litigants wishing to appeal decisions of the territorial courts have filed applications for writs of mandamus against the Secretary of the Interior in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. This bill permits such suits to be brought, but only in the U.S. District Court for the District of Hawaii.

Mr. Speaker, I introduce this bill at the request of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. We in American Samoa wish to take no action which would weaken the twin pillars of our cultural identity: our communal land tenure system, and our system of chiefly titles.

I have some reservations about this bill; however, I believe any questions can be resolved through the hearing process, which, I hope, will include hearings in American Samoa.

H.R. 3438

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CERTIORARI TO THE NINTH CIRCUIT IN CASES FROM AMERICAN SAMOA.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction to review by writ of certiorari all final decisions of the highest court of American Samoa in which a decision could be had. This review shall be in addition to that of any other judicial or executive authority. The final decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit rendered pursuant to this section, including denials of writ of certioriari, are subject to review by the United States Supreme Court by writ of certiorari, as provided in sections 1254(1) and 2101 of title 28, United States Code. Rulings of the courts of American Samoa shall be conclusive on questions of local law. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction to promulgate rules necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 2. MANDAMUS IN THE DISTRICT OF HAWAII.

An action in the nature of mandamus against the Secretary of the Interior which arises from the Secretary's duties in relation to the governance of American Samoa and which is properly brought in a district court of the United States, may be brought only in the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) SECTION 1.—Section 1 applies to appeals brought on or after the 90th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) SECTION 2.—Section 2 applies to actions brought on or after the 90th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

ST. CROIX INSULT ON INJURY

(Mr. DE LUGO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I hope that many of the Members saw Ted Kopple's ABC "Nightline" last night. It was the first balanced report on what Hugo has done in the Caribbean that we have seen on U.S. television, and it is the first compassionate one.

I would like to share with the Members an article that appeared on the op-ed pages of the New York Times of October 6, 1989, written by Michael D. DeLorenzo, who has lived in the Virgin Islands off and on for 17 years and is a mainland financier. This is what he wrote:

Hugo, the fiercest hurricane in the history of the Caribbean, struck St. Croix on Sept. 17. I flew into St. Croix six days later to check on the safety of my many friends and the condition of my home.

The devastation was unbelievable. More than 95 percent of the homes sustained serious damage. Sixty percent are totally destroyed, leaving 40,000 people homeless.

To attempt to put the looting and other stories about St. Croix into proper perspective, try to imagine the total devastation of Long Island. Sixty percent of the population is homeless. All businesses are destroyed or closed.

No jobs. No money. Checks and credit cards are of no value. The banks are closed. No electricity and no estimate of how many months until it is restored. No telephone service. The only communication with the rest of the country is by short-wave radios.

No running water. No toilet facilities. No schools. No garbage disposal. No hospitals. Scarcely a leaf or flower on the island.

This is what has happened and is going on now in St. Croix. Do the media report this devastation, mass tragedy and suffering of the 65,000 good people? No. They report on the looting and violence caused by a relative few. They depict St. Croix as a fearful and dangerous place full of roving bands of criminals.

This could not be further from the truth. Yes, there was looting, just as there was looting in New York City during the blackout of 1965 and looting in Charleston, S.C., after Hugo hit. I am fairly sure that there would be looting on Long Island if the St. Croix scenario came true.

I hope that the 65,000 good people on St. Croix will receive the disaster aid and compassion for their suffering that they deserve.

THE LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE MARKETS DEVELOPMENT ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, now that Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act has been stripped of its pretense, I believe it is time that we move forward to develop a realistic and comprehensive long-term health care strategy for our Nation's elderly. In my view, such a strategy entails recognizing that any future solution must include a viable private sector delivery system.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing H.R. 3440, the Long-Term Health Care Markets Development Act. It is a comprehensive bill to facilitate private sector development of long-term health care insurance. The development of such a market is the key to ensuring the availability and affordability of insurance products to protect all Americans against catastrophic costs asssociated with extended hospital stays and custodial care.

Specifically, H.R. 3440 allows for tax-exempt withdrawals from IRA's for the purpose of purchasing long-term care insurance. It would allow a company to offer a higher deductible health insurance package and contribute the premium savings to an employee IRA, whereby the funds could be withdrawn tax-free to purchase catastrophic or long-term health care insurance.

In addition, it would eliminate the Certificate of Public Need [COPN] program, which many States use to limit competition in the nursing home industry and keep nursing home costs artificially high. It would also allow for the conversion of life insurance policies to long-term care insurance, and provide preferential tax treatment of long-term care insurance reserves similar to the tax treatment as life insurance reserves.

With the elderly population increasing in numbers, efforts must be made to address the long-term care problem before it becomes a national crisis. The Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act, as well as other proposals to fill the long-term care void by expanding the Medicare program, are expensive and unnecessary.

Let's not make the same mistake when considering legislation to address the more pressing problem of long-term custodial care. A massive federally sponsored long-term care program is doomed to failure and, as was the case with the catastrophic care law, Congress should not mislead the elderly by exaggerating the limits of a Federal response. Instead, Congress should encourage a market solution to this serious and growing problem.

The Long-Term Health Care Markets Development Act offers a number of incentives for the health insurance industry to create efficient, competitive, and cost-effective long-term care insurance products. We need to move forward on this issue, and I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort by cosponsoring the Long-Term Health Care Markets Development Act H.R. 3440.

TRIBUTE TO GEN. CASIMIR PULASKI

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on October 11, 1779, 210 years ago today, the courageous military leader, Gen. Casimir Pulaski, sacrificed his life for the cause of American independence during the Battle of Savannah.

Count Pulaski was born to an aristocratic and distinguished family of Poland, but he rejected a life of leisure and instead devoted over 30 years of his life to fighting to free his beloved homeland from tyranny. Although he struggled tirelessly to prevent the partitioning of Poland, he was not successful, and eventually was forced into exile. However, he never lost his deep commitment to the ideals of freedom and self-determination.

In 1777, Pulaski met Benjamin Franklin in Paris, and was given a letter of introduction to Gen. George Washington. Arriving in Boston during the summer of that year, he volunteered his services and expertise to General Washington's Army. Washington entrusted Pulaski with the grave responsibility of reorganizing the American cavalry forces. These independent corps of cavalry and light infantry, known as the Pulaski Legion, contributed greatly to the American cause of independence.

Pulaski distinguished himself during the Battle of Brandywine, and because of his efforts, the Continental Congress granted him a commission as a brigadier general. Pulaski's courage and dedication helped to save the city of Charleston, SC, and during the siege of Savannah, he displayed one final act of ultimate courage. As the British fired from this fortified city, Pulaski volunteered to charge through their line of defense, and enter the city. His untimely death at the head of this famous cavalry charge reflects his selfless dedication to the ideas for which the colonists fought, and his patriotic actions are a reminder of the great sacrifices that must be made to obtain the blessing of freedom.

President George Bush has issued a proclamation designating October 11 as General Pulaski Memorial Day, in recognition of his achievements and heroism. A copy of the proclamation follows:

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY, 1989
(A Proclamation by the President of the United States of America)

Forced to flee his native Poland after fighting in its unsuccessful struggle for independence, General Casimir Pulaski later became a hero of the American Revolutionary War. Benjamin Franklin once praised him as a man "famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country." In the ultimate expression of that bravery, and in solidarity with the American colonists, Pulaski volunteered for the Continental Army and eventually became the leader of his own cavalry unit. While leading a charge during the siege of Savannah on October 9, 1779, this dauntless freedom fighter was mortally wounded. He died 2 days later.

Each year, on the October 11th anniversary of his death, we Americans pause to remember General Pulaski and the heartfelt convictions for which he gave his life. General Pulaski clearly understood that liberty is the God-given right of all men. He believed that the cause of freedom is universal, and, like many of his contemporaries, viewed the American struggle for independence as a decisive battle for the future of all freedom-loving peoples. The American Revolution, if successful, would be a resounding victory for the principles of individual liberty and representative government.

With the generous assistance of brave and selfless allies like General Pulaski, the American colonists did succeed in their quest for independence. And today, more than 2 centuries later, the triumphant call for freedom and self-government continues to reverberate throughout the world.

That call can be heard clearly in General Pulaski's homeland, where—despite years of repression by ruling Communist officials and Soviet military intervention in 1981—the Polish people have continued to demonstrate their fervent belief in the principles of freedom and self-determination. With faith, courage, and persistence, they have begun to reap the rewards of their efforts to obtain free elections, as well as political and economic reforms.

Today, we Americans offer our support and our prayers for the people of Poland as they continue seeking the blessings of freedom and representative government—blessings that General Casimir Pulaski helped win for us 210 years ago.

Now, therefore, I, George Bush, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim Wednesday, October 11, 1989, as General Pulaski Memorial Day, and I direct the appropriate government officials to display the flag of the United States on all government buildings on the day. In addition I encourage the people of the United States to commemorate the occasion as appropriate throughout the land.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-first day of September, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and fourteenth.

GEORGE BUSH.

Mr. Speaker, General Pulaski's sacrifice serves today as a source of strength and inspiration for the people of Poland, who are continuing to strive to obtain the blessings of liberty for themselves and for their children, and for all freedom-loving people throughout the world who are engaged in the timeless struggle to achieve freedom and self-government. On the 210th anniversary of General Pulaski's death, I am proud to join with Polish-Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Americans of Polish descent throughout the Nation, who are commemorating the great courage and unwavering commitment to the ideals of freedom of this outstanding Revolutionary War hero.

ABORTION FUNDING

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to agree to the Senate language on abortion funding in the fiscal year 1990 Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education appropriations bill. The Senate language permits an exception to a ban on Medicaid funding for abortion in the cases of rape or incest. The House bill already allows for Medicaid funding of abortion when the life of the mother is endangered.

Since being elected to the House of Representatives, I have always felt that abortion should be allowed in the tragic and unconscionable circumstances of rape and incest. The Senate language affirms this position, while otherwise barring the use of Federal funds to perform abortions.

I am personally opposed to abortion, but I do believe that expectant mothers and the victims of the crimes of rape and incest should be protected against life-threatening and criminally-induced pregnancies, respectively.

Last year, President Reagan waged an impassioned campaign to veto the fiscal year 1989 Labor-HHS-Education bill if it contained the same Senate language which allowed for abortion in the cases of rape or incest. It appeared that all Federal funding for health, social services, and education would be imperiled indefinitely unless Congress passed the bill without the exceptions for abortion. I was, therefore, constrained to vote for the bill, without the rape and incest exceptions, even though I believed those exceptions were needed. The president had boxed us into a corner on passage of this important bill.

Last fall President Bush campaigned on the position that there should be exceptions on abortion funding in cases of rape or incest. I agree. It seems unlikely to me that he can veto this bill because of the presence of these exceptions.

THE BENJAMIN FRANKLIN MEMORIAL FIRE SERVICE BILL OF RIGHTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to take out this special order with several of my colleagues for three purposes. First of all to acknowledge this week nationally as Fire Prevention Week, that week that we set aside each year to pay tribute to those millions of volunteers and paid professionals across America who each day risk their lives so that all of us can live in a safer environment.

Second, to honor the fire service this evening with a tribute from Members of Congress, and third, to outline a piece of legislation that we will be having a national press conference on tomorrow to support the fire and emergency services network in America. It is entitled, "The Fire Service Bill of Rights." It has taken us 3 months to work up the items contained in this piece of legislation, the initiatives herein, and it has had input and comments from the paid and voluntary fire services from throughout America.

Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago over 1 million acres of our wildlands out in Wyoming and Montana caught on fire and burned in one of the largest wildfires in the history of the country. Just 6 months ago six of our paid firefighters were killed in Kansas City because the incident they were responding to did not have the proper information to be able to know what was in store for them when the arrived.

This past summer was saw a DC-10 crash in Sioux City and we saw a number of paid and volunteer professionals respond to that situation and handle it in a very proficient and a very effective manner.

Just 1 month ago we saw a devastating hurricane hit the Carolinas of this country, and once again we saw untold numbers of volunteers and paid emergency service personnel from those States and around the country respond to the real emergency that was there at that time from Hurricane Hugo.

This past weekend we saw the unfortunate tragedy in a nursing home in Virginia where 11 senior citizens lost their lives to fire.

Mr. Speaker, all these incidents are common occurrences in the everyday lives of the 3 million men and women who make up the fire services of this Nation, people who respond to all sorts of calls and emergency situations, ranging from fires to floods to earthquakes to airline crashes to HAZMAT incidents.

Mr. Speaker, for the last 200 years we have been somewhat remiss in responding to their needs and their concerns. Tonight we are going to talk about these people. We are going to talk about their issues and their problems and how we hope to begin to address concerns on a national basis with the Benjamin Franklin Memorial fire service bill of rights.

Joining me in this special order this evening, I would like to get the gentleman on first because he has been a real hero with the fire services in Washington, is the chairman of the committee of jurisdiction over the U.S. Fire Administration and the National Fire Academy, someone who has done tireless work on behalf of the Nation's fire services at a time when the administration was not as sensitive as it should have and could have been in promoting assistance for the fire services across this country.

So Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

At the outset, I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] for the initiatives that he has taken in support of the fire service personnel since he has joined the House of Representatives from our State, and especially for taking this special order tonight to call attention to this legislative initiative that he and several others have put together that really marks, I think, the first major step forward in the 12 years that I have had the privilege of serving in the House of Representatives in support of the Nation's fire services. We have as the chairman of our Congressional Fire Caucus the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON]. We have put together, largely through his initiative, the support of some 358 Members of the House of Representatives that have now joined in this caucus to promote the interests of the fire services, and particularly to pay attention to the needs of fire service personnel. They will be in the forefront of the legislative efforts that will be made on behalf of the Benjamin Franklin Memorial, this fire service bill of rights that we mark here tonight, and it is for good reason that these people have joined together. The losses to fire, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] has pointed out, are so dramatic across this country. In the day-to-day services and instances the gentleman has cited, when you take it on a yearly basis, we lose 6,000 lives to fire in this country, $30 billion of property losses that are real losses to the economic fabric of our Nation year after year.

In this past year we have also lost 134 firefighters who have lost their lives in the course of fighting fires. Seventeen of those heroes were lost in the State of Pennsylvania, the highest number for any individual State across the country. These are very real, very tragic losses that all of us should note. We owe them and those who risk their lives on a daily basis, on the Federal level we owe them our respect and certainly our support.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] has said, we have not been as supportive as we could have been over the years in the Congress. In 1974 there was a Presidential Commission that wrote the charter for Federal fire support in their report called America Burning. That report laid out a road map of Federal support, a bipartisan commission laid out a road map of Federal support that called for something on the order of $134 million that could judiciously be put to the fire problem on the Federal level in 1974.

We have approached that $134 million with a maximum Federal effort in these years not exceeding $17 million a year. I think it is important for us to compare the charter that was set out for us in that report, "America Burning," a level of effort of $134 million and realize that we have hardly made a start of $17 million a year on the Federal level. We certainly have a long way to go.

Given the numbers of lives that are lost, we have much to do. There have been improvements in the national fire losses on a yearly basis, year after year, but it is also true that they have plateaued out in these last several years at about 6,000 lives a year. I think common sense tells us that smoke detectors have made their mark, but that our society is structured in such a way that with the protection that smoke detectors have to provide we have now hit a plateau, and it is going to take more innovative efforts in order to break through that 6,000 lives mark.

We have in our committee promoted sprinklers for hotels and motels that would prevent fires from happening in the first place. In many ways, I am afraid what we have had to offer has been tombstone legislation. It should not have to be tombstone legislation. This effort that we embark on now, the fire service bill of rights, I think is the first step in breaking through and on to levels that do not represent tombstone legislation but represent an ability to look forward to trying to redress and try to respond to the needs that the fire service personnel have to do a better job.

This bill would create, among other things, the ability to provide a hazardous-materials response in every local fire company across the country regardless of whether it is paid professional or whether it is volunteer. It would provide an ability to put the scholarships in place for the families of those who lose their lives while fighting fires, and it would provide a National Fire Center where we can start to realize that there is a Federal fire focus that must be brought to the fire problem, and it would do all of that without a dime of taxpayers' money, because it would be funded out of, as the gentleman will explain in detail, a mechanism that would be a commemorative coin in honor of the person who founded the first fire department in America, Benjamin Franklin, and in a very real sense those coins and that revenue would be generated by people in the fire service across the country. We essentially would be able to give them a mechanism to raise funds which would be to create an effective Federal fire focus not just on the fire problem but in support of the Fire Service personnel at the same time.

I look forward to working with the gentleman and those others involved in the Congressional Fire Caucus. This is a program that is very much within our reach. I know we can put it together, and the reason we will be able to put it together is because of the energy and the focus that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON], the gentleman in the well, has brought to this problem. We together will see it through.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for extending this time to me and want to congratulate him on where we have brought the Fire Caucus at this point, and look forward to working with him to seeing these legislative initiatives into law.

Mr. WELDON. I thank the gentleman for his fine comments. Before he leaves, and I know he has other engagements this evening, but I would be remiss if I did not mention that during the last 8 to 10 years when efforts were made to cut out the stipend program that benefits thousands of firefighters across this country, when efforts were made to eliminate the arson program, it was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], along with the gentleman for New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], who put the leadership forth to reverse those decisions and to keep the support there at a time when it was not as popular of an issue, and I applaud the gentleman for that leadership as does the Nation's fire service.

I would also be remiss if I did not mention that my colleague from Pennsylvania was one of the individuals who helped draft this legislation and will be one of the original cosponsors along with our colleagues, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] and a number of other Members, some 60 in total, who have already come forth to help us with this act. Because of the gentleman's past leadership, I appreciate his support and his ongoing effort as chairman of the appropriate committee on jurisdiction as we outline the complete provisions of the legislation. I thank the gentleman.

At this point in time, I would like to acknowledge the presence of another Member of Congress who has asked to say a few words who had some very real experiences with an incident in her own community and who responded very quickly and very aggressively in putting forth an enclave fire bill that has become a model piece of legislation, and we are trying now to pass it. She was active before the incident occurred, but she is even more active now as a member of the Fire Caucus. I yield to my good friend, the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS].

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] for yielding me this time to honor the firefighters of this Nation. I want to also express to him how grateful I am that he established the Congressional Fire Services Caucus. This, I believe, has grown to be the largest congressional caucus, and I am very proud to be one of the earliest members of that caucus.

Since Benjamin Franklin organized America's first fire department in 1736, the fire service has been saving lives and protecting property from the scourge of fire. National Fire Prevention Week is an appropriate time to extol their achievements.

The men and women who make up the fire service are involved in one of the most dangerous professions conceivable. One hundred fourteen firefighters died last year. They must put their lives on the line daily, and all too often tragedy strikes. In the Kansas City area, this fact was brought home on November 29, 1988, when 45,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate in a burning trailer exploded at a highway construction site, killing six firefighters. The firefighters had not been informed that ammonium nitrate was on that site.

The Federal Government must increase the information available to the firefighters on the scene of an emergency. We must learn from the Kansas City tragedy and work to change the circumstances that helped cause it. I am an original cosponsor of the Fire Service bill of rights.

I have introduced two pieces of legislation that would improve the information available to firefighters and help them deal better with emergency situations. One bill would grant firefighters the right to conduct preincident inspections of enclaves located within or adjacent to the city limits. In most cities, there are buildings and areas that are owned by the Federal, State, or county government that are not within the jurisdiction of the local fire code. Yet, the local fire department has the responsibility to fight fires there, without the opportunity to learn what unique hazards may exist on that property. The explosion in Kansas City was in such an enclave, a State highway project. The firefighters did not have the opportunity to learn that ammonium nitrate was commonly stored on site in trailers.

The second bill is H.R. 2813, to create a working group to review and revise the materials provided for emergency responders. There are over half a dozen Federal agencies that are responsible for some aspect of hazardous material emergencies, and often their advice can be contradictory, vague, or not suited to the needs of firefighters. We need an interagency working group, chaired by the U.S. Fire Administration, and including representatives from all the affected Federal agencies and firefighters, to ensure that the information the Government provides to emergency responders is the best possible.

As we celebrate National Fire Prevention Week, let us remember the sacrifices of the fire service. And let us work to make their job as safe as possible.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her comments here this evening and for her commitment in helping to solve these problems in a proactive way and for her leadership on issues of the utmost importance to those men and women who risk their lives on a daily basis, especially for her work following the Kansas City disaster in putting forth the pieces of legislation she outlined this evening, and we look forward to working with her to have those pieces of legislation become reality. I thank the gentlewoman for stopping by.

Also with us this evening I would like to ask to make a few comments is an early supporter of the Fire Service Caucus and someone who has been a part of our process for the short time he has been here, but has already established his mark in responding to the needs of those men and women who are truly America's first line domestic heroes, the men and women of the fire service, my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Florida, CLIFF STEARNS.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania for his efforts in this fire service bill of rights.

I am also here to honor the firemen throughout this country of ours in National Fire Prevention Week. When I first came to Congress I supported this entire Congressional Fire Service Caucus because in my family my wife's father was a member of the firefighters of Yonkers, NY, and was involved with many fires and had to go through lots of smoke inhalation and problems. He eventually became the assistant chief at Yonkers. My wife's grandfather was chief of the firefighters in Yonkers. So we have a history of it in our family. So I am very sensitive to what these firefighters do and the sacrifices they have to make.

As a small business man I have come to realize that—one of the properties I have, a small motel, caught fire. If it had not been for the quick actions of these firefighters and the sacrifice they made, that motel would not be here today.

I would like to also point out to Americans everywhere that these gentlemen come into properties and look them over and identify areas where there is paint on cupboards, and they take time and will do this on a volunteer basis.

I think the distinguished Congresswoman from Kansas [Mrs. MYERS] has pointed out in her piece of legislation that they should have the right to go into public buildings and identify areas where there is a possibility of fires and make recommendations. They cannot do that. With the Congresswoman's piece of legislation they will be able to do that. That is very important today.

I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania for what he is doing here. I just want to do my small part today to honor this fire service bill of rights.

Mr. WELDON. I thank the gentleman for his time and comments, and also for his leadership and commitment at an early part in his career in Washington in helping to assist those men and women across the country who are once again risking their lives on a daily basis.

I would like to acknowledge at this time another friend of the fire service nationally, someone who has been here longer certainly than I have and has been here to assist the fire service long before I came on the scene, someone who has the respect of all the firefighters in the great State of Indiana, and someone I have come to respect and admire as a leader in this body, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. DAN BURTON.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennyslvania for those kind remarks.

I was very active with the fire safety movement in Indiana years ago when I was a State senator, and I sponsored and authored a lot of the fire safety legislation which became law.

During that time period I had the opportunity to work very closely with a number of fire safety officials, fire chiefs, and rank-and-file firemen. I spent a few very interesting nights with firemen.

In addition to being the first line of defense against catastrophes in the home and in the business place, they are also very nice guys. When you get to spend a couple of nights with them and go out on some runs with them you realize they really are human beings who care not only about their families and their fellow firemen, but they care about their fellow human beings in the community.

They really risk their lives on a daily basis. So I consider every moment that I have spent with the firefighters in Indiana a real valuable lesson for me. I have appreciated the closeness that I have with them.

As a matter of fact, one of my childhood friends, a fellow named Jerry Whitaker in Indianapolis, was the assistant fire chief for the Indianapolis Fire Department. Now he is the fire chief of the Castleton Fire Department there, and he has kept me informed through the years of the needs of the firemen and kept me apprised of the problems that they face on a day-to-day basis.

That is one of the reasons why I am so happy to be here tonight to participate in this special order, because we know there are needs for the firemen and the firewomen who face these horrible tragedies on a day-to-day basis and risk their lives, but we really do not do much about it.

One of the things that I admire about the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON] is that he came to Congress a short time ago. Every fireman who may be paying attention to what is going on tonight and your colleagues need to know that before you came there was really no organized effort to pass a firemen's bill of rights.

You have in a short period of time organized 358 Congressmen into the biggest caucus here. You have motivated your fellow Members to action. This is going to become a reality. There is no question in my mind about it.

There is a song, "Give Me Some Men Who Are Stout-Hearted Men." One line in that song goes, "The strong will obey and a strong man shows them the way."

I do not mean to give you too many accolades tonight, but I want you to know that I really think and truly believe that none of this would have come to pass had it not been for your efforts.

The firemen across this country can pat me on the back and my colleagues on the back, but if they really want to put the honor and support where it justifiably should be put, it should be put on CURT WELDON's shoulders, because you have done a tremendous job for the firefighters of this country. Every one of them should thank you for that.

I would like to say a word or two about your firefighters' bill of rights. It is a long time in coming. I think it is something that every fireman and person in this country who is aware of it will really appreciate.

The people who lay their lives on the line on a day-to-day basis deserve every one of these rights that you are going to speak out to here tonight.

The thing that is so interesting about it in my view is that with the huge deficits we face in this country, the gentleman has come up with an innovative idea, an innovtive way to pay for these benefits, that nobody had thought of before.

Not only has the gentleman come up with something that the firemen really need in this country and this country really needs, and he has done it pretty much by himself by urging us to join him in this effort, but he has also come up with a way to pay for it.

I wish we had 10 or 20 more Members here like you in Congress. Maybe we could figure out a way to balance this Federal budget and end the terrible deficit we face.

I would like to end up by saying once again I consider it an honor to work with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in this effort, and I hope everybody in this country really knows what a great job he is doing for the firefighters. He is to be commended.

Mr. WELDON. I thank the gentleman for his kind comments and once again for his leadership. During the first discussions with him on issues of fire and life safety, he immediately responded because of his commitment that he made in the State of Indiana, and he followed through on that commitment. He was one of the first individuals to come forth to help us by cosponsoring as an original this piece of legislation, and I appreciate that role.

The gentleman hit upon something that I think is very important and not often understood in America, and that is the nature of these men and women who make up the fire service of this country.

I have had the pleasure during my 42 years of life in this country of working as a volunteer firefighter, a volunteer fire chief, president of a fire company, and State fire instructor. I have interacted with these people on a day-to-day basis.

George Bush, our President, talks about 1,000 points of light. We do not have 1,000 points of light in America, we have 32,000 points of light that have been there long before America was founded as a nation, dating back to the 1730's, because there are 32,000 paid and volunteer fire departments in this country. As a matter of fact, 85 percent of them are totally volunteer, people protecting lives and property just because they want to improve their community.

But we as elected officials have sold them short to some extent, because they are not just the men and women who prevent fires and who put out fires. If you think for a moment about your home community, they are the same group of people who respond to any emergency, whether it is Hurricane Hugo in the Carolinas, whether it is the wild land fires in Yellowstone Park, or whether it is the downing of the DC-10 in Sioux City or the nursing home fire in Virginia.

These men and women who respond, respond to any incident involving an emergency. But they do much more than that. If you think for a moment, they are the first people who respond to pump out the cellars when someone's home has been flooded. They are the first people you call when you have to organize a search party because someone's child has been lost. They are the first group of people you go to when you have any community event that needs to be organized.

If you think about mainstream America and you think of this fire and emergency service network, they are the people who organize the July 4 parades, the Memorial Day celebrations; they are the people who raise the money for the family that is burned out. The paid firefighters have consistently year in and year out as a national effort raised money for Jerry Lewis' program and are contributing millions of dollars to help other people.

The men and women who make up the fire and emergency services of this country are not just people who put out fires. They are the people who are involved in our services clubs, who teach in our Sunday schools. They are the people who mold the fabric of our communities. If you think about it, they are really the heart and soul of America. They are the people who provide the foundation of our small towns.

If you think about the young couple that wants to get married, they oftentimes will hold their wedding reception in the fire station. The fire station in many communities is the hub of that community because of what it means to that particular town, whether it is in California or Georgia or whether it is in Texas or up in Maine.

The men and women of the fire service really have in effect for 250 years been the backbone of this country. For the most part they have risked their lives for us and they have asked so little in return.

What have they asked for? The volunteers are out there raising money to buy their apparatus; they are painting their fire stations; they are going out and giving up their time to be trained and go to drill nights and all the things involved with being a firefighter.

The paid firefighters are doing those extra things that do not come as part of their job, like helping those less fortunate, like raising money for national concerns.

These men and women really typify what this country is all about. They typify what is right with America, because they have asked for so little in return. Oftentimes we in the Federal Government have really slapped their faces. Maybe not deliberately, but just because we have not listened. We have not extended that hand out to them to let them tell us what they need and what their concerns are.

I think of some of the things that occurred in my first term in office here.

□ 2010

The passage of the SARA title III legislation with the Superfund reauthorization, we in the Congress told the American Fire Service that you have to upgrade your training, you have to have state-of-the-art resources to meet hazardous-material responses in your communities, but we are not going to give you any funds to implement that training. We are not going to tell you how to get those resources. In effect, we are going to leave you hanging.

My prediction right now, as I stated on the record in congressional hearings, is that 90 percent of municipalities in America today are out of compliance with SARA title III because we did not listen to the Fire Service before we passed that legislation.

I think of the Department of Transportation last year, an attempt to impose a new licensing regulation for people who drive fire apparatus, for the most part qualified and for the most part licensed by their States. We were going to impose a new regulation which would have cost the average volunteer and paid driver $300 to be nationally certified and would have caused them to miss 3 days of work just to be certified to drive fire apparatus when most States already have that provision; another ridiculous effort on the part of the administration that does not understand what the impact would be at the local level across America.

I think about the efforts over the last 8 to 10 years to zero out the Fire Administration and the Fire Academy, the one National Training Center in Emmettsburg where fire service personnel from all over America come in periodically to be trained in state-of-the-art techniques.

We have attempted through our administration to zero out funding for this effort, not understanding that such a small amount of our Federal dollars, less than $15 million per year, has been used to fund that very important national focus.

When I think of all the money we spend on all the other initiatives, we do not get anywhere near the return that we do for the $15 million per year that has been used to fund the National Fire Administration and the National Fire Academy in Emmettsburg.

An example that came to mind in my first term as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, following the attack on the U.S.S. Stark in the Persian Gulf; as a member of the Subcommittee on Sea Power I traveled to the Persian Gulf following that attack. I met with the officers and crew members of the Stark. I was in Bahrain when the ship was towed in and saw the physical damage done there.

Following the attack on the Stark in which I lost one of my constituents, one of the Navy sailors killed in that incident, I asked for congressional hearings to be held on whether or not we were adequately protecting our sailors onboard our combat ships to deal with fires once they occur from incidents like the attack with the Exocet missile on the Stark.

That October, following the attack on the Stark, under the leadership of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], chairman of the Subcommittee on Sea Power, we held a 2-hour hearing. We brought in the top Navy brass. Our worst fears were confirmed.

We had allowed Navy fire protection to slip. We had spent more time on exotic weapons systems than basic protection for the young sailors who serve on our combat vessels.

But because of that hearing we were able to immediately reprogram $64 million to buy state-of-the-art equipment, infrared heat-sensing scanning, turnout gear, new pumps and other equipment to put on our combat vessels that were serving in the Persian Gulf and around the world.

Now that was $64 million from one hearing to solve the problem in the Navy. But think for a moment, that is 4 years of funding for the entire fire service in this country. There was something wrong when 3 million men and women, 1½ million of them active, volunteers, paid firefighters could not get the attention of this body and our national leadership just to assist them in doing what they do best, which is serving their fellow mankind all across this Nation.

I told the fire service they had some problems, five of them as a matter of fact.

The most important of those was that the elected officials in America were just not aware of how important these men and women are, not just for life safety but from the standpoint of keeping our municipalities and our communities strong.

Secondarily, I told the fire service they were not unified, they were splinter groups fighting with each other: the firefighters union, the volunteers, the chiefs, the NFTA, all the hundreds of other organizations who represent the 3 million members across this Nation.

I told them if they could unify, they had unlimited potential. The third problem they had was they were not proactive, they were reactive. They were waiting until we in Congress did something to hurt them or the administration did something to hurt them, and then they would have thrown up their hands saying, "What could we do to change that?" Nine times out of ten they were being too late to effect a major policy change.

The fourth thing that I said was that they had to learn to work from within the process. They had to learn to work with the Members of Congress and their staffs who were developing legislation, who were holding hearings and who were going to then hopefully address their concerns nationally.

Finally, I told the fire service that they had to understand one very important political element of our democracy, and that is that they have to become political.

I stressed the point across this country as I traveled through the 29 States in the last 11 months speaking to firefighters all over America that being political does not mean being partisan. It does not mean that you have to paint a donkey or an elephant on the back of your fire truck.

What it means is that you have to let the elected officials of America, whether they be in Washington, the statehouses or the county courthouses or the city halls, know the jobs that they are doing and the respect that they deserve in trying to protect lives and property in this country.

Those were the lessons that we gave to the fire service over the past year. The results speak for themselves.

The 98th caucus on Capitol Hill since the formation of this country has now become the largest, with 358 Members of this body and the other body joining together to listen and to respond to their concerns.

That caucus was not enough. Even though it contains some of the most conservative Republicans from our remote rural districts as well as our most liberal Democrats from inner-city America because the fire service touches every State and every district in this country. But the size of our caucus was not enough.

We had to convince the cynics in Washington this was not going to be a passing fancy, this was going to be a serious effort to change the way we think about these people around this Nation and the problems with which they are confronted.

So we put together a dinner on April 12, the first National Fire and Emergency Services dinner. We picked the largest ballroom in Washington, the ballroom at the Sheraton. It holds 2,000 people. One week before the dinner, we sold the room out. With 2,000 people from all over America joining together to talk about issues involving fire, life safety, emergency response, hazardous materials in one room at one time.

The high honor was that the President, President Bush, came out to give the keynote speech. And because of the influential power of this group we even had Vice President QUAYLE come out and attend our reception and also speak to the group, something that never happens on Capitol Hill, where both the President and the Vice President come out on the same evening to address the same group of people, along with over 80 Members of Congress.

From that one dinner we raised over $400,000, which has funded the Congressional Fire and Emergency Services Institute, a nonprofit professional staff of people who are now working within Congress to address the concerns of the firefighters and the fire service of this country.

The institute's job now is to educate Members and their staffs and the general public on what we should be doing legislatively to assist the fire service of America.

That brings us to our real purpose tonight, our first major legislative initiative, besides those which have been mentioned this evening.

That is the Benjamin Franklin Memorial Fire Service bill of rights. It is entitled the Benjamin Franklin Memorial because Ben Franklin, who died 200 years ago, and in 1990 we will celebrate the 200th anniversary of his death, is the father of the fire service of this country. As the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS] said, in 1736 he formed the first fire company in Philadelphia as a volunteer organization.

So what we have done in paying tribute to Ben Franklin is we have put together a piece of legislation to strike a special coin series and this special coin series will honor Ben Franklin, but the $1 piece, the $1 coin, will be a tribute to the fire and emergency service professionals of America. It will depict Ben Franklin in his role as a firefighter and a fire service leader and will for the first time recognize these 3 million people who make up the backbone of this country.

The estimated proceeds from the sale of these coins will benefit and provide support for the fire service bill of rights.

The bill of rights which we are introducing is a generic bill of rights. Not only does it apply nationally, but every State in this Union can take this model and use the same basic rights, but fill in the appropriate programs applicable in their own State. So we offer it in hopes that all the 50 States in this Union will take this series of initiatives and apply to their own State and fill in those programs that would best suit the needs of the fire and emergency services in each individual State.

I want to highlight each of the 10 rights, individually, and then go through the programs and the initiatives that will be contained in the bill of rights. The first right is the right of the fire service in this country to be recognized as America's first responders to all domestic emergencies. When Members think for a moment, as we have mentioned earlier, whenever an emergency occurs in this country, whether it be flood, disaster, earthquake, incidents involving trucks, incidents involving fires, whatever it might be, the first responders are the men and women who are emergency service providers in our fire departments, our rescue and our ambulance companies across this Nation. They deserve to be recognized for that, and to have appropriate recognition annually, as we are doing this week during Fire Prevention Week, as we have done each year with the National Firefighters Day, and as we hope to do with the national emergency services bill, starting next year, to honor one day a year, to pay tribute to those men and women who are our emergency service experts, manning our ambulances and rescue units across America.

The second right is the right to be adequately protected from the dangers associated with emergency response, whether it be the potential from injury, or the potential loss of life because we are dealing with America's most hazardous occupation, be it paid or volunteer, the men and women face the same dangers day in and day out, and deserve to have the best possible resources.

The third right is the right to have their family members, their spouses and their children, adequately protected in the event of a tragic death. Now, last year we increased the death benefit fund paid to a firefighter killed in the line of duty from $25,000 to $50,000. In the bill of rights we will provide an additional benefit to deal with this basic right.

The fourth of the rights of the fire and emergency people nationally is the right to be educated in the latest advances in the fire and life safety sciences, new technologies, computerization, new advances using lasers and other new techniques that can assist people in fire prevention and fire suppression. The men and women of the fire service deserve to have the latest technology available to them and to be educated in the use of that technology.

The fifth is the right to be provided with state-of-the-art equipment and apparatus to better handle all emergency situations. It is a national tragedy that some of our more rural fire departments are using equipment that is second and third generation hand-me-downs, because they cannot get access to surplus Federal equipment that we give away each year, in some cases to foreign nations, that rightfully could go to fire departments in this country to use to protect communities that helped pay for that equipment when it was first purchased.

The sixth right is the right to be able to share innovative fire and life safety programs that have been successful across the country. If we have a problem in recruiting volunteers in Maryland, we can share the experience of a successful program with the volunteers in Oregon or the volunteers in Illinois or any other State across America. The fire service has a right to be able to share this information back and forth, so that it can continue to grow and prosper as a professional discipline in this country.

The seventh right is the right to fully understand and be able to effectively respond to incidents involving the storage, transportation, and use of hazardous materials. There is no more life-threatening situation today than when a group of paid or volunteer firefighters leave the station, knowing that they are going to confront a hazardous material incident. They do not really fully comprehend what is in store for them. As the six Kansas City firefighters who died last November learned, we were not properly prepared for that incident, because we did not provide them the proper support to understand what they should be doing in preparation for a Hazmat incident.

The eighth right is the right to be fully informed of the threat of contracting infectious diseases during the course of life safety activities. Men and women in the fire and emergency services are the first on the scene of car accidents, they are the first to respond to shootings, they are the first to be there, along with our police and law enforcement professionals, to pick up the pieces and to try to right the wrongs, and they expose themselves day in and day out to the potential of contracting AIDS and other diseases. We need to make sure they are properly protected. It is not enough to ask them to do these things as professionals who are being paid, or professionals who were volunteer. They also must be properly protected and know how they can protect themselves from contracting these contagious disease like AIDS.

The ninth right is the right to expect that the American people will become full partners in the struggle to preserve life and property from the ravages of fire and other disasters. The fire service of this country has the right to expect Members to work with them, not just when there is a disaster, and we who are elected officials can stand in front of a camera and say, "It is a terrible tragedy," and then forget about it for the next 11 months. We need to let them know we will become full partners, we will work with them, whether it is through the legislation, whether it is through the budget process, or giving them the proper recognition they deserve to get the American people on board in this fight that we have, to reduce the absolute embarrassment of America being the most industrialized nation on the Earth today that has the highest incidence of fire loss and fire deaths, because of our lack of understanding of the basic concerns involved with life safety.

The 10th right that the fire service has is the right to celebrate their proud history, the right to celebrate the role they have played for 250 years as the backbone of America. During the 1980's, we, under Ronald Reagan's leadership, celebrate the leadership of our military, and a renewed emphasis on how important our international defenders of freedom are to the rest of the world. I agree with that, and still support that strong defense initiative that was started under Ronald Reagan. However, the 1990's should be the decade of our domestic defenders of our freedoms, and those domestic defenders are the millions of men and women who serve day in and day out as volunteers and as paid individuals, helping to improve their communities. They have a right to celebrate that heritage. This bill of rights will begin to allow them to have that recognition that they certainly deserve.

Now, I would like to go through some of the specific initiatives that we have in the bill of rights. These are not inclusive. There are others that are parts of this, but I will go over the major components of the fire service bill of rights, and I would hope that all of my colleagues, perhaps that are watching this evening, will take it upon themselves to call up and to offer to cosponsor this very significant piece of legislation because of the assistance that it will provide to the millions of firefighters and emergency service responders across America, who will benefit from these initiatives.

The first initiative is a National Hero Scholarship Awards Program. We mentioned that one of the rights of the fire service is the right to have their spouses and their children cared for, if they lose their lives. We have a death benefit fund. This program sets up an endowment that will guarantee a college scholarship to the spouse or child of any firefighter killed in the line of duty. This is something that is a long time coming, that provides a basic reassurance of protection for a firefighter who is injured seriously or eventually dies, from active duty, and wants to have the assurance that their family is going to be properly cared for. This endowment will provide an annual income that will allow Members to provide those scholarships for these family members who remain.

A second initiative is the Hazardous Materials Local Resource Enhancement Program. There is no topic more on the forefront of the minds of the fire service of this Nation than hazardous material. Rather than come up with some cumbersome new program, our goal here is to put resources immediately into the hands of the 32,000 fire departments of this country. This one initiative will put a portable laptop computer in every fire station in America, so that those fire stations locally can put the sitings of hazardous materials in their communities, the types of response that they should apply to the situation involving one of those sites, and will allow them to access national networks like chem track and some of the new initiatives that are going to be coming out in legislation being proposed by my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] as well as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER] and the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS], to come up with a more comprehensive data management system nationally in responding to Hazmat incidents.

However, Mr. Speaker, this will put the computers out there in the fire stations across America, and in effect what it will do is computerize the fire service with one shot.

A third initiative is in the In Search of Excellence research and education program which establishes a one-shot research program, once again an endowment that allows us to provide limited funding support for excellence programs that demonstrate excellence in the area of research on fire technologies, as well as educational initiatives.

The fourth initiative establishes a National Fire Center and Museum. The 10th right in the bill of rights was the right that says the fire service should have the right to celebrate their history, their tradition, and the role they play in our society today. They have no such national focus. The bill will establish a National Fire Center here in Washington, DC. Working in conjunction with the D.C. Fire Department and Chief Ray Alfred we are going to put a model fire station in the Fire Center, and we are going to have a National Fire Museum with memorabilia and with equipment from all over the country that celebrates the important contributions that these men and women have made for America over the last 200 years. In addition, it will have provisions for interns to come in from the major science degree programs to assist in the operation of both the center itself and the museum.

A fourth initiative in the bill of rights is a fire service educational advancement program, and here what we are proposing is to take a limited amount of one-shot funds to establish endowments working in cooperation with the International Association of Firefighters, the International Association of Fire Chiefs, the National Volunteer Fire Council, along with the Black Professional Firefighters to establish endowments so that the interest on that money can be used on a matching basis to provide college scholarships for men and women who want to go on and get their fire science degrees or take advanced studies at a college level in the fire and safety sciences.

The next initiative is the Government Procurement Manual so that the 32,000 fire and emergency service departments across this country can have access to one document that clearly and concisely tells them how they can access surplus Federal property to use locally so that, if we have surplus equipment coming off of our military bases or coming from other Federal installations, that our fire service network gets first crack and knows how to access that equipment in a very quick and efficient manner.

The next initiative provides support for an infectious diseases manual that can be used by fire departments all across the country to acquaint their members on precautions they can take to prevent the members from the possibility of contracting AIDS or other diseases in the course of their work. This will be modeled after a program that has already been established for career law enforcement officers across America. We will simply customize and tailor that program to the fire service.

The next initiative is a very important initiative that hits at the heart of, I think, the second-class nature that the administration in recent years has placed on the fire service of this country, and that is the realignment of the National Fire Administration, the U.S. Fire Administration, to move the National Fire Academy back under the direct jurisdiction of the U.S. Fire Administration. Many in this country, especially those leaders in the fire and emergency services, feel that the National Fire Academy at Emmitsburg has been placed subservient to other interests, and our goal here is to very loudly and clearly send a signal that the National Fire Academy deserves to be put back in its rightful place and to be placed back under the control of the U.S. Fire Administration, giving it the prominence that it had when the President's Commission was established under former President Nixon.

The next initiative deals with access to Federal fire resources, fire training resources. Here we are talking about a commitment on the part of our military where we have bases all over the country providing emergency response training to force them to allow the fire service to have access to those training facilities. As a member of the Committee on Armed Services and the Sea Power Subcommittee, I have worked long and hard to provide 10 computerized fire training simulators to be located across America. I want to make sure that the fire service has access to use those simulators to train their members. I want to make sure that we are using every possible Federal resource available for training to assist those who are paid and volunteers and across America who need training desperately. Also included with this provision is a required study by DOD and the U.S. Fire Administration that would look at Chanute Air Force Base in Rantoul, IL, one of those bases slated for closing in the base closing commission, a base that has been used in recent years by the military, especially the Army and the Air Force, for all of their hands-on fire and emergency services training. What this study will look at is the possibility of taking Chanute at Rantoul and making that an adjunct to the U.S. National Fire Academy where hands-on training could take place, not just for our military and just for our Federal fire forces, but also for the millions of firefighters, both paid and volunteers, across this country.

The next initiative provides model legislation for fire department loan funds. The 32,000 fire departments in America have problems today in buying state-of-the-art apparatus. A new pumper can cost as much as $300,000 or $400,000, an aerial truck as much as $700,000 or $800,000. Smalltown fire departments cannot afford to buy that on their own, but most of them are not asking for handouts. They want the ability to borrow money at competitive rates and to pay it back.

My home State of Pennsylvania has an outstanding example program of providing low-interest money at a reduced cost to the 2,800 fire companies in our State, which they then pay back, to allow them to purchase state-of-the-art fire apparatus. In the history of that program in Pennsylvania there has not been one default on a loan in the fire service, and what I am proposing is that we establish a piece of model legislation that every State can use to establish a loan program and that we include a study for the potential down the road of a national low-interest loan program. Once again, not a grant program, but a set-aside of money that the fire service can borrow at reduced interest rates and then pay back to buy state-of-the-art apparatus and fire equipment.

Finally, the provision in the bill of rights that I am going to outline today is money for burn research. There is no more traumatic experience then to see a young man or a young woman who has been burned in the course of trying to save someone else. We owe it to these proud professionals to make sure that we are putting funds in to do all within our power to rehabilitate burn victims, and this program provides a one-shot, major influx of capital into the nonprofit National Burn Foundation for burn research for new technologies on how we can better treat burn victims, be they firefighters or be they ordinary citizens.

So, my colleagues, what we have here is a comprehensive series of initiatives that will support these heroes of America, these domestic heroes, who have been out there for 250 years defending our towns, our cities, and our localities, whether it be rural, suburban, or urban. It is the least that we can do to assist them.

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that it is not going to cost the taxpayers one dime. It provides for the coin series. The estimates are that we can raise $100 million. We are going to take $80 million of that and turn it right back into the fire service, and one of the little marketing gimmicks that we are exploring is the possibility of having local fire departments across the country who want to assist us in the marketing efforts for the coin series, and, as we have done with other coins, allows them to share the benefits of reaping part of the profit of selling the coins, as we have done in other cases. So, in effect, the local fire departments, especially the volunteers, could actually make money off of selling this coin series that is going to directly benefit them to the tune of $80 million of initiatives.

My colleagues, this is a reality. It is going to be announced nationally tomorrow at a press conference on the steps of the Capitol Building where a number of my colleagues will join me along with the leader of the fire service. It is a jumping-off point. Perhaps we will have some revision and changes, but the key bottom line is that we want to fast-track this piece of legislation to let these people know that no longer are they forgotten, no longer are they out there serving their communities as unsung heroes.

Mr. Speaker, the sleeping giant has awakened in America, and that sleeping giant consists of 3 million men and women who now say they want our assistance, they want our help, and they expect us to respond.

□ 2040

I ask my colleagues to join with me and the other 60 Members who have already indicated that they are going to cosponsor the Benjamin Franklin Memorial Fire Service bill of rights.

THE SPREADING AIDS EPIDEMIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take over 10 minutes, and I want to tell the people at the front desk that I appreciate their working so late tonight so we can have these special orders.

What I want to talk about briefly tonight is the latest information we have on the AIDS epidemic. Each week I try to bring my colleagues up to date and those who are interested up to date on what is going on with the AIDS epidemic.

I was talking to some people in the Cloakroom a few minutes ago and we were talking about some of the AIDS problems, and they said, "Well, it's like a lot of things. If you try to ignore it, it may go away."

The fact of the matter is this is one issue that certainly is not going to go away. As a matter of fact, it is going to get worse and worse and worse as each day, week, and month goes by.

I started talking about this issue about 2 of 3 or 4 years ago trying to keep my colleagues and anyone who is interested aware of how rapidly this disease has been developing. It is becoming the major health issue of the 20th century, and by the 21st century it may be the biggest catastrophe that mankind has ever faced.

In 1983, we had 4,200 cases of AIDS, people dead or dying from AIDS.

By 1984, that had more than doubled to 9,900 cases.

By 1985, it had doubled again to over 20,000 cases.

By 1986, it had gone up to 35,000 cases.

By 1987, it had gone up to 48,139 cases of people dead or dying.

By 1988, it had gone up to 80,538 people dead or dying, and by the end of this year it is projected that we are going to have 130,000 people dead or dying of the AIDS virus.

Now, if you extrapolate these figures out, you will find that the disease is doubling at least every 2 years and in some 2 year periods it is going up by as much as 130 percent.

Now, if you extrapolate these figures out, in 1991 we will have at least 250,000 to 260,000 dead or dying in this country of AIDS, and we could have as many as 280,000.

In 1992, we will have 375,000 minimum, up to 465,000 dead or dying.

By 1993, we will have between half a million and 650,000 dead or dying.

By 1995, just 6 years from now, we will have a million people dead or dying, up to a million and a half.

By 1997, we will have between 2 and 3½ million dead or dying, and by 1999, 10 years from now, before the turn of the century, we will have at least 4 million dead or dying and as many as 8.1 million dead or dying.

Now, those figures are catastrophic. The only thing that even comes close to approaching this kind of a catastrophe is what happened during the bubonic plague in the 14th and 15th centures in Europe when about half the people were wiped out because of that disease.

Now, if this disease becomes an aerosol spread disease, it could be worse than these figures we have so far.

The reason I bring this up tonight is because we need to be aware of what is going on. Everybody thinks it is going to happen to the guy down the block or the guy in the next State, but it is not going to happen to them. Today in the paper, the Baltimore Sun, the front page, the second section, B-1 it says that 2 to 3 percent of the babies born in those hospitals are exposed to HIV. That is the AIDS virus. Two to three percent of the women delivering babies in Baltimore hospitals are HIV infected, which means that between 260 and 400 infants a year are being exposed to the AIDS virus, according to a University Hospital obstretician-gynecologist. That is a terrible statistic.

Not too long ago, it was reported after a national survey that one out of every 500 college students has the AIDS virus. That means that 1 out of every 500 college students has the ability to transmit this disease to everyone with whom they come in contact sexually. That disease is spreading rapidly in the college community, and each one of those people who become infected within a 10- to 20-year period is almost 100 percent sure of dying from AIDS, AIDS-related complex, or basic diseases that take advantage of the immune system being broken down by the AIDS virus.

Now, the most sexually active group in America, or one of the most sexually active groups that we have not talked about, is our teenagers. In a recent study that was reported in the New York Times, it indicates that as many as 1 percent of the young teenagers in this country may have the AIDS virus. In fact, in New York City this article says that from 70 to 1,000 to 3 in 1,000 young people, depending on the population, are infected with the AIDS virus. Well, let us just take that larger figure. If 70 out of 1,000 people, teenagers in that city are infected with the AIDS virus, that is almost 10 percent. That is a tragic figure.

But let us take the lower figure of 1 percent or 1 or 2 percent of the teenagers. As active as these young people are, this AIDS virus will spread at a very rapid rate. If it doubles as we have talked about, as the statistics show that it is going to be doing over the next 2 years and every 2 years after that, then we know that an awfully large percentage of the young people in this country, which is the lifeblood of America, the future of this country, is in jeopardy of dying of the AIDS virus.

Now, the reason I bring this up about the babies tonight, about the college students, about the teenagers, is to point out this is just not a homosexual disease, as has been told to us by many people in this country. This is a heterosexually transmitted disease. It is transmitted through needles in the drug culture. It is transmitted through the homosexual community, and it is transmitted through the heterosexual community. We need to make sure that everyone is aware of that.

No one is safe from the AIDS virus if they are sexually promiscuous or if they are dealing with needles in the drug culture.

Now, many of the so-called experts in the medical profession will say that we should use condoms, that is the only way to be safe from getting AIDS if you are sexually active. The fact of the matter is that condoms may slow down the spread of the disease, but it is no panacea. It is not 100 percent effective. I use the analogy that it is analogous to a person playing Russian roulette with two bullets in a gun instead of six. Your chances are still very great that you are going to get the AIDS virus even if you use the device, and the people of this country ought to know that. Instead of telling on television and through the media of this country that there is such a thing as safe sex, we should be telling them there is such a thing as maybe safer sex, but there is no such thing as safe sex if you involve yourself in an illicit sexual encounter and if you do it continually, you run a very great risk of getting the AIDS virus. There is no such thing as safe sex, outside of a monogamous relationship with one person.

Now, let me just say that I think it is extremely important that we in this body and in the other body get our heads out of the sack and start looking at what is going on around us. The teenagers are being infected with this disease. The babies are being infected with this disease. The college students are being infected with this disease. The adults in this country are being infected with this disease, and it is spreading at a relatively rapid rate, a very rapid rate.

If these extrapolations are accurate, we are going to have 4 million people dead or dying of this terrible disease by 1999. We only have 1.3 million hospital beds in this country. Where are we going to put all these people? How are we going to take care of their health care needs? How are we going to pay for it? These are very important questions that need to be answered.

Now, myself and many of my colleagues are now starting to come up with a comprehensive program that we suggested legislatively in this body and the other body to deal with this horrible pandemic, but so far we have not had any hearings or have been able to get the legislation to the floor for a vote.

So I would like to say to my colleagues tonight, we need a program, a comprehensive program to deal with the AIDS virus which includes education, and I mean accurate education, not just telling young people in this country on television that if you use a condom you are safe from getting the AIDS virus, which is an out and out lie. It might reduce your risk, but it certainly is no panacea and it is not going to protect you 100 percent.

The risk is still there, and it is a very great risk. There is no such thing as safe sex outside of monogamous relationship. We need to educate young people to that. We need to also tell people of this country, in addition to education, that we need to have a contact-tracing program to find out who is spreading this disease and try to convince them to not continue spreading it by going out after they know they have the AIDS virus and having relations with people outside the AIDS community.

That brings me to my third point. In order to tell those people that they have the AIDS virus, in order to help ensure there is contact tracing so we can stop this chain of spread of this terrible disease, we need to have testing. We need to have a routine testing or mandatory testing program for the population of this country. It is economically feasible. The military has done it each and every year with 2 million people in the military, and it can be done for as low as $5 per person, and that includes the ELISA test and the western block test which is almost 100 percent foolproof as far as telling whether a person is really HIV positive or not, positive for the AIDS virus. So we need contact tracing, we need education, we need scientific research, and we need testing.

Until my colleagues come to grips with this, this pandemic is going to continue to spread at a very, very rapid rate. I ask my colleagues each week, and I ask everyone else who is paying attention, are we going to continue this see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil approach toward AIDS, or are we going to do something about it. And each and every day we wait, more people are condemned to death, and more people are at risk for getting this virus.

Listen to these figures, my colleagues. Four million people in this country dead or dying of AIDS by 1999, and as many as 8.1 million. When are we going to act?

I submit to the Members that the evidence is overwhelming that we should act now, and we should act in an expeditious manner. We should think this program out very thoroughly and get the job done. The American people will applaud us for it.

Mr. Speaker, every single poll that has been taken on the AIDS virus as far as testing is concerned and a comprehensive program has the overwhelming support of the people of this country. They realize what we are up against. It is time Congress got in step with the majority of the people of this country to protect the health and the future of the Nation.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. MILLER of Washington, for 20 minutes, on October 31.

Mr. UPTON, for 60 minutes, on October 18, November 1, and November 15.

Mr. WALSH, for 60 minutes, on October 25 and November 8.

Mr. DREIER of California, for 5 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MCNULTY) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. DE LUGO, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 60 minutes, on October 13 and 16.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. DYMALLY and to include extraneous material notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and estimated by the Public Printer to cost $3,168.75.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. WELDON) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter:)

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 1300. An act to amend the Head Start Act to increase the amount authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1990;

H.R. 2788. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 392. Joint resolution designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month;"

H.J. Res. 400. Joint resolution designating October 27, 1989, as "National Hostage Awareness Day;" and

H.J. Res. 401. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1989 as "Country Music Month."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 53 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, October 12, 1988, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1812. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 333(b) of the Consolidation Farm and Rural Development Act to permit county committee certification of eligibility for farm operating loans for periods of up to 2 years; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1813. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to remove the prohibition against charging interest on interest which is less than 90 days overdue in order to facilitate the rescheduling and reamortization of loans made by the Secretary of Agriculture under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1814. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for a time limit of 10 years on servicing water and water disposal grants or industrial development grants made under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1815. A letter from the Director, Congressional Budget Office, transmitting his final sequestration report for fiscal year 1990, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 902; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1816. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting the Department of the Navy's proposed letter(s) of offer and acceptance [LOA] to Japan for defense articles (Transmittal No. 90-05), pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 118; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1817. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to terminate the Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Education, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1818. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting the Department of the Navy's proposed letter(s) of offer and acceptance [LOA] to Japan for defense articles and services (Transmittal No. 90-05), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1819. A letter from the Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a proposed memorandum of understanding [MOU] with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany concerning a joint project for harmonization, development, production, and support of a maritime patrol aircraft (Transmittal No. 04-89), pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 4542(e); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1820. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, transmitting language to authorize $200 million for assistance to Poland drafted as title IV of "Poland and Hungary Democracy Act of 1989"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1821. A letter from the Deputy Director for Collection and Disbursements, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

1822. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director, Collection and Disbursements, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

1823. A letter from the Deputy Administrator, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, transmitting notificaiton of the intention to award a contract for the performance of certain commercial-type functions at the Integrated Systems Laboratory of the National Weather Service, located in Silver Spring, MD, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 1530; to the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology.

1824. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to make uniform the provisions for determining the interest rate on notes issued by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of obtaining funds for the Agriculture Credit Insurance Fund, the Rural Development Insurance Fund, and the Rural Housing Insurance Fund; jointly to the Committee on Agriculture and Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were deliverd to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. DERRICK: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 262. A resolution providing for a motion to dispose of the Senate amendments to the bill H.R. 2978 (Rept. 101-275). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ROYBAL: Committee of conference. Conference report on H.R. 2989 (Rept. 101-276). Ordered to be printed.

MR. UDALL. Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. H.R. 2854. A bill to authorize the exercise of State jurisdiction over a portion of Indian country located in Commanche County, Oklahoma, for certain purposes; with amendments (Rept. 101-277). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI: Committee on Ways and Means. H.R. 3402. A bill to promote political and economic democracy in Poland and Hungary as those countries develop and implement programs of comprehensive economic reform (Rept. 101-278, Pt. 1). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORD of Tennessee:

H.R. 3433. A bill to extend the period during which certain property is required to be placed in service to qualify for transition relief under section 203 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H.R. 3434. A bill to extend the period during which certain property is required to be placed in service to qualify for transition relief under section 203 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STAGGERS:

H.R. 3435. A bill to improve the delivery of water and waste water services in rural areas; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BROOKS:

H.R. 3436. A bill to clarify the application of the antitrust laws to certain agreements imposing territorial limitations on the distribution of trademarked malt beverages for resale; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLINGER:

H.R. 3437. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to encourage the continued exploration for and production of domestic oil and natural gas resources; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA:

H.R. 3438. A bill to make certain improvements with respect to judicial proceedings relating to American Samoa, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Judiciary.

By Mr. GUARINI (for himself, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. FLORIO, MR. HUGHES, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. GRANT, Mr. SHAYS, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. MFUME, Mr. TRAFICANT, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. RITTER, Mr. PALLONE, Mr. DYMALLY, and Mr. ACKERMAN):

H.R. 3439. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

KING-DREW MEDICAL CENTER AND THE LOS ANGELES TIMES

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, recently the Los Angeles Times ran a series of articles about the King-Drew Medical Center—Los Angeles County Martin Luther King, Jr. General Hospital and the Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science—located in the 31st Congressional District, California.

I am hereby submitting a rebuttal, from Dr. Arthur Flemming, F.A.C.S., professor and chairman, Department of Surgery for Members' review:

CHARLES R. DREW UNIVERSITY OF MEDICINE AND SCIENCE, KING-DREW MEDICAL CENTER, MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. GENERAL HOSPITAL, COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES,
October 4, 1989.

Mr. TOM JOHNSON,
Publisher and Chairman, Los Angeles Times, Times Mirror Square, Los Angeles, CA

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: On behalf of the faculty and staff at the King-Drew Medical Center, I am expressing concern over the series of articles by Ms. Claire Spiegel, Times staff writer, published in the Los Angeles Times over a period of 26 days in September 1989.

Many inner city public or county hospitals are frequently located in high crime, drug, and gang activity areas. Common findings in most of these hospitals are underfunding, an overwhelming number of patients, and a concentration of the "sickest of the sick and dying." The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) report is replete with such examples.

In many institutions, the above factors are accepted as logical explanations for the existence of the problems. Despite the fact that we are in a combat hospital during peace time, somehow the level of competence, commitment, and management become the central issues.

We will validate the commitment of many of the faculty. However, it is not my aim to suggest that patient care is optimal, but to present the problems and solutions with compassion and sensitivity for the community we serve. These aspects were not addressed in the articles by the Times.

The editoral statement that ". . . this problem is compounded by egregious administrative failures" is expressed without benefit of knowing the magnitude of the resource deficits, how these deficits impact on the entire medical center complex, or that some of the charges, especially on patient care issues, are not factual.

We wholeheartedly endorse the concept of a very extensive and thorough in-state, out-of-state and national review. We will request the American College of Surgeons Committee on Trauma (ACS-COT) review the King-Drew Medical Center trauma care. The ACS-COT surveyed this program in 1983, preceding our designation as a Level I trauma center, and again some years later.

I am confident that the reviewers will find that the trauma quality assurance program in this institution, which has been carried out on a daily basis for the past six years, demonstrates a commitment that is unparalleled, not only in the State of California, but in the United States. Perhaps then, and only then, can this great injustice, which has been perpetrated on the entire medical center and the people of Watts/Willowbrook, be rectified.

Although there were four Departments that were responsible for the eight cases discussed in the Times' article, these departments were responsible for 185,993 patient visits and/or admissions during the time frame of the review. The absence of newspaper reporting of the full and accurate sequences and conditions of these cases will be amplified.

We are enclosing the signatures of more than 1,300 employees and supporters to emphasize the need for "fair and just" treatment by the Times, the Board of Supervisors, and the Department of Health Services.

We are requesting that you publish the entire enclosure. As of September 28, 1989, Ms. Spiegel had published nine articles on the King-Drew Medical Center. We would like to have an alternate view printed.

Sincerely,
ARTHUR W. FLEMING, M.D., F.A.C.S.,
Professor and Chairman, Department of Surgery.

Enclosure.

RESPONSE TO THE LOS ANGELES TIMES SERIES OF ARTICLES ON THE LOS ANGELES COUNTY MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. GENERAL HOSPITAL AND THE CHARLES R. DREW UNIVERSITY OF MEDICINE AND SCIENCE (KING-DREW MEDICAL CENTER)

(Submitted by Arthur W. Fleming, M.D., F.A.C.S., Professor and Chairman, Department of Surgery)

OVERVIEW

"The obscure we eventually see. The completely obvious it seems, takes longer."—Edward R. Murrow.

Between September 3 and 28, 1989 the Times published nine articles by Claire Spiegel, Times staff writer, pointing out multiple deficiences within the health care system at the Martin Luther King, Jr.-Drew Medical School (King-Drew Medical Center or KDMC). There were also two editorials and one article in the Metro section of the Times wedged in between the articles by Ms. Spiegel.

The articles have had a profound effect on most of the employees at the KDMC as well as on members from the surrounding community and, most regrettably, on the patients themselves. The articles were denigrating, humiliating and demoralizing. The greatest impact, however, is on the individuals who must entrust their lives to us.

There are many physicians, nurses, physician assistants, medical students, technicians, paraprofessionals, and other support staff at the King-Drew Medical Center who have "not only struggled valiantly", but who have sacrificed greatly, worked courageously and performed above and beyond the call of duty. Their efforts have been thwarted by a severe shortage of critical beds, staff and funding; over 100 nurse vacancies; equipment that has not been replaced since the hospital opened; low salaries and difficulty recruiting; difficulty obtaining even basic supplies when it depends upon action outside the institution; and unrelenting stress and burn-out. This occurs all while treating not only an overwhelming number of patients, but a concentration of the "sickest of the sick and dying."

This concern was echoed in the first editorial which stated "There is a risk, in the effort to accelerate reform, that the distinguished commitment of many of the staff will be forgotten." The editor(s) acknowledged that "the hospital's doctors, nurses and technicians are forced to work in the most trying circumstances, many at substandard wages to maintain this vital link in the county public health network."

Given these many obvious reasons for patient care not being optimal, the Times articles used eight carefully selected cases, presented in a theatrical manner, "during a recent two and one-half year period" to attempt to demonstrate that not only was there inadequate supervision, but also a lack of commitment and competence. There was an attempt to extrapolate to the entire institution the lack of commitment on the part of a few staff who reportedly ". . . slept through their shift. . . ."

Of the eight cases discussed by the Times, there were two cases each from the Departments of Emergency Medicine, Neurosciences, OB/GYN and Surgery. During the two and one-half years of the Times' study, there were 185,993 patients treated by these four services. Thus, these 8 cases represent $<0.004\%$ of the total.

While we acknowledge difficulties in recruitment and shortages of staff, the translation by the Times that "there is a lack of highly skilled medical staff" adds insult to injury. If two recent graduates are excluded, 90% (55 of 61) of the surgical department faculty, are board certified. The Department of Surgery includes cardiothoracic surgery, general surgery, ophthalmology, oral and maxillofacial surgery, orthopedic surgery, plastic and reconstructive surgery, and urology.

The editorial in the Times went well beyond our expectations in stating that, "The revelations have a meaning beyond the confines of King" (KDMC). Most importantly, it stated that "They (the revelations) measure the conscious, deliberate, structural underfunding of public medicine in the United States. The nation remains alone among industrialized democracies with a system of health care that excludes from the basic protection substantial numbers of people, an estimated 37 million Americans, including more than 5 million Californians."

We agree that "The state and country are not providing enough money for the hospital. . . ." However, whether "this problem has been compounded by egregious administrative failures" should be determined after thorough evaluation of the impact of the lact of adequate resources on all aspects of patient care and administration are completed.

The editor(s) have very appropriately outlined what is essential for permanent resolutions: replacement for some of the outdated equipment, construction of a new trauma center, closer supervision from the county Department of Health Services and the Board of Supervisors, additional outpatient facilities, and increase in medical staff compensation.

However, unless we pay attention to the human factors—The problems of unrelenting stress, burnout and the inevitable conflicts that arise under these circumstances, we are doomed to recurrent problems. One of our greatest problems is that in the absence of the ability to disseminate factual information expediently, rumors run rampant. Consequently, we are enclosing a fact sheet that will hopefully answer many questions. Perhaps, of equal importance, we wish to offer a new and fresh perspective of what are the real problems.

RELATED FACTS IMPACTING ON HEALTH CARE ISSUES

Nationally

Fact: California has the largest state revenue in the United States—64 Billion in 1986.

Fact: Less is spent on medical care per patient in California than in some of the poorer states.

Fact: Los Angeles County, with a known population of 8.8 million, has a larger population than 42 of the states in the United States.

Fact: The King-Drew Medical Center serves a catchment area of 800,000 to one million.

Fact: If the catchment area for the KDMC was a single city rather than multiple incorporated and unincorporated districts, it would be the 11th largest city in the United States.

Fact: There are several large cities with public hospitals affiliated with respectable medical schools that were ranked by HCFA (Health Care Financing Administration) as having the highest Medicare mortality rates. These include, but are not limited to:

Grady Memorial Hospital—Emory University, Atlanta, GA Population 421,910*

Kings County Hospital Center—Downstate University, Brooklyn, N.Y. Population 2,000,000+

D.C. General Hospital—three medical Schools, Washington, D.C. Population 626,000

Harborview Medical Center—University of Washington, Seattle, WA Population 486,200

Fact: Some hospitals, like Charity Hospital in New Orleans, serve a population of 554,500, yet have a hospital at least three time the size of the KDMC and is affiliated with two medical school faculties.

Fact: *Data from U.S. Bureau of Census, July 1, 1986 estimates.

Fact: HCFA data is from the Los Angeles Times, Sunday, January 15, 1989.

Fact: HCFA officials did not adjust the data to account for race or socioeconomic status because it would have obscured the fact that minority health status, in general, is significantly worse than that of whites.

Fact: Some of the lowest mortality institutions for medicare may admit large numbers of patients who are not very sick to begin with.

Fact: Small numbers may create large statistics—There were only two trauma deaths in the HCFA survey to medicare deaths at the KDMC. However, there were only four trauma patients—thus, there was a 50% mortality rate. The fact that both patients who died had lethal injuries does not enter into the equation. Although the death rate is calculated on the percentage of the total hospital admissions, a low percentage of medicare patients and a small number surveyed could bias the statistics.

Fact: There are approximately 70,000 gang members in Los Angeles. There are only 10,000-15,000 gang members in Chicago and New York.

Fact: There are more housing proejcts in the KDMC catchment area than any other area in the County. The problems with drugs and gang related activities are compounded in these low income areas.

Locally

Fact: A study to be presented next month by the Center for Disease Control (CDC) revealed that the four police districts which comprise the South Central Area have 17% of the cities population but accounted for 51% of the 1988 homicides where the victim was less that 20 years of age.

Fact: Either ethanol, cocaine, or both were found on autopsy in 51% of the homicide victims between the ages of 15 and 34, and in 66% of patients between the ages of 35 and 44 in 1987 in the same study by CDC.

Fact: Approximately 50% of the trauma victims in Los Angeles County are treated at the three County facilities. The remaining 50% are treated at 10 private hospitals.

Fact: The closure of 10 Trauma Centers since 1985 has had a profound impact on the saturation of the county facilities.

Fact: The downgrading of the emergency rooms further saturates the County (public) hospitals.

Institutionally

Fact: Prior to Level I Trauma Center Designation and implementation, a trauma victim in Southcentral Los Angeles would be treated at one of the 10-15 hospitals or 24 hour emergency rooms in the surrounding community.

Fact: Since implementation as a Level I Trauma Center, these same trauma victims are now shunted to the KDMC. Consequently, the number of trauma victims seen has increased over tenfold.

Fact: Also prior to implementation of the trauma system at the KDMC, surgeons were called at the discretion of the emergency room physician to see trauma victims.

Fact: Since implementation as a Level I Trauma Center, surgeons are required to arrive in the emergency room prior to the patients arrival when they are brought in by paramedics. This apparent intrusion by the surgeons has created conflicts in this institution and in others where there are emergency medicine residents.

Fact: The KDMC remains 95-105% occupied at all times.

Fact: By January 1987, the KDMC was already faced with an inability to adequately handle the trauma load for many reasons. This was documented in the Drew Medical Society Journal in November-December 1987. Patients on many occasions had to be recovered on the operating room table since the recovery room, intensive care units, and ward beds were filled.

Case Discussions

Fact: The Times reported that they "gleaned from court records, hospital malpractice claims, and from frustrated medical personnel at King the records of patients treated at King over a recent 2½-year period."

Fact: Of the eight cases discussed by the Times, two were from the Department of Surgery, with both having gunshot wounds (GSW); two were from the Department of Neurosciences and consisted of one trauma (GSW) and one non-trauma case; two were from the Department of OB/Gyn and also consisted of one trauma and one non-trauma case; and two patients with surgical problems were screened through the ER, and likewise consisted of one trauma and one non-trauma case. Thus, the 8 cases had 4 separate departments for their primary care.

Fact: During the 2½ years of the Times' study, there were 185,993 patients treated by these 4 services.

Fact: Thus, these eight cases represent 0.004% of the patients treated on the four services. To be sure, not an everyday, or every week, or every month occurrence.

Fact: The number of patient visits to the ER at the KDMC was 103,113.

Fact: There were 28,006 patient visits and admissions to the trauma services during the 2½ years of the Time's study. Since only 5 of the 8 case presentations by the Time's had trauma, this represents only 0.02%.

Fact: There were 9,441 (9% of the ER visits) patients who had major trauma, and 8,309 (88%) of these could not be discharged or transferred. Of these, there were 2,556 gunshot wounds (GSW's). Three of the cases represented had GSW's. This represents 0.1% of the GSW's. All three of the GSW's presented by the Times survived. There are many patients in the United States and Los Angeles who received similar injuries who end up in the cemetery because they did not receive the prompt attention of a trauma surgeon/trauma team.

Fact: There were 1,132 (12% of the major trauma) cases discharged or transferred from the ER after a period of observation, usually up to six hours. Many of these patients would have been admitted for observation if there had been intensive care beds and nursing staff for monitoring these patients.

Fact: An additional 18,565 patients had minor injuries and were justifiably discharged to be followed in the surgical clinics (number above is actually patient visits to the surgical clinics. Also, figure does not include orthopedic or neurosurgery clinic visits).

Fact: During the period of the Times' study, there were 36,282 mothers/babies and 4,065 hospitalized gynecological admissions. These figures do not include pregnant females who were admitted but discharged prior to delivery, or admitted on multiple occasions. Also it does not include gyn clinic visits.

Fact: The reviewers did not have complete charts to review. Even if they could have reviewed complete charts, events that occur may do so over seconds or fractions of a second and may be interpreted differently based on one's own experience and assessment of the situation. Thus, statements made about the quality of care without having talked to the individuals involved or having never been in the institution, may be flawed from the onset.

A summary of the case reviews is attached at the end.

Introduction

"Oh, how we revere official statistics, those precise, seemingly authoritative numbers that purportedly reflect realities beyond personal knowledge: . . . Not often examined is whether the numbers do indeed approximate reality. When that's done, they are often found to be so plainly inaccurate or statistically bizarre that their acceptance suggest a gullibility epidemic or a national hunger for assurance that we really know what's going on out there."—Daniel Greenberg, Los Angeles Times, Tuesday, September 12, 1989.

On September 3-6, 1989 the Times published four consecutive articles by Claire Spiegel, Times staff writer, raising concerns about "poor administration, a lack of commitment and competence on the part of some doctors, and a severe shortage of space, staff and funding to adequately deal with the hospital's increasing patient load at the Martin Luther King, Jr.-Drew Medical School." These four articles were followed by an editorial on September 7, 1989, another article by Ms. Spiegel on September 13, 1989, another editorial on September 15, 1989.

Ms. Spiegel quotes six emergency room physicians, three of whom finished their residency at the KDMC over fourteen months ago and left and State, one who finished the residency program recently, and two who are still residents; one surgeon who left in June 1989, and two full-time faculty—one an infectious disease specialist, and the other a pathologist—to substantiate her points.

There are now many individuals who are self-appointed societal judges on the care rendered at the KDMC. However, many are not qualified to do so because: 1) they are not in the clinical arena of acute emergency room or trauma care, but rather see the outcomes and try to extrapolate the facts; 2) they were at the KDMC one or more years ago and interpreted that they still know what goes on in the whole hospital; 3) they had a friend or relative who was treated at KDMC; or 4) they were given a set of circumstances and were asked to comment, never having been physically within the confines of the institution.

Thus, to appropriately address the published issues, we feel that it is extremely important to discuss where we started, where we are and where we would like to be. Even those who think they know the KDMC might benefit from a review of the "BACKGROUND."

Background

Prior to the hospital's inception, the "California Task Force to Investigate the 1965 Watts Riots (McCone Commission)" noted that this community experienced the highest adult mortality and morbidity, the highest fetal death rate, and the largest degree of adolescent pregnancy in the county. Which hospital(s) do we blame this on?

To address these concerns, the Department of Public Health concluded that a 394-bed acute general hospital was needed. The proposed Southeast General Hospital was to be located at 120th Street and Wilmington Avenue in the unincorporated community of Willowbrook.

The Los Angeles County Southeast General Hospital was renamed the Los Angeles County-Martin Luther King, Jr. General Hospital before opening its doors in March 1972.

In recognition of the inter-institutional collaboration, with the Charles R. Drew Postgraduate Medical School, Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors named the complex the "King/Drew Medical Center" (KDMC) on May 1, 1982.

To give credit to the graduation of the first medical students in 1985 and the multiple other academic programs, especially in allied health, the Charles R. Drew Postgraduate Medical School's name was changed to the Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science in 1987. The name of the complex remains the King/Drew Medical Center, and in this article will be referred to as the KDMC.

The Los Angeles County-Martin Luther King, Jr./Drew Medical Center serves a residential population of over 800,000 persons according to the 1985 U.S. census. Many believe that with the many undocumented persons in southern California that the hospital serves a population which is closer to a million. Sixty percent of those persons seeking care at KDMC are Medi-Cal recipients who present themselves at the hospital because of episodic injuries, rather than in search of preventive medicine. Only 7% of the population are Medi-care recipients.

Since its inception, the Medical Center has experienced an exponential growth serving some 3.9 million persons in both inpatient and outpatient services. Occupancy rates on all services range from 91-105%! The general hospital daily census has risen from an average of 255 in 1982, to 362 in 1989 with no appreciable change in net county cost (supportive tax dollars).

In recent years, the workload facing the already overburden Medical Center (i.e., 24,000 admissions annually) was exacerbated by the frequent and continuous stream of private hospital closures and emergency room downgrading. KDMC now represents 100% of all the acute care beds in its former health services planning area as a result of these closures.

Fifty percent of the Level I trauma care in Los Angeles County has fallen on the public sector. National attention has been focused on the "deterioration" of the emergency services network in Los Angeles County.

The Board of Supervisors in May, 1988 concurred that fortifying the public health sector in general and KDMC in particular was of utmost urgency. Thus, they authorized the Department of Health Services to diligently pursue the construction of the "freestanding" KDMC Trauma Center, complete with diagnostic radiology and intensive care provisions. It was further recognized by the Department of Defense, that KDMC is experiencing "war-like" conditions during peace time!

Trauma Management From 1972 to 1983

Prior to the designation and implementation of Level I trauma centers in Los Angeles in December 1983, a patient suffering major trauma would be taken to one of the 98 hospitals with 24-hour emergency rooms (ERs) in the County. Since the case load was spread over the 98 different emergency rooms, it was rare for any ER, other than the country hospitals and a few select centers, to have more than 100 cases per year.

When an individual suffered trauma in the area surrounding the KDMC, he or she would also be taken to one of the 10 to 15 hospitals having 24-hour ERs (Centinela, Daniel Freeman, Dominguez Valley, St. Francis, California, Century [Broadway], West Adams [Los Angeles Doctors' Hospital], etc.). Patients suffering from blunt trauma could usually be stabilized in the emergency room, appropriate test(s) ordered, and consultants obtained over the next few hours. Both the hospital and the physicians were reimbursed, and since any ER would only receive patients directly from the area surrounding it, no ER was overwhelmed. Likewise, in most hospitals a surgeon on-call frequently took call from home and was under no obligation to return to the hospital. However, they would probably do so if he or she were called back on rare occasions.

In the event the patient had penetrating trauma (gunshot wound, stab wound, or shotgun wound) attempts at resuscitation usually took two distinct pathways. If resuscitative fluids could be administered faster than the patient was bleeding internally, then the patient could be stabilized and transferred to the KDMC provided the on-call surgeon from that particular hospital would not return. However, if internal bleeding was more rapid than blood and resuscitative fluids could be administered and there was no surgeon present, then the patient would die in the emergency room. The records would simply show that the patient had a mortal wound and could not be resuscitated. Regardless of the outcome, both the hospital and the ER physician were paid for whatever services they provided.

The scenario was quite similar at the KDMC, especially in the 1979 to 1983 time frame, when the emergency room physicians residency program was growing and becoming increasingly popular.

An individual with penetrating or blunt trauma was resuscitated and evaluated exclusively by the ER physician at the KDMC. If successful, the surgical resident was called. The surgical resident, on seeing a well resuscitated patient, would then contact the anesthesiologist who would arrange for an operating room. The time that it would take to get the patient into the OR was variable and dependent somewhat upon the perceived stability of the patient. The whole process could take one to four hours.

If, on the other hand, the rate of bleeding was more rapid than blood or fluids could be administered, the patient could go into shock and then the surgeon on-call would be paged. The timing of when to call the surgeon was entirely at the discretion of the ER physician. Even under optimal conditions and good working relationships between ER physicians, surgeons and anesthesiologists, there were inordinate delays as a rule in getting trauma patients to the operating room. This should not be construed as a criticism against the KDMC, but rather the modus operandi for most institutions in America and probably still is for most that are not designated as trauma centers.

IMPACT OF TRAUMA CENTER DESIGNATION

The request for proposals as Level I trauma centers were sent out on February 3, 1983. As a part of the application, we had to assess the number of major trauma cases seen in the previous year. Although we extrapolated that we saw approximately 500 to 700 major cases per year, on the basis of monthly reviews between March and December 1983, we saw an average of 22 major cases per month. This did not include transfers or specialty cases.

When the KDMC began functioning as a Level I Trauma Center on December 15, 1983, there were three distinct steps taken: first and foremost, surgeons were to be in the emergency room when the patient arrived; secondly, staff surgeons, who previously could take call from home and come in when called, had to now stay in-house when on-call; and thirdly, surgical residents were placed on-call every other night.

During our first month as a trauma center, the number of trauma cases increased threefold over the month prior to Level I Trauma Center designation. Prior to the closure of the first Level I trauma center in Los Angeles, the trauma caseload had gradually increased over tenfold by 1986.

I reported in the Drew Medical Society Journal in November-December 1987:

"Thus by January, 1987, King/Drew was already faced with an inability to adequately handle the trauma load for many reasons. This is manifested by (1) overwhelming of our physical plant to such a degree that on many occasions, patients have to be recovered on the operating room table since the Post-Anesthesia Recovery Room (PAR) and the Surgical Intensive Care Unit (SICU) are filled; (2) patients who routinely require a SICU bed are triaged prematurely to ward beds; (3) cancellation of elective cases because of trauma cases or a lack of adequate nursing staff to run the operating rooms, thus increasing the acuity of the patients in-house; and (4) by chronic, unrelenting nursing shortages as a result of inadequate compensation and extremely stressful working conditions. All of these factors contribute to the requirement for a 40-hour work day for surgical residents.

During the period from July 13 to July 17, 1987 all elective surgical procedures were cancelled at King because the surgical intensive care units and a 4-bed step-down unit were filled with patients that could not be moved to the wards. Consequently, patients in the PAR could not be removed to the intensive care units and patients had to undergo emergency surgery they had to stay on the operating room table until fully recovered from anesthesia, following which they were sent directly to the wards.

The problems were compounded in the SICU because of nursing shortages. The 12-bed SICU requires a minimum of six nurses per 8/hours shift to staff at a 1:2 ratio (nurse:patient). On some shifts, 6 nurses would not be staffed, thus requiring either (a) nurses spending 16 hour shifts, (b) reducing the number of beds occupied, or (c) shifting nurses from other areas in the hospital. This in turn creates further stress on the individuals involved and tends to exacerbate the overall frustrations and problems that exist."

By August 1989, 10 of the original 23 trauma centers had pulled out of the trauma network.

Since becoming a Level I Trauma Center (December 1983-July 1989), there have been 18,346 patients who were seen in the ER for trauma and could not be discharged. There have been over 2,000 patients with criteria for major trauma who were seen in the ER, observed for a period of time, and discharged. There have been an additional 27,500 patients with minor injuries who have been treated in the ER initially and followed in the surgical clinics.

During the two-and-a-half year study referenced by the Times article, there were 9,441 trauma cases. Of these, there were 2,556 gunshot wounds.

An article, recently published in the Journal of Thoracic and Cardiovascular Surgery (97:119-125, 1989), reported on a twelve-years' experience of penetrating wounds of the chest. This study covered a period between April 1972 and March 1984. Of the 1,109 patients with penetrating injuries to the chest, hospitalized at the KDMC, there were 105 cardiac injuries.

In comparison, we have seen more cardiac injuries in the last 18 months than were seen the previous 12 years. In fact between 1985 and 1988, 1,106 patients with thoracic injuries were seen.

The epidemiology of homicides in the city of Los Angeles will be presented in Europe next month (October 1989) in a paper by epidemiologists from the Center for Disease Control. The study shows that the four police districts that comprise the south-central area have 17% of the city's population, but account for 51% of the 1988 homicides where the victim was less than 20 years of age. Also of importance is the fact that over 50% of the homicide victims used alcohol or cocaine, or both, prior to their demise.

The Times' articles used the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) data to help point out the KDMC mortality rate. The HCFA report also indicated that public hospitals in many major cities also have the highest mortality rates: Grady Memorial Hospital/Emory University in Atlanta; Detroit Receiving Hospital-University Health Center/Wayne State University in Detroit; District of Columbia General Hospital/three medical schools in Washington, D.C.; Kings County Hospital Center/Downstate University in Brooklyn, N.Y.; and Harborview Medical Center/University of Washington in Seattle.

It is not common knowledge that the entire HCFA report was based on a sample of only 48 deaths from the KDMC. However, since there were 28,554 admissions, 7% of which were Medi-Care patients, it was extrapolated that our death rate was 2.4%. Likewise, there were only two trauma deaths in the entire sample by HCFA; but because there were only four total trauma patients, the mortality was 50% (for trauma), thus, contributing to distortion of the overall results.

Positive Attributes

Many of the positive things that have occurred at the KDMC have been ignored by Ms. Spiegel in her goal to present revelations.

For instance, there was no acknowledgement of the fact that the Chairman of the Department of OB/GYN, Dr. Ezra Davidson, has been elected as the President-Elect of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology. This is a one-year position, following which he will ascend to the Presidency of that organization. This will be the first time a Black has been chosen for that office. Instead, one obstetrical case with trauma and one gynecological case were presented.

During the 2½ year timeframe of the review by Ms. Spiegel, Dr. Davidson supervised a staff that admitted over 18,000 obstetrical patients to the hospital who delivered. When one counts those patients who were admitted for complications or who were admitted on more than one occasion, then the figure comes closer to 20,000 patients admitted.

In addition, Dr. Davidson also supervises the faculty and residents who cared for over 4,000 gynecological cases. Thus, the two cases reported by Ms. Spiegel represented only 0.005% and 0.02% complication rate for obstetrics and gynecology, respectively. Although the two cases presented were the absolute most dramatic cases seen during the timeframe of the report, there were many details that were left out of the presentation by Ms. Spiegel (see Administrator's report—page 15-24).

Dr. George Locke, a nationally recognized expert in epilepsy, is the recipient of a $2.5 million dollar grant, which is one of the largest awards ever conferred by the National Institutes of Health for conducting a research program designed to prevent, or reduce epilepsy that is caused by serious head injury. Due to a major disparity in salaries for surgeons in general and neurosurgeons in particular, it has been difficult to replace a faculty member who left in January 1989.

Dr. Fleming was recently re-elected as President of the Society of Black Academic Surgeons. In addition, Dr. Fleming is one of only four surgeons to be appointed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the Advisory Committee for Injury Prevention and Control in the Centers for Disease Control.

Furthermore, when Ms. Spiegel visited Dr. Fleming's house unannounced on Sunday night, March 5, 1989, she was well aware that the residency program in General Surgery would undergo a site survey on March 8, 1989. On June 15, 1989, the program received full accreditation. The program was also approved for ten (10) additional residents in recognition of our need to balance service and education.

A Trauma/Critical Care Program was implemented in July 1988 to augment the quality and continuity of patient care of the trauma team. The first three fellows graduated in July 1989.

The need to increase manpower in order to maintain quality patient care led to the alternative of establishing a Surgical Residency Program for Physician's Assistants. A Physician Assistant Postgraduate Surgical Residency Program was started in September 1988 and graduated its first three Surgical Physican's Assistants in July 1989. The program is the first of its kind on the West Coast. Regulations and standards are set by the State of California.

Since the current trauma load at the King-Drew Medical Center has dominated the surgical experience for surgical residents for the past 5 years, we sought approval from the Surgeon General of the U.S. Army to allow individuals from approved residency programs in the United States Army to do trauma rotations at the King-Drew Medical Center. An affiliation between two military surgical programs and the KDMC was begun in July 1989.

The large volume of trauma seen in the King-Drew Medical Center by the General Surgery Residents required that residents be recalled from various rotations to provide patient care. This strategy jeopardized our obtaining full accreditation of our program and created concerns that we would not be able to turn out well-rounded surgical residents. Although patient care is and will remain our priority, we were searching for a balance between service and education.

After establishing the Trauma/Critical Care Fellowship Program, the Physician's Assistants Postgraduate Surgical Residency Program, and rotations with two military hospitals, we were able to re-establish rotations which were stopped in 1984. Rotations have been reinstated on neurosurgery, anesthesiology, medicine, and orthopedics in July 1989. The isolation and stress from lack of rotations have been destructive and mortifying.

Solutions

There is uniform agreement that gaining adequate resources in many areas will be a major factor in our ability to render optimal care. However, a caution must be issued. The frequently quoted "Health Care Finance Administration (HCFA) Medical Mortality Report", which was based on a "sample" of the reported Medi-Care Deaths, would be quoted very differently if other essential factors were known, i.e., the case mix; incidence of drug or alcohol abuse, or both; the biomedical, environmental and sociocultural factors; along with the level of poverty and volume of gang violence (innocent bystanders as victims). None of these factors, which are all known to influence outcome, can be controlled by physicians, administrators, or the Board of Supervisors.

However, if we do not realize all the forces and interactions that led to a public display of our problems in order to gain economic support, then we're doomed to failure. The one area that neither the Times Staff Writer nor the editor(s) could understand is the human factor: the stress of being in a war that is not called a war; the tremendous emotions that are exhibited by all the individuals in the different Departments and Divisions that are stressed to the limits during everyday activities in an emergency hospital; the conflicts that inevitably develop under such circumstances where the casualties keep coming regardless of the saturation of the system; and the struggle for a piece of the pie when space, personnel and resources are so scarce. When one adds to this that the salaries or the surgical specialties are in the less than the 20th percentile for faculty in the United States, one must understand the tremendous dedication and devotion that exist. Furthermore, it is amazing that 25% of the 149 full-time attending physicians have been faculty for 15 years or more. An additional 17% have been faculty for 10 years or more.

Summary

Ms. Spiegel has done a great injustice to the employees of the KDMC and to the patients it serves by presenting a distorted, misleading, misrepresented, exaggerated, view when, in actuality, we have struggled valiantly to treat an unusual case-mix, and an overwhelming number of patients, with inadequate resources.

LAC-MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR./DREW MEDICAL CENTER TIMES' ARTICLE, SEPTEMBER 3-5, 1989

ADMINISTRATOR'S REPORT

Times Article Number 1—"Hospital: A Crisis in Critical Care"

The September 3, 1989 Times article purported the clinical misadventures of several patients incurring treatment at the LAC-Martin Luther King, Jr./Drew Medical Center. The allegations presented have been restated for ease of review and have been assessed and analyzed by the Hosptial's Medical Director, Dr. James G. Haughton and the Chiefs of Surgery and Neurosurgery, as well as the Vice Chairman of Ob/Gyn. The Hospital's findings are indicated along with each allegation.

The findings of fact are as follows:

Times Allegation Number 1: Quality of Health Care Provided at King/Drew Medical Center

Case #1: The Times reported that 18-year-old, ———, "* * * was rushed to KDMC on December 2, 1988 after a bullet fired from a passing car tore through her neck, pierced her jawbone, lacerated her tongue and blinded her in the eye." Medical staff performed a cricothyroidotomy and in so doing cut both her jugular veins triggering a massive hemorrhage.

Hospital's Response to Case #1:

The patient arrived at KDMC with the above noted injuries. Her condition deteriorated soon after arrival and she appeared to be in a semi-stuporous but agitated condition with the development of respiratory distress and hypoxia. The surgeon attempted a cricothyroidotomy in the E.R. that was abandoned in favor of oral intubation because of the patients enhanced and violent response to the pain from the incision. The patient, who had been lethargic and in respiratory distress, responded by jerking her head causing the extended incision. The anterior jugular veins which were laying adjacent to the midline were severed, however, the size of the incisions were so small that bleeding could be controlled by simply applying finger pressure.

The patient was taken to the operating room where a tracheostomy was successfully completed and ophthalmological and oral surgeries were successfully performed.

During the entire series of procedures, the patient required only 3 units of packed red cells. The patient's subsequent course was uneventful and the patient was discharged 9 days later to a Maxicare facility in stable and satisfactory condition.

Case #2: The Times stated that Ms. ——— underwent routine surgery for the removal of an ovarian cyst; however, during surgery her colon was accidentally cut and improperly repaired causing a second operation which was also unsuccessful. She subsequently died on 2/1/89.

Hospital's Response to Case Number #2: This case was reviewed by the medico-legal staff and is presently under investigation by Professional Risk Management. The circumstances and events warranted the submission of the case for review as part of the Hospital's ongoing clinical assessment of care. It should be noted that based upon the medical review, it was determined that this case was not a routine surgery.

Case #3: The Times indicated that this patient was rushed to the KDMC ER as a gunshot (GSW) to the chest. The ER physician, in an attempt to perform a thoracotomy, cut through the chest cavity severing the muscle from the rib cage without anesthesia. The patient recalls the incident in vivid detail. Outside medical professional opinions suggested that the thoracotomy was not necessary since the patient's blood pressure and consciousness were acceptable.

Hospital's Response to Case #3: This 20-year-old patient was admitted to the ER with a through-and-through thoraco-abdominal gunshot wound (The bullet entered the left chest, travelled through the left and right diaphragms, and exited the right chest). Due to an irregular ventricular rhythm, neck vein distention, an elevated CVP, and a decreasing level of consciousness, the attending staff interpreted that the patient had cardiac tamponade and instructed the anesthesiologist and the surgical resident to intubate the patient and do an emergency room thoracotomy simultaneously.

The simultaneous resuscitative efforts of rapid fluid infusions, the stimulus from an attempted oral endotracheal intubation, and the thoracotomy incision gave the patient the necessary boost to markedly increase his blood pressure, to improve the perfusion to the brain, and to respond to pain. Within twenty-five minutes, the patient was in the operating room where an abdominal exploration was performed. During surgery, it was also noted that the bullet went straight through the liver as well.

Following post-operative care, the patient was found to have had a history of irregular ventricular rates coupled with routine drug and alcohol consumption. Retrospectively, these factors played a role on the interpretation of the status of the patient at the time of surgery.

Case #4: The Times reported the arrival of a 27-year-old woman on the night of March 29, 1988 suffering from meningitis or hydrocephalus (swelling of the brain). KDMC physicians were to perform a ventriculostomy to relieve the cranial pressure; however, she languished in the ER from 2 a.m. to 7 a.m. before a neurosurgeon arrived. By the time the neurosurgeon arrived and examined the patient, she was brain dead.

Hospital response to case #4: This patient had a history of headaches over several weeks and, upon admission to the ER on the evening of March 29, 1988, showed signs of meningitis. A neurological consultation was performed after a CT scan revealed asymmetrical ventricular dilation. The neurosurgical house-office discussed the findings with the senior neurosurgeon on-call, and given the chonicity of the process, the patient was scheduled for elective ventriculostomy to relieve the pressure the next morning.

Because there were no neurosurgical or general surgical intensive care beds available, the patient was retained in the ER. During the entire stay, the patient, though lethargic, was verbally responsive. Suddenly, the patient lapsed into a coma with fixed pupils no brain stem responsiveness and was declared clinically brain dead.

Elective scheduling of the ventriculostomy or shunt procedure in this case was a reasonable medical judgment given the fact that this patient was conscious and verbalizing. The precipitous onset of profound coma and brain death was an exceptional clinical course, inasmuch as this patient apparently did not undergo the step-wise loss of neurological function which would have allowed for timely surgical intervention.

Case #5: A 20-year-old woman was abducted and shot in the head after being gangraped and dumped at 99th Street and Figueroa. The Times reports that she was subsequently taken to KDMC where she did not receive prompt attention by the neurosurgeon. She lingered through the night until a general surgeon arranged to have her airlifted to UCLA where she underwent a five-hour surgery.

Hospital's response to case #5: This patient was admitted by ambulance with a history of having been abducted at gun point, gang-raped and shot while attempting to escape. The patient's examination revealed a GSW to the neck and the base of the mid-occipital skull. Patient was alert, oriented, and had no focal or lateralizing neurological signs or deficits as well as a Glasgow Coma Scale of 15 (neurologically intact).

Skull x-rays revealed a gunshot wound to the head. CT head scan showed the bullet to have traversed the back of the head and was now lodged in the right lateral ventricle. The patient, however, was in no immediate danger. Because of the gunshot wound to the neck, an esophagram was performed and was normal. Before surgery could be performed at KDMC, the patient and her family requested that she be transferred to UCLA Medical Center. The KDMC Chairman of Neurosurgery personally examined the patient in the emergency room and concurrred with her intact neurological status. He contacted the Neurosurgery Department at UCLA, reviewed the patient's condition and x-ray findings. Transportation was arranged and the patient was subsequently transferred by helicopter.

The patient, we understand, was successfully operated on eight hours after arrival at UCLA Medical Center. It is important to note that secondary transfer will only be authorized if it poses no harm to the patient while en route.

Case #6: Mr. ——— was scheduled for routine out-patient surgery to repair a hernia. He entered the Medical Center on April 12, 1989 and died on April 26, 1989 from a post-surgical infection of his wound even though he repeatedly returned to the emergency room for assistance.

Hospital response to case #6: This case was reviewed by the hospital's medico-legal section and is presently under advisement by Professional Risk Management as an unexplained clinical misadventure.

Case #7: The Times reported that Ms. ——— who was eight months pregnant, was seen in the ER on March 10, 1987 and evaluated by KDMC physicians. Orders for admission to the obstetrical ward were written and fetal monitoring was requested to safeguard the unborn child. After twelve hours she had not been admitted and the infant was later determined to have died.

Hospital response to case #7: This patient, who was eight months pregnant, arrived at the ER at approximately 4 p.m. on 3/10/87 as a victim of an auto vs. auto accident. Because she was the driver of one of the vehicles, an extensive evalution of the patient was carried out to rule-out internal injuries as well as skeletal damage. Skull, chest, and spinal x-rays and extensive laboratory procedures were performed. Surgical, obstetrical, and radiological consultations were obtained.

Throughout all these procedures the focus of attention was on the mother since renal damage was suspected and the fetal heart rate was normal.

Radiological consultation recommended that an IVP be done to rule-out renal damage. The patient was transferred to Labor & Delivery where fetal monitoring was to be done while the patient was being prepared and scheduled for the IVP. On arrival at L&D, examination revealed that the fetal heart tones and fetal motion had ceased. The patient was sent to radiology for the IVP and when that was found to be normal, labor was induced and delivery was effectuated. On delivery, 40% abruption of the placenta was found and the fetal demise was confirmed. At all times the emphasis was on saving the life of the mother.

Case #8: Ms. ——— was seen at KDMC following a traffic accident on November 20, 1989. She was examined by ER physicians and released with instructions to take aspirin for pain. She later lost control of her bowels, became unconscious and was rushed back to KDMC. She died shortly thereafter due to massive internal bleeding.

Hospital's Response to Case #8: This was a 74-year-old woman who had been involved in an automobile accident as the driver. She gave an account of the accident indicating that she was wearing her seatbelt at the time. Upon arrival to KDMC she complained of pain to the right hip. She had a past history of arthritis and hypertension for the last 5 years. Tenderness was noted in the evaluation of the patient's hip and x-rays were taken of the lumbosacral spine which were later determined to be negative. The patient was discharged with instruction to take Advil with Ibuprofen for pain.

Mrs. ——— did return within 12 hours to the ER in shock and experienced cardiac arrest shortly after arrival. All attempts to resuscitate her were unsuccessful. The autopsy report by the coroner indicated that she died from intra-abdominal hemmorrhage relating to a small laceration of the liver experienced during the accident. Continued bleeding from the laceration of the liver brought about Mrs. ——— demise.

Times' allegation #2: The Times provided a series of reasons for the clinical misadventures among which were: (1) severe shortages of staff, (2) lack of modern equipment, (3) lack of critical care beds, (4) lack of commitment by the Medical Staff, and (5) lack of competence of the Medical Staff.

Hospital's response to allegation #2: KDMC has, since its inception, become known for its Obstetrical and Trauma Care, in that it ranks among the top three providers of such care, in the State of California. KDMC has the largest volume of true trauma cases in the County of Los Angeles and is noted as being second only to LAC-Woman's Hospital in the area of OB services. Trauma care constitutes 60% of all surgical admissions to the facility routinely, while OB care exceeds the hospital's budgeted limits by 18% (i.e., 7,200 deliveries/year budgeted vs. 8,480/year actual).

1. For reasons of recruitment, KDMC has incurred a vacancy factor of 15% in the registered nurse classifications (i.e., 650 R.N. positions—100 vacancies). Through its affiliation agreement with local colleges, it has maintained the ability to hire nurse interim permittees (nurses awaiting State certification and licensure) to fill those "hard to recruit positions", i.e., registered nurses.

2. In 1988, the Board of Supervisors appropriated $10.1 million for new equipment based upon the hospital's annual assessment of its equipment replacement needs. Virtually all of the equipment has arrived and has been placed on operation.

3. KDMC is licensed for 29 critical care beds, 6 coronary care beds and 10 neonatal beds. In 1987, 4 neurosurgical beds were opened, and in 1988, 16 monitored telemetry beds were activated. Of the 35 medical/surgical intensive care beds, 31 are available for patient admission based upon nurse staffing. Board authorization to pursue the creation of a Trauma Center in support of this "indispensable part of the county's health care network" will allow for 24 shock and intermediate care beds as an augmentation to the present designation of critical care beds.

4. The commitment of the faculty is best illustrated by their respective tenure at the Medical Center. Twenty-five percent of the 149 attending physicians have been faculty members at KDMC for 15 years or more. An additional 17% have been faculty for 10 years or more. In most cases their entire county experience has been devoted to clinical care at King/Drew.

5. Medical competence of the KDMC physicians is reported through the Medical Staff review by the JCAHO and CMA as well as the review of the various residency training programs. Full accreditation and/or certification has been received from those regulatory agencies. (1987—JCAHO, various dates for the ACGME.)

Times allegation #3: The Department of Emergency Medicine at KDMC lacks supervision and accountability by qualified senior attending physicians. Specific reference is made to: (1) No ER Quality Assurance Program, (2) Review of HCFA Medi-Care Mortality Data—KDMC ranked 50 out of 5,577 hospitals with the highest death rate, (3) $27 million dollars in equipment unmet needs, (4) the ER is a "Combat Duty", (5) full-time physicians devote more time in private practice which detracts from county responsibilities.

Reasons given for ER observation were based on a review of 12 non-randomly selected cases over a 2½ year period.

Hospital's response to Times' Allegation #3:

1. The Department of Emergency Medicine has been reviewed over a ten (10) year period by the Residency Review Committee, American College of Surgeons, and has been re-certified without program interruption based upon the level of training and supervision offered. Additional areas of review include quality assurance monitoring and problem-solving, workload indicators, didactic instruction, faculty involvement, etc.

2. Refer to Times Allegation #4 for details.

3. Refer to previous account of equipment purchases for hospital's equipment unmet needs—Times' Allegation #2, Section 2.

4. "Combat Duty"! Unlike any other institution in peace time, injuries received by KDMC have been found by the Department of Defense to simulate actual "war-like conditions". As such, KDMC has signed an agreement to train military surgeons through its Trauma Center and Emergency Room in the treatment of these life-threatening injuries.

5. A recent assessment of private practice involvement by KDMC faculty indicated that 19.4% of the full-time faculty have such an arrangement for which they are engaged 20 hours or more. Outside employment for any county employee can not exceed 24 hours/week. Further, these persons have disclosed their involvement as directed by County ordinance.

Times' allegation #4: Death rates at KDMC exceed average and are higher than other county acute facilities

The HCFA Medi-Care Mortality Report, which was based upon a sample of the reported Medi-Care deaths indicated that KDMC had a gross death rate of 2.4% while LAC-USC incurred a rate of 1.5% and Harbor-UCLA observed a rate of 1.7%. To further compound the issue, KDMC was purported as having a higher Emergency Room death rate which exceeds the other acutes' combined.

Hospital's response to allegation #4: A comparison between the county acute facilities was derived by converting the percentge of deaths to the actual deaths incurred. The data is as follows:

MEDICARE DEATHS AT 3 COUNTY ACUTES

Facility	Total admissions	Percent of Medicare	Death rate (percent)	Actual deaths
KDMC	28,554	7.0	2.4	48
Harbor-UCLA	26,556	14.0	1.7	63
LAC-USC	76,403	11.0	1.5	126

Percentage calculations that do not take into account the aggregate population base are misleading. Actual Medi-Care deaths at KDMC, based upon the applied Medi-care population are less at KDMC than the other acutes (KDMC: 48, Harbor: 63, LAC-USC: 126). HCFA failed to expand its sample size to adjust to the limited percent of Medi-Care patients served at KDMC.

References to the Emergency Room deaths at KDMC for 1988 revealed a total of 457 fatalities. It is important to note that 70% of those deaths became Coroner's Cases.

Moreover, all pre-hospital care deaths, i.e., patients whose vital signs are absent and/or resuscitation measures fail to promote any patient reaction, must be declared dead by a physician. As such, all pre-hospital care deaths are to be taken to the Emergency Room where death is declared by the physician on duty. These cases are often classified as Coroner's Cases and are more often than not DOAs.

By definition: Section 10250 of the Health and Safety Code provides that—"a physician . . . shall immediately notify the coroner when he or she has knowledge of a death which occurred by injury or accident, where death was caused by a criminal act, or when the physician is unable to state the cause of death."

Some 329 KDMC Emergency Room deaths were caused by criminal act or violent trauma for 1988! Ninety percent (90%) of those were full arrest or DOAs.

Times' allegation #5: Neurosurgeons are unavailable at KDMC and most of the workload is performed by the only full-time attending physician, the Chief of Neurosurgery.

Hospital's response to allegation #5: The Department of Neurosurgery opened a four-bed neurosurgery intensive care unit in 1987. Neurosurgeons staff the unit 24 hours a day/7 days a week. They also respond to the Emergency Room for consultation and treatment. By Emergency Medicine Services (EMS) guidelines, a Trauma Center can only be classified as Level I by ensuring the availability of neurosurgery. On-call schedules are maintained for the senior faculty affording the in-house staff with consultation and support.

Private Practice Strains Public Medicine

Times' Allegation #6: Emergency Room Faculty Availability

The accountability of Emergency Room Faculty was called into question as being a contributing factor to the outcomes and potential misadventures experienced by patients awaiting definitive care. Those persons in question were:

ER Faculty, Date, Incident

Ordog, Gary, 12/08/88, Attending in ER, located at Henry Mayo Newhall Hosp.

Glenn, Casper, 01/27/89, Attending in ER, located at home.

Schlater, Theodore,——Works at Daniel Freeman w/o county authorization.

Medicine Faculty, Date, Incident

Prakash, Ravi, 01/25/89, Located at private practice during county work week.

Reference was made to the 1987 Touche-Ross report which stipulated that procedures were required to authenticate the physicians time reporting and ensuring ongoing individual monitoring of work weeks.

Hospital's response to Times' allegation #6: The Emergency Room faculty have devised a two-tier call back system which allows each physician to take second call and serve as a back-up to the primary attending physician. The person indicated above, excluding Dr. Prakash, were recorded as being on second call. This designation affords them the liberty of being called in to the hospital during peak periods. It is generally activated during extreme emergencies and internal disasters. The Times failed to differentiate between the on-call schedules they were provided.

PART III—TIMES ARTICLE—SEPTEMBER 5, 1989

Drew University Struggles to Find a Steady Course

Times' allegation #7: The financial viability of the Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science was called into question in that University researchers were reported as stating that they have severe difficulty in obtaining their research funds and/or their programs are adversely affected due to the University's retarded rate of payment to vendors.

Specific references provided by the Times addressed the following issues: (1) Sheriff's investigation of employee theft of $130,000; (2) Electrical bill totaling $12,521 unpaid; (3) Insurance premium payments are 2 to 3 months behind; (4) Epilepsy Research halted due to University non-payment; (5) Poor financial conditions stifle faculty recruitment, i.e., 48% of KDMC physicians are certified in their fields of medicine compared to 80% at LAC-USC and Harbor-UCLA; (6) No permanent Chairman in Orthopedics and Emergency Medicine; (7) Researchers must use their own monies to maintain the integrity of their respective programs.

Hospital's response to Times' allegation #7: The Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science is responsible for the maintenance of its contractual agreements, to the Los Angeles County-King/Drew Medical Center. Moreover, KDMC provides the University with an annual budget based upon the Medical Schools' Agreement. This compensates the University for the hours encountered by the faculty in the areas of research, training and supervision.

Faculty at KDMC are either Board certified or Board eligible. Their respective credentials are reviewed and formally acknowledged during each Residency Review Committee as part of the American College of Graduate Medical Educations' function. In addition, annual appraisals and promotions are performed based upon clinical competence and housestaff management. The variance in Board certification between hospitals is based entirely on the degree of volunteer physicians assigned to each facility.

Medical tradition at Harbor-UCLA and LAC-USC exceed KDMC by 20 and 40 years, respectively.

With regard to the status of the Search Committee's efforts to locate and recruit a Chairman for the Departments of Emergency Medicine, Internal Medicine, and the Division of Orthopedic Surgery, the following represents their respective status.

Department of Internal Medicine

Dr. Ravi Prakash, former Chief of the Division of Cardiology at KDMC, was appointed Chairman of the Department of Internal Medicine 4 months ago and has begun the reorganization of the Department.

Department of Emergency Medicine

The KDMC Personnel Office has recently been assigned to assist the Drew University Search Committee in the recruiting process. Letters have been sent to all U.S. Hospitals and Emergency Medicine Departments or Emergency Medicine residency training programs. The Committee has also interviewed two internal candidates and one exernal candidate.

Division of Orthopedic Surgery

A senior orthopedic surgeon, former Chief of Orthopedic Surgery at Cook County Hospital in Chicago, and currently Chief of Orthopedic Trauma at Booth Memorial Hospital in New York City, is interested in the position. The Chairman of the Department of Surgery, together with the Dean of the Drew University and the Medical Director of KDMC, are negotiating salary with the candidate. The recruitment process is expected to culminate by late September 1989, subject to his acceptance.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
SAN FRANCISCO GENERAL HOSPITAL,
San Francisco, CA, September 30, 1989.

ARTHUR FLEMING, M.D.,
Chief of Surgery, King-Drew Medical Center, Los Angeles, CA.

DEAR DR. FLEMING: I am writing to you to explain the circumstances under which my name appeared in a recent article about your hospital in the Los Angeles Times. Several months ago, I received the unsolicited records of a 37-year-old woman who had died as a result of complications of ovarian surgery which had been performed at King-Drew Medical Center. Subsequently, I received a phone call from Ms. Claire Spiegel who identified herself as a reporter for the Los Angeles Times and asked me to give an opinion on the case. I could not have given an expert opinion on the case because the records supplied were incomplete and major items such as operation reports were not available. However, I indicated that I did not want to be involved in her story and that I did not want to be quoted. This was my only communication with Ms. Spiegel. Needless to say, I was quite surprised to find myself listed under a heading, Who The Experts Are, in conjunction with the article. Other than the limited records of the patient above, I have not seen or examined the records of any other patient admitted to King-Drew Medical Center. I have never visited your hospital and my limited knowledged regarding your hospital certainly does not qualify me as an expert.

I deplore the use of my name in this article since it seems to be a deliberate attempt to mislead those reading the article into thinking that I have reviewed all of the cases discussed and agree with the conclusions reached in the article. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The fact that I was so grossly misrepresented can only cast doubt on the veracity of the rest of the article.

I hope that this letter will serve to clarify my limited involvement with the article. If any other information is required, please do not hesitate to call me.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES R. MACHO, M.D.,
Assistant Professor of Surgery,
University of California, San Francisco.

RULE ON H.R. 3402, THE POLISH AND HUNGARIAN DEMOCRACY INITIATIVE OF 1989

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rules of the Democratic Caucus, I wish to serve notice to my colleagues that I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to seek less than an open rule for the consideration by the House of Representatives of H.R. 3402, the Polish and Hungarian Democracy Initiative of 1989.

TRIBUTE TO CITIZENS OF WALTERBORO, SC

HON. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, with so much attention being given to outside relief efforts to assist the victims of Hurricane Hugo, I wish to share with my colleagues the story of the generosity of the citizens of the city of Walterboro and Colleton County back home. The following letter was sent to me by Harry Cone, mayor of Walterboro, in which he tells of the untiring efforts of Colleton, which is a rural and economically disadvantaged county, to assist those who were suddenly made less fortunate than they.

With the assistance of radio station WALD, which operated around the clock as an information center, the people of Colleton County were able to collect and distribute more than one-half million dollars in supplies and monetary contributions. I am most proud to pay a special tribute to those folks who responded to the needs of their fellow South Carolinians.

CITY OF WALTERBORO,
Walterboro, SC, October 4, 1989.

Hon. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR.,
Federal Building, Charleston, SC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RAVENEL: Disasters often bring out the best in people. Mass media has made our country aware of the destruction and devastation suffered by the people of our State due to Hurricane Hugo. The Nation, I am sure, is aware to some degree of the supplies and other forms of aid which have so generously poured into Charleston and the surrounding areas in response to Hugo's devastation.

A perfect example of this generosity is the response of the citizens of the City of Walterboro and Colleton County. For the most part, Walterboro and nearby areas were spared Hugo's full force but some areas of Colleton County, including Cottageville, were severely devastated. The people of Walterboro and Colleton County responded to the needs of their fellow South Carolinians with food, clothing, supplies and other forms of aid. It is estimated that food with a value in excess of $½ million was shipped out of Colleton County to other areas in need within the first critical hours and days after the hurricane. This in spite of the fact that our people live in an area of South Carolina that is economically disadvantaged. Also, approximately 20,000 pounds of ice and 100,000 gallons of water were sent by our people to those in need in Hugo's aftermath. Vehicles of ever description, from pick-up trucks to tractor trailers, were used to make deliveries. More than 70 truckloads were sent in the relief effort. Convoys were led from Colleton County to devastated areas in Berkeley, Charleston, Dorchester, Sumter, Clarendon, and Williamsburg Counties as well as to devastated areas in our own Colleton County. Aid from our county was the first to reach the people of Bonneau, Moncks Corner, Ravenel, Eutawville, Awendaw, Sumter County, and Clarendon County.

I would like Congress to join me in paying official tribute to the people of Walterboro and Colleton County, South Carolina, who showed their love and caring for those less fortunate South Carolinians who suffered most from the ravages of Hugo—to our people who have continued to share what they have and to provide their labor and services to distribute food and other items so critically needed and so generously given.

Sheriff Eddie Chasteen and the Colleton County Sheriff's Department and Chief Tom McJunkin and the Walterboro City Police Department must be commended. Their fine law enforcement organizations aided the distribution of supplies by accompanying the many convoys and providing security and assistance to the community volunteers working to deliver the much needed aid. Some individuals need to be singled out—Sgt. Charles Roberts, Deputy Shaunette Pringle and Deputy Steve Dunn of the Colleton County Sheriff's Department whose efforts went beyond even what could be expected of the most dedicated public servant. They not only provided escort service for relief convoys at all hours of the day and night but also provided the physical labor necessary to clear the roads so that the convoys could get through. Also deserving of special recognition is Walterboro Chief of Police Tom McJunkin who personnally escorted convoys into Sumter County.

Too much praise cannot be given to radio station WALD and its owner, Rudi Gresham, who, along with the other members of the WALD staff, worked around the clock for four straight days to bring much needed up to date information to the people of our area. Radio station WALD, in addition to acting as an information center also served as a collection point for the distribution of food, clothing, and other much needed supplies. WALD provided the communication necessary to coordinate and make possible this relief effort and to the the first so much needed relief, to so many devastated areas. WALD broadcast service information and relief appeals, without commercials while suspending regular programing, for a substantial length of time while coordinating the continuing relief efforts. The FCC and the American people should be made aware of Mr. Gresham, his staff at WALD, News Director Cheryl Tillman, Danny DeWitt, Larry Wright, and Bubba Stokes and the shining example they set for the broadcast industry.

The people of Walterboro and Colleton County responded in a real way to a very real human tragedy. The response by people from all walks of life and from every economic strata—from Willie the painter, who lives in his car and who contributed his last $10.00 to buy baby food to the individual who provided an entire 18-wheeler loaded with ice—was overwhelming. Volunteers were needed and they came—merchants closed their stores so they could help, truck drivers gave up profitable driving runs so they could provide the trucks necessary to deliver the relief supplies, and on and on. People who could not afford to give gave anyway because they cared and they saw others whose needs were greater than theirs. They were like the young man sharing his fishes and loaves with the multitude in another time and their generosity and caring proved to be the catalyst necessary to mobilize others throughout our great nation to care and to share.

The devastation our State has suffered from Hurricane Hugo is terrible. The outpouring of caring and sharing in the wake of this horrible tragedy by the people of our good State, including especially my friends and neighbors here in Walterboro and Colleton County, is heartwarming beyond description. All this done with no expectation of thanks or recognition. Our people provided a wonderful example of what people who love God and recognize his tenets of loving, caring and sharing do in a time of tragedy. I, as Mayor of the City of Walterboro, would like to extend my thanks to these people who gave so willingly of their time, their effort, their money, and, above all, of themselves.

Sincerely yours,

W. HARRY CONE, Jr.,
Mayor, Walterboro, SC.

DOD INVOLVEMENT IN DRUG WAR MAJOR BREAKTHROUGH, BUT U.S. SHOULD NOT BE SOLE CARRIER OF THE BIG STICK

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I would like to commend strongly Defense Secretary Richard Cheney's initiative of September 18, expanding the Department of Defense's role in the war on drugs.

Secretary Cheney effectively said that the military will be a full partner in the war on drugs. It's about time. In the previous administration, Defense Secretaries Weinberger and Carlucci resisted every opportunity for the military to help.

This is a major breakthrough. I am enthusiastic that Secretary Cheney declared drug control to be a high priority national security mission. I and my colleagues on the House Narcotics Committee have been urging recognition of this need for many years.

I am pleased at the greater commitment of military resources and personnel by the Secretary as well as his call for the development of specific strategies by the various military commands in their geographic and technical jurisdictions.

I would hope, however, that these military actions in the war on drugs are not by the United States alone, but part of multilateral actions involving the United Nations, the Organization of American States, Interpol and other groups of nations.

Drugs are a worldwide problem, and I do not want to see the United States become the sole carrier of the big stick.

I would urge the State Department to work with Secretary Cheney so that other nations will share the military's responsibility to help fight the war on drugs.

It is a major step forward that Secretary Cheney will expand our military involvement in antidrug efforts in South America, Central America, the Caribbean, the Mexican border, and Asia. I totally agree with him that U.S. force and technical backup can make a substantial contribution.

I am happy that Secretary Cheney clarified that the military will not be involved in operational antidrug efforts. I am also pleased that he understands that our military cannot act as a police force but will instead support existing law enforcement.

With the military's involvement, we can go forward in reducing the flow of drugs into our country.

The text of the Secretary's statement follows:

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE GUIDANCE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

On September 5, 1989, the President issued the National Drug Control Strategy pursuant to the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. The President's strategy provides for an integrated program of counternarcotics actions designed to move the country substantially closer to the goal of a drug-free America. This guidance is designed to assist in the swift and effective implementation of the President's strategy within the Department of Defense.

The supply of illicit drugs to the United States from abroad, the associated violence and international instability, and the use of illegal drugs within the country pose a direct threat to the sovereignty and security of the country. The threat of illicit drugs strikes at the heart of the Nation's values. It inflicts increased crime and violence on our society and attacks the well-being and productivity of our citizenry. One of the principal foreign policy objectives of this Administration is to reduce, and if possible to eliminate, the flow of illegal narcotic substances to the United States. Also, the Congress has by statute assigned to the Department the duty to serve as the single lead agency of the Federal Government for the detection and monitoring of aerial and maritime transit of illegal drugs to the United States. For these reasons, the detection and countering of the production, trafficking and use of illegal drugs is a high priority national security mission of the Department of Defense.

The Nation ultimately will be rid of the scourge of illegal drugs only through the sustained application of the energy, courage and determination of the American people. As the President's Strategy reflects, the Nation must seek to eliminate both the demand and supply for illegal drugs, for the Nation will conquer neither if the other is left unchecked.

The Department of Defense, with the Department of State and U.S. law enforcement agencies, will help lead the attack on the supply of illegal drugs from abroad under the President's Strategy. The efforts of the Department of Defense will complement those of other U.S. agencies and cooperating foreign countries. The Department of Defense will work to advance substantially the national objective of reducing the flow of illegal drugs into the United States through the effective application of available resources consistent with our national values and legal framework.

An effective attack on the flow of illegal drugs depends upon action at every phase of the flow: (1) in the countries that are the sources of the drugs, (2) in transit from the source countries to the United States, and (3) in distribution in the United States. The United States Armed Forces can assist in the attack on the supply of drugs in each of these phases.

I. THE ATTACK ON DRUGS AT THE SOURCE

The Department of Defense will assist in the attack on production of illegal drugs at the source. The production of illegal drugs is a complex criminal enterprise. The criminal enterprise requires illicit labor, capital, entrepreneurship and a substantial infrastructure to grow the plants that are the raw materials for illegal drugs and to refine and manufacture the illegal drugs. Reducing the availability of these elements of illegal drug production in the countries from which illegal drugs originate would reduce the flow of illegal drugs to the United States.

The Department of Defense can assist in the three elements of an effective attack on the supply of drugs in source countries: (1) assistance for nation-building, (2) operational support to host-country forces, and (3) cooperation with host-country forces to prevent drug exports. Pursuant to the National Drug Control Strategy, near-term efforts will focus on the Andean nations from which most cocaine entering the United States originates. A key requirement for the success of U.S. efforts directed at the supply of illegal drugs, and in particular U.S. counternarcotic operations, will be the cooperation of the foreign countries involved.

As the National Drug Control Strategy indicates with respect to the Andean countries, a sustained, multi-year effort to provide economic, security, and law enforcement assistance is an essential element for a successful fight against illegal drugs abroad. Drug-producing criminal organizations control what amounts to private armies that challenge the law enforcement and military forces of their countries. Often such organizations are intertwined with insurgent forces that challenge directly the governments of their countries. The National Drug Control Strategy calls for the United States to reinforce the abilities of the governments of the countries cooperating in the fight against illegal drugs to combat drug-producing organizations. Security assistance will help enable such a government to protect itself from criminal drug enterprises and drug-related insurgencies, and to enforce its laws against drug producers and traffickers. Future economic assistance will help to strengthen the national economy and keep the labor, capital and enterpreneurship available in the country channeled toward useful production and away from drug production. Success in other efforts to attack the supply of illegal drugs depends in the long-run upon the establishment of healthy economies in drug-producing countries and the restoration of governmental authority in those countries. To assist in the implementation of this element of the National Drug Control Strategy, the Department of Defense will execute security assistance programs in accordance with Presidential instructions and applicable law, and in coordination with the Department of State.

Effective implementation of the National Drug Control Strategy requires that the Department of Defense be prepared to provide counternarcotics operational support to the forces of cooperating countries. The U.S. Armed Forces can provide foreign forces substantial assistance in training, reconnaissance, command and control, planning, logistics, medical support and civic action in connection with foreign forces' operations against the infrastructure of drug-producing criminal enterprises. Such U.S. military support would be designed to increase the effectiveness of foreign forces' efforts to destroy drug processing laboratories, disrupt drug-producing enterprises, and control the land, river and air routes by which the enterprises exfiltrate illegal drugs from the country.

In addition to assistance for nation-building and support for foreign forces' strikes on drug-producing enterprises, the U.S. can assist law enforcement agencies of cooperating foreign countries in combatting the export of drugs from those countries. The Department of Defense can assist with an improved intelligence collection effort, which will be essential not only to assist the governments of the source countries, but also for U.S. actions in the second line of defense—the attack on drugs in transit to the United States.

II. THE ATTACK ON DRUGS IN TRANSIT

The substantially increased effort to attack drugs at their source in the drug-producing countries as a first line of defense should help reduce over time the export of illegal drugs to the U.S. Nevertheless, drug-producing criminal enterprises in those countries currently are so vast in scope that, even if U.S. efforts to attack drugs at the source are highly successful, the flow of drugs by sea, air, and land will continue. As the second line of defense against the flow of illegal drugs, the U.S. armed forces will implement the National Drug Control Strategy through substantial efforts to counter the flow of illegal drugs in transit to the United States, both outside the United States and at the Nation's borders and ports of entry. The Department's service pursuant to statutory direction as the single lead agency of the Federal Government for the detection and monitoring of aerial and maritime transit of illegal drugs to the United States will prove particularly important to the success of this effort.

Deployment of appropriate elements of the U.S. armed forces with the primary mission to interdict and deter the flow of drugs should over time help reduce the flow of illegal drugs into the U.S. At a minimum, deploying the armed forces with this mission should have the immediate effect of substantially complicating the logistical difficulties of criminal drug traffickers and increasing the costs and risks of their drug smuggling activities.

As a high priority, United States military counternarcotics deployments will emphasize combatting the flow of drugs across the Caribbean Sea and across the southern border of the United States. The Department of Defense will proceed with planning to deploy a substantial Caribbean Counternarcotics Task Force, with appropriate air and maritime drug interdiction assets and aerial and maritime detection and monitoring assets, to combat the flow of illegal drugs from Latin America through the Caribbean Sea. The Department also will proceed with planning for other deployments of U.S. forces to complement the counternarcotics actions of U.S. law enforcement agencies and cooperating foreign governments.

Success of the attack on drugs in transit will require sustained deployment of appropriately trained and equipped members of the U.S. armed forces and substantially improved cooperation between the armed forces and U.S. law enforcement agencies. The substantial increase in military participation in the attack on drugs in transit is intended to be in addition to, rather than in place of, Federal law enforcement agencies' efforts.

The success of interdiction and deterrence efforts will depend greatly upon the ability of the Department of Defense and law enforcement agencies to marshal effectively the myriad command, control, comunications and intelligence resources they possess into an integrated counternarcotics network. The Department of Defense will serve as the single lead Federal agency for the detection and monitoring of aerial and maritime transit of illegal drugs and will be prepared, with the cooperation of U.S. law enforcement agencies, to integrate expeditiously into an effective network the Federal command, control, communications, and technical intelligence assets that are dedicated to the mission of interdicting illegal drugs from abroad. The Department of Defense will seek to develop and employ when appropriate the capability to exercise tactical control of Federal detection and monitoring assets actively dedicated to counternarcotics operations outside the United States and in border areas.

To ensure that action to implement the President's National Drug Control Strategy begins immediately, the Commanders-in-Chief of all unified and specified combatant commands will be directed to elevate substantially the mission priority within their commands of actions to fight illegal drugs.

III. THE ATTACK ON DRUGS IN THE UNITED STATES

After the first and second lines of defense—actions directed at illegal drugs in source countries and in transit—the third line of defense against drugs will be in the United States itself. The role of the armed forces in the third line of defense includes both actions to reduce the supply of illegal drugs and actions to reduce the demand for those drugs.

Within the United States, to assist in reducing the supply of illegal drugs, the counternarcotics actions of the Department of Defense will emphasize support to Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies, and the National Guard in State status. The Department of Defense will assist requesting law enforcement agencies and the National Guard with training, reconnaissance, command and control, planning, and logistics for counternarcotics operations. In appropriate cases, armed forces personnel and equipment will be detailed directly to law enforcement agencies to assist in the fight. The Department of Defense will ensure that its administrative and command structures permit rapid and effective response to appropriate requests for counternarcotics assistance from law enforcement agencies and the National Guard. The Department will continue to assist the Governors of the several States in employing the National Guard in the fight against illegal drugs.

With respect to reduction of demand for drugs within the United States, the Department of Defense bears an important responsibility to reduce the use of illegal drugs within the armed forces and among its civilian personnel. The Department of Defense has met with substantial success in its demand reduction efforts with armed forces personnel through aggressive drug abuse education and drug-testing programs—an 82 percent reduction in drug abuse since 1980. The Department will step up its efforts to combat drug use by departmental personnel and will make available to other large organizations its experience in reducing the demand for illegal drugs. The Department also will emphasize drug abuse awareness and prevention programs in the Department's school system, which educates over 190,000 of America's children.

The Department of Defense will be prepared to assist the Department of Justice with its responsibilities for incarceration and rehabilitation of drug criminals, through means such as training Federal, State and local personnel in the conduct of rehabilitation-oriented training camps for first-offense drug abusers and providing overflow facilities for incarceration of those convicted of drug crimes.

The President's National Drug Control Strategy emphasizes an approach to reducton of the drug supply. The Department of Defense has a crucial role in defending the United States from the scourge of illegal drugs. The Department will employ the resources at its command to accomplish that mission effectively. Should it prove necessary in implementing the President's Strategy effectively, any needed additional statutory authority will be sought. The men and women of America's armed forces will fight the production, trafficking and use of illegal drugs, as an important part of the national effort to secure for all Americans a drug-free America.

RICHARD B. CHENEY,
Secretary of Defense.

CEREMONIES TO MARK OUTSTANDING CONTRIBUTIONS OF JERSEY CITY STATE COLLEGE

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, this year marks several very special anniversaries for Jersey City State College, a distinguished institution of higher learning located in my district.

On October 13, 1989, the college's 60th anniversary will be celebrated at a dinner-dance at the Glen Point Hotel in Teaneck, NJ. Sponsored by the college's board of trustees and the board of directors of the college's development fund, the dinner will also honor the 15th year of Dr. William J. Maxwell's tenure as president of the college.

Prior to Jersey City State's official beginnings in 1929, its precursor first opened in 1927 as the New Jersey State Normal School with an enrollment of 331 students. Since that time, the college has grown in leaps and bounds. Today, it has a total enrollment of 8,850 students, including students from 18 foreign countries.

The college's distinguished president, Dr. Maxwell, is a man of outstanding leadership and academic accomplishment. He graduated from Jersey City State College in 1958 with a bachelor of science degree in elementary education and social studies. In 1960, he earned his master of arts degree at Columbia University in American history. In 1967, he earned a doctorate of education degree from Columbia University, specializing in American political history, American social thought, and urban and Afro-American history.

From 1958 to 1961, Dr. Maxwell taught social studies as a public school teacher. In 1961, he began his career on the Jersey City State College faculty as an associate professor in the department of social sciences. His dedication to academic excellence, to his students, and to the entire community were rewarded with his ascension to the presidency in 1974. His 15-year term has been marked by achievement and growth for the college.

Dr. Maxwell has been associated with a number of national, State, and local organizations, including:

Member, board of directors, American Council on Education;

Member, board of directors, American Association of State Colleges and Universities;

Chairman, advisory panel to the Washington office of the College Board;

Member, executive board, New Jersey Association of Colleges and Universities;

Commissioner, Commission on the Future of the State Colleges of New Jersey, 1983–84;

Member, board of directors, Hudson County Chamber of Commerce, Jersey City, NJ;

Board of trustees, Medical Center Foundation, Jersey City, NJ;

Member, New Jersey State Board of Examiners, 1989–83;

Member, board of directors, New Jersey Educational Computer Network, Inc., 1977–80;

His professional and honor associations include:

American Studies Association (president, Metropolitan New York Chapter, 1971–72, secretary/treasurer, 1970–71, executive council, 1970–73);

American Historical Association;

Organization of American Historians;

Phi Alpha Theta (a national honor society for historians); and Kappa Delta Pi (a national honor society for educators).

His honors and awards include:

Listings in "Who's Who in America," 1976; "Outstanding Educators in America,' 1971; and "Dictionary of American Scholars," 1969;

Humanitarian Award, National Conference of Christians and Jews, 1985;

Minority Advocate of the Year, U.S. Small Business Administration, 1983;

Outstanding Educator of the Year, New Jersey Association of Veterans Program Administrators, 1979;

Outstanding Young Men in America, 1968;

Outstanding Alumnus of the Year, Jersey City State College, 1967.

Dr. Maxwell has published a number of books and articles, including:

"A History and Philosophy of Education," (With Robert Bernstein), New York: Simon and Schuster, 1965.

"Frances Kellor in the Progressive Era: A Case Study in the Professionalization of Reform." Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1968 (doctoral dissertation).

He has published a number of articles and reviews in the fields of American history, Afro-American history, urban history, the history of American education, and race relations in "American Quarterly," "Pan-African Journal," and the "Dictionary of American Internationalists."

Dr. Maxwell is married and has two children. He served from 1952 to 1954 in the United States Army Corps of Engineers in Korea, Japan, and the United States.

Over the past 60 years, the college has expanded tremendously to include the Irwin Library, which houses over 200,000 volumes, the Gilligan Student Union Building, the Science Center, the Media Arts Center, Rossey Hall, the A. Harry Moore Center for Special Education, and Hepburn Hall.

The college offers degree programs in 33 academic areas. Two Hundred and forty-five full-time and 200 adjunct faculty teach classes at the school of arts and sciences, the school of professional studies and education, and the school of graduate studies.

Career-oriented undergraduate programs include computer science, nursing, business administration, medical technology, media arts, criminal justice, fire safety administration, and many teaching specializations. A bachelor of fine arts degree programs provides valuable study opportunities in the arts. Cooperative education programs are also offered in all areas of study.

Graduate-level master of arts programs will be offered in criminal justice and in 14 areas of education. The college also offers a professional diploma in school psychology.

Jersey City State College also offers nontraditional study options for credit in a wide variety of academic areas through the college's Saturday Semester Program.

In a statement about the future of the college, Dr. Maxwell said:

Major renovation will be undertaken across the campus between 1992 and 1994. The construction of a new theater is slated for 1994 and 1995. The following year construction will begin on a new media arts building. In the last phase, 1996-97, an off-campus parking lot will be reconfigured and Vodra Hall Dormitory will undergo partial renovation.

Half of the funding for master projects will be provided through the "Jobs, Education, and Competitiveness Bond Act of 1988," which enables New Jersey Colleges to upgrade facilities. Jersey City State will cover the balance through general operating funds, student fees, and fundraising projects.

Two decades have passed since the last college master plan was undertaken. This is the first opportunity in 15 years to match our facilities with our new academic initiatives and our expanded services and staff.

We have developed a variety of new professional studies in the past seven or eight years and have been forced to superimpose the classrooms and office space for these departments on facilities that were created in the late 1960's for liberal arts studies. The coupling-up created severe overcrowding and in some cases serious deficiencies for programs with special needs such as computer labs, library space and theatre facilities.

The college will set preliminary guidelines and devote resources to a far-reaching study of the liberal arts that will involve a revamping of the General Studies Program. The study, scheduled to begin formally in the fall of 1990, will be undertaken by a Council of the Arts and Sciences and Professional Studies and Education.

Dr. Maxwell views the new plan for Jersey City State's future as a "major step that will influence the direction of the college for 10 years or more."

Through its Student Government Association the college offers comprehensive extracurricular activities and through its division of athletics a complete intramural and intercollegiate range of sports activities.

As a major community resource, the college is the focus of many community outreach and counseling services as well as the site of numerous concerts, lectures and art exhibits for the general public.

I have witnessed Jersey City State College's involvement in numerous community programs. The college's students have volunteered thousands of hours to various community agencies, hospitals, housing developments, and schools.

The college's careers day programs have helped thousands of area high school students meet educational and business leaders.

The college's cooperative education program has given thousands of students the opportunity to work while pursuing advanced study in their chosen field.

I salute Jersey City State College for the outstanding academic training it provides and for its continuing vision and leadership in our community.

In saluting the college and Dr. William Maxwell, we must pay tribute to the following Jersey City State College leaders: Dr. William Allen Messler, principal, 1929-33; Dr. Edgar F. Bunoe, acting principal, 1933-34; Dr. Roy Lee Shaffer, principal president, 1934-40; Dr. Chris C. Rossey, president, 1940-46; Dr. Forest A. Irwin, president, 1946-54; Dr. Michael B. Gilligan, president, 1954-67; Dr. William A. Liggitt, acting president, 1967-68; Dr. James H. Mullen, president, 1968-73; Dr. William J. Maxwell, president, 1974-present.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS, JCSC DEVELOPMENT FUND

Robert Jablonski, chair; Sang Jin Kim, vice chair; David Leff, secretary; John R. Nevin, executive director; Edwin G. Weisman, treasurer; Albert Burstein; Maureen Donelan; Donald L. Guertin; Michael J. Herbert; William J. Maxwell, ex officio; Edward J. Meade, Jr., ex officio; Oberdon Raimondi; Madeline Santuoso; Thomas J. Stanton, Jr.; and Herbert Winokur.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

John Moore, chair; John V. Guigon, 1st vice chair; Michael Roche, 2nd vice chair; Willie Mae Coram, secretary; Earl Byrd; Nasrollah Fatemi; Ronald N. Jackowitz; Mary E. Orsini; Edward Goldberg, ex officio; and William J. Maxwell, ex officio.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION

Carlos Hernandez, vice president, academic vice president and provost; John R. Nevin, vice president, development and public affairs; Julian K. Robinson, vice president, student services; and Edwin G. Weisman, vice president, administration and finance.

DINNER PLANNING COMMITTEE

Frances Appello, Ronald Bogusz, Carole Fall, Walter Glospie, Vincent LoRe, John R. Nevin, Kelly Resch, William Reopell, and Ellen Wayman.

I feel certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives wish to join me in this grand salute.

NATIONAL ITALIAN AMERICAN FOUNDATION PAYS TRIBUTE TO THREE OUTSTANDING CITIZENS

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the attention to our Nation some special awards that will be presented on November 2, 1989 in Michigan by Italian Americans.

It will be the privilege of Paul F. Oreffice, David Handleman, and our own distinguished member WILLIAM S. BROOMFIELD, to be honored by the National Italian American Foundation for their contributions to our society.

Paul Oreffice, chairman of Dow Chemical Co., has moved to successive international assignments in Switzerland, Italy, Brazil, and Spain since beginning his career with Dow in 1953. A native of Venice, Italy, Mr. Oreffice first came to the United States with his family at the age of 12, later became a United States citizen, and served in the United States Army during the Korean conflict. He is a graduate of Purdue University and has honorary doctoral degrees from Lawrence Institute of Technology, General Motors Institute, Saginaw Valley State College, Tri-State University, South Dakota School of Mines and Technology, and Clemson University. In 1966, Mr. Oreffice received the Sagamore of the Wabash Award—Indiana's highest honor—for his service to education.

David Handleman is chairman of the board of the Handleman Co. He is a member of the board of directors for several Detroit community organizations, including the United Foundation, Detroit Institute of Arts, Interlochen Music Camp, Oakland University, the Detroit Symphony, Cranbrook Academy of Arts and Sciences, the Citizens Research Council of Michigan, and the Economic Alliance for Michigan. In addition, he serves on the boards and committees of numerous local and national Jewish community organizations.

The third honoree, is our distinguished colleague BILL BROOMFIELD, who has served in the House of Representatives since 1956, after serving 8 years in the Michigan House and Senate. In 1961 he was appointed to the prestigious House Foreign Affairs Committee and currently serves as vice chairman of the committee. In this capacity, he brings his extensive foreign affairs experience to regular meetings with the President, Secretary of State, and top national security advisors on major foreign policy issues. He is also a member of the Small Business Committee and believes the small business sector is the backbone of the American economy. BILL is a member of several fraternal and civic organizations.

As the National Italian American Foundation gathers in Livonia, MI. on November 2, to honor and give recognition the many contributions of these three outstanding individuals, I send very best wishes from the U.S. Congress.

POVERTY FIGHT CALLED MISGUIDED

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, spending by the Federal Government has more than doubled in just the past 8 years.

One main reason for this is that many Federal bureaucrats make it a main goal to raise more and more for their agency or department each year.

Prof. Dwight Lee of the University of Georgia has just completed a very interesting study showing that even government bureaucrats are driven by market-like competition for funds.

I hope all my colleagues will consider this fascinating article by John Cunniff of the Associated Press.

POVERTY FIGHT CALLED MISGUIDED

(By John Cunniff)

NEW YORK.—In politics, one of the safest, popular, commendable and perhaps rewarding stances it to be for the poor, especially through government transfer programs.

Politically speaking, it is an assumption not to be questioned that transfers of money from the rich to the poor will, over time, improve chances of the poor obtaining a larger percentage of the nation's income.

It might not be so. The safe, popular and commendable political stance might also be one of the least effective, says Professor Dwight Lee in a paper for the Center for the Study of American Buisness, St. Louis.

Lee's position will create controversy, but that's what every unpopular notion does in the world of economics. It may be true also that he will never be able to prove the case, but it certianly will get an airing.

Indeed, one reason why Lee challenged the assumption was its casual acceptance not just by politicians and economists, but by other segments of economic society and the general public. The cost, of course, was another reason.

Lee, who teaches at the University of Georgia, contends that if government transfer programs were helping the poor, income distribution would have become more equal as spending on poverty programs rose over the years.

It hasn't happened, he says. He refers to studies showing that income distribution has remained almost stable over the past four decades. He cites one study of income between 1950 and 1970 that showed:

Households in the lowest 20 percent of income distribution received 6.4 percent of the national net income in 1950 and 6.7 percent in 1970.

Households in the top 20 percent of income distribution received 39.9 percent of national net income in 1950 and 39.1 percent in 1970.

That, says Lee, is very little impact for the billions of dollars spent. It is so little, he maintains, that you might also assume that to reduce such spending drastically might do little to worsen poverty.

How could this possibly be? He believes the answer lies in the nature of politics and the marketplace.

Poverty, he says, is thought to result from a marketplace driven by competition among self-seeking individuals who have little concern for broad social outcomes. If so, he says, the same is true in politics.

"Is it not at least a plausible assumption," he asks, "that people are as self-regarding in one setting as another?"

The political process, like the market process, "is driven by competition between individuals who are interested in promoting their private objectives," he says. Some of those objectives, it seems, don't always help the poor.

Even altruistic people, Lee claims, too often simply lobby for or against existing government programs that provide specific benefits—rather than the objective of reducing overall poverty. They might see no alternative.

Sometimes the poverty advocates are made up of those whose employment is tied to programs, leading him to point out that:

"Poverty professionals have an overriding interest in their incomes and job security and favor the continuation and expansion of funding for poverty programs for reasons completely divorced from any benefits the poor receive."

In short, as Lee sees it, the motivation in politics is the same as in the marketplace. If elimination of poverty is the goal, few seem interested in determining whether programs do indeed work to reduce poverty.

FOR SALE: 780 ACRES OF BEACHFRONT PROPERTY LOCATED WITHIN A NATIONAL RECREATION AREA, $2.50 AN ACRE—CONTACT THE BLM

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, the "For Sale" signs are up again. And, there are no shortage of takers. Yesterday, 780 acres of land within the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area left public ownership when the Bureau of Land Management granted fee title to the acreage to a private mining claimant.

Incredible as it may seem to some, the Federal Government only received a mere $2.50 per acre for this land.

Despite the fact that local zoning ordinances prohibit mining within the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area of the Siuslaw National Forest, the mining claimant succeeded in convincing both the BLM and Forest Service that sand located on the land was a valuable mineral and subject to the land transfer provisions of a 117-year old mining law.

This law, known as the Mining Law of 1872, permits the location of claims for mineral deposits on public domain lands. In order to be valid, a claim must be properly located, maintained, and a valuable mineral deposit must be discovered. There is no requirement for any type of rental or royalty to be paid to the Federal Government in return for the extraction of these publicly owned minerals. The law also gives a claim holder the option of applying for a patent, which represents fee simple title to the land under claim, for a mere $2.50 an acre application fee. It is important to note that this is an option. A person does not need to patent a claim in order to mine it.

While the Surface Resources Act of 1955 prohibits the location of mining claims for what are known as common varieties of mineral materials such as sand, stone, and gravel, the law exempts those materials which have a distinct and special value. These mineral materials are commonly referred to as uncommon varieties and can still be located under the Mining Law of 1872.

The sand subject to the mining claims in the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area is, according to the BLM, an uncommon variety of sand because, the agency contends, it could be used to make glass. The agency also believes that the local zoning ordinance prohibiting mining in the area, and provisions of the Coastal Zone Management Act, have no bearing on whether the sand is a valuable mineral under the Mining Law of 1872.

Mr. Speaker, for some time now I have grown increasingly concerned over a number of issues relating to both the mining law and the exemption for uncommon varieties in the Surface Resources Act. This loophole in the law represents nothing less than the legal looting of public resources. I think we must question, whether in this day and age, it is appropriate for the Federal Government to transfer title to public lands for $2.50 an acre. And, whether the public interest is being served by the lack of any financial return for the extraction of minerals from Federal lands.

Moreover, due to the absence of diligent development requirements for unpatented mining claims, and the fact that once patented under the Mining Law of 1872 there is no requirement whatsoever that the land be used for mining, I think we must ask whether we are still dealing with a law whose function is supposed to be to facilitate mining. Case in point: There will be no mining on those 780 acres of sand land within the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area transferred out of Federal ownership yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources, I believe that the country's mining laws should provide for, although some may disagree, mining. I think that is a fairly simple enough thing to expect from our mining laws. I also believe that we have a stewardship responsibility for Federal lands which are owned by all of the people of the United States. These considerations will continue to drive my review of the Mining Law of 1872.

THE REVENGE OF "MR. MAYOR"

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, we've all laughed at the story from the early days of the Reagan administration, when the President greeted HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce by saying, "Good evening, Mr. Mayor. How are things in your city?" Who would have dreamed, though, that one small faux-pas by the President would lead us to one of the greatest government scandals in our Nation's history?

Imagine the embarrassment and consternation that Mr. Pierce must have felt as he skulked home that night. "Mr. Mayor," indeed. Imagine the feelings of betrayal festering within him, cloaked beneath the mild-mannered demeanor of "Silent Sam." It must have been during those dark days that Pierce began to plot his revenge against the President and the administration that had mocked him so cruelly.

No grant would be too large, no favor to the friends of the privileged would be ignored. An entire executive agency would be turned over to the benefit of people with no need, but plenty of access. Pierce was no fool; he not only knew that a day of reckoning would come—he counted on it. Within a year of leaving office, the Reagan administration would be held up as the biggest collection of welfare cheats in history.

Picture in your mind the meeting between Pierce and James Watt, as the Secretary of the Interior came dialing for dollars. While Watt buddled up to Pierce ("You know, Sam, you're not the token that we all thought you were."), Silent Sam must have been hard-pressed to keep from laughing out loud: "Go ahead, Jim, keep talking. You'll earn your fat commission and I'll have the satisfaction of seeing you and your cronies ridiculed in public one more time."

We should offer our apologies to this neglected member of the Reagan administration and assure him that—even if the President didn't recognize his own Cabinet—at least we knew who he was. Of course, it's too late now to address the damage done by that one small gaffe by the President, but we can at least hope that our current President has a keener grasp of his Cabinet than his predecessor did; I shudder to think of the consequences if, at the next State dinner, President Bush walks up to Defense Secretary Cheney and greets him with a sunny, "Hello, Ed. What's Johnny Carson really like?"

TRIBUTE TO MR. AND MRS. THOMAS JOSEPH HAWK

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Joseph Hawk on the birth of their 8-lb.-2½-oz. baby boy. The child was born on September 25 at 1:37 p.m.

Mr. Hawk is the director of legislative computer systems and his wife, Stacye Hefner Hawk, is the daughter of the well-respected chairman, BILL HEFNER. These two beautiful new parents met in District of Columbia and are truly examples of the American spirit of public service.

They suffered some tough moments when they found out that their child had a low-hemoglobin count and would need numerous blood transfusions, but the child has pulled through. I am sure that young Thomas Hawk, Jr., will carry on in their footsteps and may someday emulate his maternal grandfather by serving in Congress.

All of Congress is proud of young Tom Jr., who has been nicknamed "Little Mo." I'd like to change that and call him "Big Mo" for hanging in there despite the hardships he has suffered. I wish all three of them the best.

FATHER JOHN STEPHEN TERRY HONORED AFTER 10 YEARS WITH THE CATHOLIC YOUTH CENTER

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Father John S. Terry as he celebrates his 10th year as director of the Wilkes-Barre Catholic Youth Center.

Father John Stephen Terry was born on October 19, 1949, in Jessup, PA. He attended elementary school at St. Michael's in Jessup and attended Scranton Preparatory School, completing his studies in 1967. Upon graduation from Scranton Prep, Father Terry was accepted at the University of Scranton. He entered into St. Pius X Seminary in his junior year to begin his studies for the priesthood. He graduated from St. Pius X and the University of Scranton in 1971.

He was assigned to Our Lady of the Angels Seminary in Albany, NY, and, upon its closing, continued his theological studies at Christ the King Seminary in Olean, NY. Father Terry completed this program in 1975, graduating with a master's degree in theology.

Father Terry was ordained to the priesthood on May 3, 1975, by Bishop J. Carroll McCormick at St. Peter's Cathedral, in Scranton, PA. Upon graduation, he was assigned to St. Mary's Immaculate Conception Church, Wilkes-Barre. He served for 4 years as assistant pastor before he was appointed as the youngest priest director of the Wyoming Valley Catholic Youth Center [CYC] in 1979. At this time he was sent to St. Patrick's Parish in Wilkes-Barre where he remained for 3 years. In 1982, he began serving as assistant pastor Holy Saviour Parish while continuing as director of the CYC.

In addition, Father Terry was cochairperson for the Youth Commission during the Second Diocesan Synod. He also taught at Bishop Hoban High School for several years and served as director of Campus Ministry at Wilkes College. Father Terry has been actively involved in a number of community activities, contributing his time and energy for the benefit of various groups including the United Way Campaign and the Allied Services. He has served on the Social Justice Committee for the city of Wilkes-Barre and was involved in the planning of the bicentennial celebration for Luzerne Country and last year's anniversary celebration of the Girl Scouts of America.

During his career with the CYC, Father Terry launched a number of successful programs including indoor soccer, a senior citizens program, a diocesan basketball tournament, CYC night at the races. The CYC Athletic Council has established a Father John S. Terry Award. In addition, Father Terry has made an outstanding effort to reach out to the community to help other groups such as the Child Development Council, Commission on Economic Opportunity, Bureau of Aging, Coordinated Child Care, John Heinz Institute, and the Catholic Schools of Luzerne County.

Father John S. Terry has devoted his life and his career to helping others. He has selflessly offered his talents and his energies to those in the Wyoming Valley who are less fortunate and who are in need. Father Terry stands as a role model to our young and as in inspiration to our elderly.

On October 19, 1989, Father Terry is being joined by his friends, family, and colleagues to celebrate 10 years as director of the Wilkes-Barre CYC and his 40th birthday. It is with great pleasure that I offer my most sincere congratulations to Father Terry on this very special occasion.

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE FOR 1988

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, it has been my custom to submit a statement of financial disclosure every year that I have served in the House of Representatives. While the law now dictates that Members of Congress submit financial disclosure statements in May of each year, I continue to file this more detailed family financial report. In this way, my constituents are kept fully and completely informed concerning my financial status.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO BUNNY KUIKEN AND EDWARD CARLOUGH FOR THEIR OUTSTANDING CONTRIBUTION TO THE AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride and admiration that I rise as dean of the New Jersey congressional delegation to salute two outstanding people who, through their tireless efforts, have made invaluable contributions to the labor movement in the United States and to working people everywhere.

I am speaking of Bunny Kuiken of Haledon, NJ, who helped make the Botto House of Haledon—which was vital to the American labor movement—a national landmark; and Edward Corlough, the outstanding president of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association. In honor of all that these two great people have done for working men and women everywhere, Ms. Kuiken and Mr. Carlough will be honored by the American Labor Museum Botto House National Landmark with the prestigious Sol Stetin Award at its seventh annual Sol Stetin Dinner Dance to be held Sunday, October 15, here in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, in order to provide you and our colleagues with a glimpse of the rich history of the Botto House, I would like to insert for the RECORD an article by Ms. Kuiken which appeared in Historic Preservation magazine, and which deals with her efforts to make the Botto House a National Landmark:

I VOWED NOT TO LET PEOPLE FORGET

(By Bunny Kuiken)

When I was a child, a favorite pastime at our house was looking at old family photographs. I was always intrigued by one picture in particular, showing thousands of people looking up at someone addressing them from the balcony of our house in Haledon, N.J. But no one seemed to know much about it.

All those people coming to the house, and no one remembered. Over the years, however, I learned of the important role that our house and my grandfather, Pietro Botto, had played in American labor history. I vowed not let people forget.

Grandpa had been a weaver in the Cedar Cliff Mills in Haledon and was very sympathetic with the workers when the Paterson Silk Strike began. Actually it started in nearby Clifton, where the Doherty Mill was trying to introduce the four-loom weaving system. The workers soon realized that half of them would be out of work. Spontaneously they walked off their jobs and onto the picket line. One by one the weaving mills were closed by the strikers. Paterson was closed down with 25,000 people out of work.

The International Workers of the World (IWW) had just successfully settled the cotton strike at Lawrenceville, Mass., and now rushed its most capable leaders to help out in Paterson. With "Big" Bill Haywood at the helm, the union was not only fighting against the four-loom system but also for better working conditions—$12 per week for weavers, an eight-hour day instead of 10 hours and the end to child labor.

Union members began meeting in halls in Paterson, but to discourage any organizing the police were told by mill officials to disband and arrest as many strikers as possible. The police arrested so many people that soon the jails were overflowing, and conditions were terrible.

After all meeting halls were closed, the strikers decided to rally in a local baseball park. The police arrived, not unexpectedly, and the crowd shouted, "Let's go to Haledon!"

So with Haywood in the lead, they marched to Haledon, known as "the little Socialist oasis of free speech in a desert of suppression." The strikers had Mayor William Brueckmann's permission, but now they needed a suitable place to meet.

Grandpa offered his house with its balcony facing a green meadow. Sunday after Sunday the crowds came to the Botto House to listen to the speakers. On May 19, 1913, 20,000 people gathered to hear writer Upton Sinclair. He apologized for giving such a short address, explaining that he had never spoken to such a large crowd. Those who were there never forgot it. John Reed, made famous by the movie "Reds," came as a reporter for Metropolitan Magazine, but got so caught up in the movement he never returned to the magazine.

To keep up the strikers' morale, a pageant was conceived by Reed, his good friend Mabel Dodge, Sinclair and their theatrical friends. On June 7, 1913, with a cast of almost a thousand strikers, the pageant was presented at Madison Square Garden. Artistically it was a success, but financially a disaster. Mable Dodge picked up the tab and paid all outstanding bills.

The workers, however, were becoming discouraged. The little reserves they had were long gone, and bills were piling up. They were getting hungry. With no subsidies, as strikers have today, they were forced to return to the mills after almost six months on the picket line. Conditions didn't improve right away, but little by little the issues they fought for did come to pass.

Grandpa died at the age of 80, in 1945. He and I had 16 years together. I married in 1957, but not until my husband, Hermie, said he would live in my house. My parents moved upstairs, and we lived on the first floor where I had been born. Not until September 1973, however, did I have any idea how I was going to accomplish my mission—recognition for the Botto House.

Then the Bergen Record published a story on the 60th anniversary of the Paterson Silk Strike. Someone besides me was interested at last! The story has since been used by students doing research on the strike. Follow-up stories were written about my ambition to have the Botto House become a historic site. They created a lot of interest and nostalgia—but that's not what I was looking for.

My efforts continued, and with success. Finally, in 1974, The Botto House was listed in both the State Register of Historic Places and in the National Register.

Very nice, but who knew it? I had a letter. I wanted a plaque placed on the property so all could read about the Botto House. But I needed a benefactor. Sol Stetin of the Textile Workers Union of America lived in Paterson and was very interested in its history, having worked and lived there most of his life—a perfect candidate.

I told Sol of my plight, and on June 7, 1975, the 62nd anniversary of the pageant, he and his union presented a plaque for the Botto House.

After my parents died, Hermie and I bought the property, but, not having any children, we worried about what would happen to the house when we were gone. I began writing letters to everyone involved in the dedication to tell them of my concern. It took a couple of years, but I didn't give up. In May 1980 the American Labor Museum Inc., was formed to establish a cultural facility in the Botto House, Sol became our first president.

The museum will be a living museum. Four rooms will be restored to show how my grandparents lived in 1913. There will be cultural exhibits and programs, and students will be able to research the past and make a better future because of it.

Aside from accomplishing my mission, I've had many side benefits in the past eight years. I've met people I never dreamed of meeting. People used to say to Hermie, "Marry Bunny and you have to marry her house and dogs because she'll never leave them." Well, Hermie married me, and we've lived in the Botto House for 26 years. A friend said, "You've worked hard to evict yourself," and I guess that's true. But we leave with our six dogs, five cats, two birds and raccoon knowing grandpa's house is in good hands.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present this portrait of a landmark that has lasting significance for all working people of this country. And as a means of further honoring Ms. Kuiken and Mr. Carlough for all they have done, I would like to insert the following resolution:

Whereas, the Botto House of Haledon, New Jersey, owned by Pietro and Maria Botto, served as a vital part of the history of the labor movement in New Jersey and the nation in the early 1900s, providing an important gathering place for those seeking better working conditions for all Americans;

Whereas, Bunny Kuiken, granddaughter of Pietro and Maria Botto, recognizing the profound significance that the Botto House played in the movement for better conditions and fairer wages for all working men and women, dedicated her efforts to making the Botto House a National Landmark so that the struggle of the workers who gathered there would never be forgotten;

Whereas, Bunny Kuiken's efforts resulted in the Botto House being accorded Statewide and Nationwide Historic Landmark status in 1974, and Ms. Kuiken, to preserve this important landmark, transformed the Botto House into the American labor Museum in 1980 as a monument to the American worker;

Whereas, Edward Carlough has done an outstanding job as national president of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association;

Whereas, under his leadership the union has been in the forefront of providing training to keep its members abreast of changing technology in their industry;

Whereas, the year of 1988 marked the Centennial of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association and in honor of this historic occasion the union presented an outstanding exhibit at the National Building Museum entitled, "Sheet Metal Craftsmanship;" and

Whereas, for their efforts on behalf of the hard working men and women of the nation and our world, Bunny Kuiken and Edward Carlough will be honored with the prestigious Sol Stetin Award at the American Labor Museum Botto House National Landmark's Seventh Annual Sol Stetin Dinner Dance on October 15 in Washington, now therefore, be it

Resolved, That Bunny Kuiken and Edward Carlough be commended in the highest terms for their leadership and dedication in helping to preserve and remind us of the rich history of the American labor movement, and by providing the guidance and vision that will lead all working men and women to a brighter, more productive tomorrow that will benefit our nation and our world.

ADDRESS TO THE OILED MAYORS: THE WATER IS DEAD

HON. JAMES A. McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, we have heard much about the devastation caused by the oilspill in Prince William Sound, AK. We have seen the body counts of birds, sea otters, and other wildlife. We have read the estimates of economic damage to fisheries and recreation. But we have heard less about the damage this catastrophe has done to human souls. No one has suffered more than the native people whose lives have been entwined since the Ice Age with the life of Alaska's waters.

Last June 27, the mayor of Valdez, AK, convened an International Conference of Mayors. The mayors and chiefs of the towns and villages affected by the spill met with the mayors of French towns that had been affected by the Amoco Cadiz spill in 1978. These leaders called themselves "the oiled mayors." The French told the Alaskans something of what to expect in the years to come. In turn, the Alaskans shared their experiences with the oilspill and the still unfinished cleanup.

Among the most eloquent statements was that of Walter Meganack, Sr., chief of the native village of Port Graham, a community of the Chugach people located on the southern tip of the Kenai Peninsula. I have never met Chief Meganack, but I have seldom been so moved by a speech. I cannot do justice to the power of his words, so I will simply share them here with my colleagues. They remind me of what the great Chief Joseph of the Nez Perce told us: "The Earth and myself are of one mind. The measure of the lands and the measure of our bodies are the same." I hope these words remind us of our solemn responsibility to the native people for whom Alaska's waters are the source of life, and our solemn commitment that the waters not die again.

The material referred to follows:

ADDRESS TO THE OILED MAYORS OF FRANCE AND ALASKA

(Presented by Elenore McMullen, Village Council Secretary)

Good day, ladies and gentlemen. I want to thank Mayor Devons for arranging this historic international event, and for inviting me to speak on behalf of the villages of the Chugach native region of Alaska.

The native story is different from the white man's story of oil devastation. It is different because our lives are different, what we value is different; how we see the water and the land, the plants and the animals, is different. What white men do for sport and recreation and money, we do for life: for the life of our bodies, for the life of our spirits, and for the life of our ancient culture. Fishing and hunting and gathering are the rhythms of our tradition, regular daily life times, not vacation times, not employment times.

Our lives are rooted in the seasons of God's creation. Since time immemorial, the lives of the native peoples harmonize with the rhythm and the cycles of nature. We are a part of nature. We don't need a calendar or a clock to tell us what time it is. The misty green of new buds on trees tells us, the birds returning from their winter vacation tell us, the daylight tells us.

When the days get longer, we get ready. Boots and boats and nets and gear are prepared for the fishing time. The winter beaches are not lonely anymore, because our children and our grownups visit the beaches in the springtime and they gather the abundance of the sea: The shellfish, the snails, the chitons. When the first salmon is caught, our whole villages are excited. It is an annual ritual of mouth watering and delight. The children are excited. The parents are pleased and proud, the elders smile in their memories of 73 other spring times in the village.

When our bellies are filled with the fresh new life, then we put up the food for the winter. We dry and smoke and can. Hundreds of fish to feed a family. The homes have hanging fish alongside hanging laundry. The sights and smells of a village in the spring. This is the native way. This is the way the elders taught us, and their elders taught them, for thousands of years. Thousands of years. Since the big ice left Alaska, there was no Europe then. No Roman empire. There were no Jews, no Christians. No Egyptian civilization. But my people were here, the Alaska natives were here, celebrating spring and laughing and loving and working and teaching. The rhythm of nature. The rhythm of our lives.

Much has happened to our people in recent centuries. We have toilets now, and schools. We have clocks and calendars in our homes. Some of us go to an office in the morning. The children go to school in the morning. But sometimes the office is empty and locked. Sometimes the child is absent from school. Because there are more important things to do. Like walking the beaches. Collecting the chitons. Watching for the fish.

The roots of our lives grow deep into the water and the land. That is who we are. We are like our brothers, the bear and the deer—we live on the land, and our food is mostly from the water. Bear eat fish, deer eat seaweed, natives eat all of the life in the water.

The land and the water are our sources of life. The water is sacred. The water is like a baptismal font, and its abundance is the holy communion of our lives.

Of all the things that we have lost since non-natives came to our land, we have never lost our connection with the water. The water is our source of life. So long as the water is alive, the chugach natives are alive.

It was early in the springtime. No fish yet. No snails yet. But the signs were with us. The green was starting. Some birds were flying and singing. The excitement of the season had just begun.

And then we heard the news. Oil in the water. Lots of oil. Killing lots of water. It is too shocking to understand. Never in the millenium of our tradition have we thought it possible for the water do die. But it is true.

We walk our beaches. But the snails and the barnacles and the chitons are falling off the rocks. Dead. Dead water. We caught our first fish, the annual first fish, the traditional delight of all—but it got sent to the State to be tested for oil. No first fish this year. We walk our beaches. But instead of gathering life, we gather death. Dead birds. Dead otters. Dead seaweed.

Before we have a chance to hold each other and share our tears, our sorrow, our loss, we suffer yet another devastation . . . we are invaded by the oil company. Offering jobs. High pay. Lots of money. We are in shock. We need to clean the oil, get it out of our water, bring death back to life. We are intoxicated with desperation. We don't have a choice but to take what is offered. So we take the jobs, we take the orders, we take the disruption. We participate in the senseless busy-work.

We start fighting. We lose trust for each other. We lose control of our daily life. Everybody pushing everyone. We native people aren't used to being bossed around. We don't like it. But now our own people are pointing fingers at us. Everyone wants to be boss, we are not working like a team. We lose control of our village. The preschool meets in the community center. We shut down preschool so the oil company can have the center. We work for the oil company now. We work for money now. The springtime season of our village ways is gone. Destroyed.

Our people get sick. Elders and children in the village, workers on the beaches. Lots of sickness this year. Stomach sickness. Head pains. Bad colds.

We hardly talk to each other any more. Everybody is touchy. Everybody is ready to jump you and blame you. People are angry. And afraid. Afraid, and confused. Our elders feel helpless. They cannot work on cleanup, they cannot do all the activities of gathering food and preparing for the winter. And most of all, they cannot teach the young ones the native way. How will the children learn the values and the ways if the water is dead? Very afraid. If the water is dead, maybe we are dead—our heritage, our tradition, our ways of life and living and relating to nature and to each other.

The oil companies lied about preventing the spill. Now they lie about the cleanup. Our people know what happens on the beaches. Spend all day cleaning one huge rock, and the tide comes in and covers it with oil again. Spend a week wiping and spraying the surface, but pick up a rock and there's four inches of oil underneath. Our people know the water and the beaches. But they get told what to do by ignorant people who should be asking, not telling.

We fight a rich and powerful giant, the oil industry, while at the same time we take orders and a paycheck from it. We are torn in half.

Will it end? After five years, maybe we will see some spring time water life again. But will the water and the beaches see us? What will happen to our lives in the next five years? What will happen this fall, when the clean up stops and the money stops? We have lived through much devastation. Our villages were almost destroyed by chicken pox and tuberculosis. We fight the battles of alcohol and drugs and abuse, and we survive. A wise white man once said, "where there is life, there is hope." And that is true.

But what we see now is death. Death—not of each other, but of the source of life, the water.

We will need much help, much listening in order to live through the long barren season of dead water, a longer winter than ever before.

I am an elder. I am chief. I will not lose hope. And I will help my people. We have never lived through this kind of death. But we have lived through lots of other kinds of death. We will learn from the past, we will learn from each other, and we will live. The water is dead. But we are alive. And where there is life, there is hope.

Thank you for listening to the native story. God bless you.

THIRD MAJOR DEFEAT FOR ETHIOPIA'S COMMUNIST DICTATOR

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the regime of Mengistu Haile Mariam, Ethiopia's Communist military dictator, is coming apart at the seams. Mengistu's army, the mainstay of his power, has just sustained its third major defeat in less than 2 years. In the last 6 weeks, rebel forces of the Tigre People's Liberation Front [TPLF] wounded, killed, or captured some 20,000 of Mengistu's troops, bringing total casualties up to more than 50,000 since February 1988.

Two recent articles in the Washington Post reveal just how precarious Mengistu's position has become. They leave no doubt that Mengistu may soon fall.

Sadly, these articles also suggest that the United States Government lacks a coherent policy toward Ethiopia.

One article reports that the administration is reviewing its Ethiopia policy in light of what a senior official termed "some very positive steps" by the Mengistu government. Apparently the administration may decide to upgrade U.S. relations with Addis Ababa. But why? What are those alleged positive steps?

One administration official reportedly cited Mengistu's release of a "significant number" of political prisoners. Yet Amnesty International recently reported that torture remains a widespread practice of the Mengistu regime.

The official also cited Addis Ababa's "magnificent cooperation" with U.S. authorities in the search for a downed airplane and the remains of the passengers aboard, including Representative Mickey Leland, in early August. While such cooperation deserves our thanks, it does not warrant a basic change in U.S. policy.

Finally, the official cited the Mengistu government's participation in preliminary "peace" talks with the Eritrean guerrillas. Yet some of the bloodiest fighting in the Ethiopian civil war took place while these talks were going on. Furthermore, it should be obvious that Mengistu agreed to hold the talks simply because his back is against the wall: He did not want to have to fight a war on two fronts. As it happened, the Tigreans were able to defeat Mengistu's army anyway.

Now is not the time to take the pressure off Mengistu, diplomatically or otherwise. Nor should the United States squander its influence brokering truces between rival Ethiopian Communist factions. Our goal should be a united, free democratic Ethiopia, not a Lebanonized Ethiopia divided up among competing Communist warlords.

While the situation is still fluid, the United States should throw its support behind those prodemocratic Ethiopians who best embody the aspirations of the great majority of the Ethiopian people. Consistent and firm support for the democratic center in Ethiopia is the policy most consistent with our strategic interests and with moral principle.

ETHIOPIA SEEN THREATENED BY REBEL ADVANCE—TIGRAYAN ARMY IN POSITION TO CUT OFF VITAL SUPPLY LINK TO CAPITAL

(By Neil Henry)

ADDIS ABABA, ETHIOPIA, Oct. 9.—Rebel forces that captured the northern province of Tigray from the beleaguered Ethiopian army earlier this year have now charged more than 120 miles farther south toward the capital in a lightning offensive, overrunning numerous towns, forcing army troops into a ragged retreat and threatening the stability of the government of Mengistu

Haile Mariam, according to diplomats and analysts here.

In a six-week campaign that began in late August, the rebels have killed, wounded or captured an estimated 20,000 government soldiers, seized millions of dollars worth of military hardware and pushed the battle line between the two sides to a point well into Welo Province, about 180 miles north of this Ethiopian capital, the sources said.

While there appears to be little likelihood that the relatively small and overstretched rebel army will make a stab for Addis Ababa, analysts interviewed here in recent days agreed that the rebels pose a serious threat to a vital road linking the capital to the Red Sea port of Assab.

Most of the country's gasoline and other imported supplies reach the capital along that road. The Ethiopian army's 40,000-man detachment in Welo has retreated to the towns of Dese and Kembolcha, which are about 240 miles southeast of the port city.

Between Assab and the Ethiopian army is the town of Mile, whose capture by the guerrillas would effectively sever all land routes between the port and the capital. Analysts have reported fighting there in recent weeks.

The swiftness and success of the rebel offensive have astonished many observers here who expressed surpise over both the boldness of the insurgents and the apparent collapse of the government army.

Long confined to distant reaches of Tigray Province, the rebels of the Tigray People's Liberation Front broke out last year and announced their intentions not only to expel the Ethiopian army from Tigray but to overthrow Mengistu as well.

Their advances have come against the backdrop of peace negotiations held last month in Atlanta between the Ethiopian government and rebels from another northern region, Eritrea, who have been fighting a 28-year civil war.

Those talks, which are due to resume next month in Nairobi, were preceded by a cease-fire between the government and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front. According to Western analysts, the cease-fire enabled the government to risk the transfer of thousands of its best troops from Eritrea to Welo to halt the Tigrayan advance, but the troops were annihilated.

One Westerner described scenes of mass confusion and panic by the army of the Marxist government, which has had to resort to the forced conscription of teenagers to fight its twin wars. Down the road from Maychew on the Tigray-Welo border the rebels advanced, taking towns such as Korem, Waja and Kobo, where the government tried and failed to make a stand and lost scores of Soviet-made tanks and armored personnel carriers.

The rebels announced in a Voice of Tigray radio broadcast Sept. 15 that in just 10 days of "shining and victorious fighting" they had captured 28 T-55 tanks, 18 armored personnel carriers, 62 anti-aircraft guns, 59 artillery pieces and 165 different types of military vehicles. They also claimed to have destroyed 15 tanks and 10 armored personnel carriers, as well as dozens of weapons and other vehicles.

"That is what is so serious about the situation in Welo," said one informed Westerner. "This is an army that would not fight, an army that ran, disintegrated.

According to the analysts, several factors appear to account for the army's collapse. The forced conscription measures have infused the estimated 200,000-man force—widely considered sub-Saharan Africa's biggest and best—with sizeable numbers of reluctant warriors.

In addition, after so many years of bloodshed the army may be becoming just as wary of war as many in this nation of 42 million, particularly after suffering critical defeats in battles with the Eritreans last year.

But perhaps most importantly, the army was stripped of more than 200 top-ranking and highly trained officers during a bloody purge that followed an unsuccessful military coup here last May. Many of the officers were replaced by men possessing great loyalty to Mengistu but little military training or experience.

"The regime appears to be coming apart at the seams," said one Western diplomatic source, pointing out that Mengistu's power base has long rested with the military. "This is a very fluid period here."

Indeed, with the army's retreat in Welo this autumn, things have gone from bad to worse for Mengistu this year, which began with the fall of Tigray and has included the failed coup and at least one attempt on his life.

In addition, the collapse of world coffee prices has cut foreign exchange earnings here by 40 percent this year, this a country considered one of the poorest in the world.

Meanwhile, the United Nations is launching an appeal for hundreds of thousands of tons of emergency food donations for Eritera, where a severe drought this year is killing crops and raising the specter of famine for more than 1 million people.

To top it all, even the Soviets, who have pumped more than $10 billion in aid to this country in the last 15 years, appear to be ready to retreat.

Late last month, a top Soviet defense official visited Addis Ababa. While assuring Ethiopian officials that a current military aid agreement will be honored, he also informed them that Moscow would soon begin a process of pulling out more than 1,500 Soviet military advisers stationed here.

For his part, Mengistu has introduced a few measures that appear intended to boost morale. Gasoline rations and a ban on Sunday driving have been lifted, and a dress code for public officials who have had to wear Mao-style "Mengistu suits" in public has been dropped.

But the changes, while welcomed by many, appear to be cosmetic. As one observer put it, "This may be a matter of too little, too late."

Life here in the capital appears to be normal. Revolution Square bustle with vigor at lunchtime, people are still going to work as usual and popular after-dark restaurants and bars are still crowded until the midnight curfew.

But one diplomat stationed here noted that formerly staunch government supporters have begun to joke about the army's capabilities, while others have begun preparations to send their children overseas in the event of the regime's collapse.

For those among the masses of Ethiopians who may desire greater political freedoms or economic liberalization, there is the disconcerting prospect that this nation's future politics may not change, no matter what happens.

The Tigrayan rebels—whose army has doubled to nearly 40,000 men in the last year—may surpass even the government in revolutionary passion. Their leaders are said to be Stalinist.

ESCAPED OFFICER URGES U.S. TO SHUN MENGISTU—LEADER OF FAILED ETHIOPIAN COUP WARNS AGAINST "ACCOMMODATION," CITES WEAKENED MILITARY

(By David B. Ottaway)

A key officer involved in the coup attempt last May against Ethiopian leader Lt. Gen. Mengistu Haile Mariam has warned the Bush administration against continuing its efforts to improve relations with that embattled government.

"This is not the time for an accommodation with Mengistu," said Maj. Gen. Kumlachew Dejene in an interview here. "It's time for the United States to think of Ethiopia without Mengistu. That should be the basis of U.S. action and policy now."

Kumlachew, the chief operations officer for the coup, went into hiding for eight weeks in Addis Ababa after the coup's failure and then became the only participant known to have escaped. Almost all of the other officers involved were killed or captured or committed suicide.

Kumlachew said that it took him three weeks by food, mule and other transport to escape from Ethiopia and that he reached the United States Aug. 21. His interview with The Washington Post recently was his first since arriving here, aside from one in his Amharic language with the Voice of America.

At the end of the interview, Kumlachew read an appeal to the Bush administration against any accommodation with the Mengistu government.

The administration is reviewing its policy toward Ethiopia in light of what a senior official termed "some very positive steps" recently by the Mengistu government.

He cited its release of a "significant number" of political prisoners, willingness to begin peace talks with opposition groups, and its "magnificent cooperation" with U.S. authorities in the search for a downed plane and remains of the 16 people aboard, including Rep. Mickey Leland (D.Tex.), in southwestern Ethiopia in early August.

Since Mengistu turned to the Soviet Union to replace the United States as Ethiopia's main military and political ally in 1977, Washington has been unwilling to send an ambassador to Addis Ababa. But the Reagan administration did ship hundreds of millions of dollars in emergency relief to help prevent famine in the mid-1980s.

Mengistu since late last year has been making overtures to Washington for an improvement in relations and exchange of ambassadors, proposing one candidate, Tibelu Bekele, to become Ethiopia's envoy here. But the State Department never agreed.

Kumlachew, who attended a 13-month, artillery training course at Fort Sill, Okla., in 1969, was deputy commander of the 2nd Army based in northern Asmera. He was named the chief operations officer for the coup attempt, which he said had been under discussion since 1985.

He flew from Asmera to Addis Ababa on the afternoon of May 16 with 408 of his troops. They had the prearranged assignment of seizing the defense ministry and other strategic points around the capital. His men were the only ones who fought for the coup.

The conspirators included the army chief of staff, the air force commander and commanding officers of the 2nd Army in Asmera. The coup was planned for the day Mengistu left on a visit to East Germany. Memgistu's plane was supposed to be forced to land in Asmera, where he was to be arrested, or shot down if the pilot refused to obey orders, according to Kumlachew.

Two MiGs piloted by co-conspirators left to intercept Mengistu's aircraft but at the last moment received orders not to go forward. Kumlachew said he does not know who gave those orders or why.

As a result, Mengistu arrived safely in East Berlin, while loyalist officers organized a hasty defense of the capital.

After a showdown at the defense ministry between Mengistu loyalists and the rebel army chief of staff, Gen. Merid Negussie, the coup fizzled, apparently mainly because of the double role played by Gen. Tesfaye Wolde Selassie, head of internal security.

Tesfaye initially posed as a conspirator but remained loyal to Mengistu, using the information he gathered to foil the coup.

Kumlachew said he had set up his command post at the city's old airport and split his forces to secure three or four strategic points. Other units expected to join the conspiracy never arrived, and Kumlachew, after failing to reach the defense ministry, lost a night battle trying to return to his command post, he said.

While Mengistu survived, the extraordinary security measures he has taken since to protect himself apparently have seriously weakened the Ethiopian armed forces. Last month, it suffered several major military defeats at the hands of the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), whose forces are now closer to the capital than at any time.

Kumlachew said 680 officers have been removed, arrested or executed since the coup attempt, including 40 generals. He said this has seriously depleted the top ranks of the officer corps. Mengistu has replaced them with politically reliable elements who are not professionals and are proving to be bad commanders, Kumlachew said.

In addition, the "psychological momentum" now is on the side of groups opposed to the Mengistu government that were gaining strength before the coup attempt. The army last March evacuated the provincial capital of Tigray, Mekele, after losing massive amounts of equipment and as many as 20,000 troops in a battle at Inde Selassie in mid-February.

The army has just suffered another defeat of similar proportions, according to U.S. government sources.

U.S. officials have not disputed TPLF claims that 27,000 Ethiopian troops were killed, wounded or captured in clashes in Welo Province in central Ethiopia between late August and mid-September. The TPLF said it also captured massive amounts of Soviet arms, including 28 T-55 tanks, provided by Moscow to the Ethiopian army.

Mengistu's army now has lost most of northern Eritrea Province, all of Tigray Province and is struggling to hold on to the provincial capital of Welo at Dessie, about 150 miles north of the capital.

A senior U.S. official said the Mengistu government still seems "pretty solidly entrenched" in Addis Ababa. But Kumlachew disputed this assessment, predicting its downfall shortly and expressing concern that this might be preceded by a "general collapse of law and order" in the country.

THE HUMANITARIAN RELIEF EFFORTS OF CHAMBERS DEVELOPMENT CO.

HON. ARTHUR RAVENEL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 20th day since a large portion of South Carolina was battered by the devastating hurricane called Hugo. And I am happy to report that because of the generosity and voluntarism of hundreds of civic groups and companies and thousands of individual citizens from around the country, we are well on our way to restoring the natural and historic beauty that characterizes our area.

In particular, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the humanitarian relief efforts of Chambers Development Co. Three of its employees—Lowell "Butch" Spires, Jr., southern regional corporate development director, J. Carl Spires, corporate development area manager, and John "Jake" Knotts, corporate investigator—calling their group Project Chambers Rebuild, were out in full force the day after Hugo struck, clearing roads and debris from the storm. During a 5-day period, Butch, Carl, and Jake distributed water and more than 20 tons of ice to residents from Chambers' landfill in Dorchester County. But this wasn't enough.

The Chambers trio then took their show on the road, establishing hot meal stations in eight of the most flood-ravaged towns. They estimated that over 800 residents a day were served. In some of the towns, this was the first hot meal the townspeople had had since Hugo hit.

In the town of McClellanville, which was particularly hard-hit, the challenges were many: Snakes presented a great danger, mosquitos were a threat, and debris and electrical wires were blocking many accesses. On Friday, September 29, the group fed everyone—the townspeople, the National Guard, highway department, and a Navy disaster relief crew. Over 800 were fed breakfast, and over 1,000 were served lunch and dinner.

In addition to Project Chambers Rebuild, Chambers established a fund to help its employees in South Carolina who required financial assistance during their rebuilding process. The corporation is matching every dollar its employees contribute to the program. This is just one example of what many companies are doing to pitch in and help our various storm-damaged communities.

INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL AND THIRD WORLD DEBT REDUCTION

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to motivate Third World countries mired in debt and in drugs to dig themselves out. My bill would link the vital issues of international narcotics control and Third World debt reduction. The central point of my legislation is a mechanism by which multilateral banks such as the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank, and other institutions give preference in loans to those nations which have made progress in reducing drug production, processing, and trafficking in their countries.

Every day the papers are full of bad news about drugs. Sometimes Americans are so wrapped up in our own drug problems we forget what's happening on the other side of the equator. There's human misery there, too. Addiction is growing exponentially in Colombia—the primitive drug, basuco, claiming as many lives as crack is here—and other Andean countries. The entire agricultural sector threatens to become enslaved to the lucrative proceeds of coca. The fragile foundation of democracy is teetering on the edge of collapse, pushed by the narcotraffickers, who function as a virtual shadow government in the Andean region.

I don't intend to stay passive in this war. The fact is that America is already fighting in the trenches to restore economic integrity to the nations of South America. The ongoing efforts by the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce the debt burdens of many Third World countries are the frontlines of this battle. Mr. Brady and the administration are trying to throw these countries a lifeline, to help them out of the economic quicksand of their debt burden.

I want to hand them another weapon for their arsenal. Let's call it the Stealth bomber of the Third World debt reduction plan. The weapon is a special incentive for Third World countries to crack down on drug trafficking in their own nations. It works through the multilateral banks. As you know, the multilateral banks give loans to indebted countries for the purpose of debt reduction. My bill instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the American voting representatives of the banks to give preference, when voting on debt reduction loans, to countries which show significant progress in reducing drug production, processing, and trafficking. In other words, those who help themselves, get some help.

Significant improvement can be shown through punishment of narcotraffickers, money launderers, bribery or public corruption. It can take the form of satisfactory adherence to a bilateral narcotics control agreement with the United States. It can be seen in increased public support for drug treatment facilities, drug prevention and education programs, and increased cooperation with United States antidrug personnel.

The bill is very simple. It's a carrot. It provides an incentive for these nations to crack down harder on drug trafficking within their own borders. It will encourage economic reform, and legitimate income generating activity, where it is desperately needed. It will discourage illicit coca production, processing, trafficking, and money laundering—and in turn, reduce the bloated supply of cocaine flowing over the U.S. borders.

Mr. Speaker, and fellow Members, I urge your strong support of this bill. It's a positive and creative step whose time has come. Let's work together with our neighbors all over the world who are fighting the plague of drugs, and who want and deserve our help.

DUNCAN OPPOSES ABC BILL

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, the House voted to keep the ABC child care bill intact in the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989. I regret that the House did not prefer a tax credit approach, which would have put more money in the hands of parents.

I have said many times that parents know better how to spend their money and more about what the needs of their families are than any bureaucrats in Washington.

A recent article in National Review highlights the problems with the ABC bill. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The bill creates a costly new bureaucracy to oversee the so-called child care crisis. Its approach is to subsidize day care centers, which discriminates against traditional families.

Also, the article points out that religious-based child care providers would be placed under Government control. These programs would be forced to compromise their beliefs to the State. I object to this kind of setup.

The real question is, does a child care crisis really exist. The statistics show that this is a concoction of political manipulators. The vast majority of Americans follow a traditional family pattern. There is no real child care crisis.

The National Review article makes the case that the best approach to this crisis is to relieve the tax burden on families. I believe that a tax credit for families with children is the most simple, the most fair, and the most reasonable step to take to help America's families.

I urge my colleagues to read this article from National Review and take a rational look at this bad bill. We can still keep from making a mistake with the ABC bill.

SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN

(By Susan Mandel)

WASHINGTON, DC.—With Washington boasting the highest percentage of working mothers of any city in the nation, it's not surprising that many lawmakers have become convinced that nobody stays home with the kids any more. Evidently they have also become convinced that the only approach to child care is for the government to fund institutional day care, because only it can be properly monitored by a bureaucracy of specialists. This is the approach taken in the ABC child-care bill passed by the Senate in June. It is also the rationale for two bills now making their way through the House, which is expected to have a floor vote on one of them after Labor Day.

The Act for Better Child Care is sponsored by the unlikely duo of Senator Christopher Dodd (D., Conn.) and Orrin Hatch (R., Utah). It would subsidize day-care centers through federal grants, with nearly a third of the estimated $12-billion price tag going to pay for administrative and regulatory compliance. In some states, families earning up to $47,000 could qualify for this assistance so long as their children were in one of the government-approved day-care centers. Traditional homes—i.e., the 54 per cent of American families with young children in which the parents choose to forgo a second income so the mother can stay home with the children—don't fare nearly as well. The same goes for the next largest group of parents with preschoolers—those who leave their children with a relative—and the third largest, who use small, family day-care providers.

In short, this child-care package would set up a bureaucratic decision-making process that favors large, secular day-care centers over other, less institutional care. Although this is being done in the name of "choice," the irony is that the large day-care centers favored by these bills serve only 11 per cent of the population. Their advantage is purely political: not only are they more likely to meet some child-care specialist's idea of what constitutes quality care (such as written statements of their policy goals), they can pull the right bureaucratic strings. "If you have a political struggle, grandma is going to lose," says the Heritage Foundation's Robert Rector.

The Senate proposal ostensibly permits states to offer parents certificates to pay for child care in church-run day-care centers, which provide one-third of all institutional day care. But the church centers would have to submit to state regulation to receive the funds, something few would be willing to do. Even should this be allowed initially, moreover, this provision would probably be challenged by left-wing groups opposed to any public funding for religious-based organizations. Mr. Rector says a black staffer on the Hill whose own two children are in her church's day-care center came up to him after he had testified on the subject before a House committee. "She said, 'I recognize that under ABC I wouldn't get any assistance. But that doesn't matter to me because the most important thing for me is to have my children raised in an environment that honors God. And if I have to be poor the rest of my life I will do so.' This is a verbatim quote because it was just imprinted on my neurons," says Mr. Rector.

What the ABC bill would do is help make that young mother poorer, by taxing her to pay for institutional care for others, including the children of two-income families (which on average earn over 50 per cent more than families with one breadwinner, according to the latest Census Bureau figures). In fact, traditional families in which the father works and the mother stays home to care for the children make up the largest category of low-income families.

"The most reasonable thing and the most effective thing that the Federal Government can do to improve accessibility of child care, to improve affordability of child care is to concentrate as large an amount of its resources as possible on strengthening the financial position of families who have small children to care for," says Michael Schwartz of the Free Congress Foundation. As Mr. Rector says, "The average mother contributes about 30 per cent of the total family income in a two-parent family, and the average federal tax burden on that family is about 24 per cent. Mom is not working to raise the family income. She's working to pay off Uncle Sam. The way to help those families is not to build more day-care centers to put more women in the workforce to pay their tax bill, it's to cut their tax bill."

President Bush's child-care proposal aimed to do exactly that by providing an earned-income tax credit for families earning under $15,000 that have young children. The Bush bill was defeated in the Senate, but the idea makes so much more sense that the Democrats have tacked similar tax-relief provisions onto their own heavily centralized, bureaucratic versions.

What's surprising about the Senate child-care package, meanwhile, is not how bad it is; Senator Dodd's endorsement fairly guarantees that. The surprising thing is to find Senator Hatch listed as co-sponsor. One rumor has it that he would like to be on the Supreme Court some day and doesn't want Democrats to turn him into another Judge Bork. Whatever the fate of this bill, it's hard to argue for convincing conservative alternatives when leading conservative lawmakers embrace the liberal status quo.

GOAL PROGRAM AT HILLSDALE COLLEGE

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to highlight a program being undertaken at one of the colleges in my district which hopefully could serve as an example to other institutions. The program recently was featured in a Detroit Free Press article.

Hillsdale College in southcentral Michigan has a program in its second year called Great Opportunities for Assistance and Leadership—[GOAL]. Funded with the help of a $900,000 Kellogg Foundation grant, GOAL links student scholarships and a commitment to public service. In particular, the 20 students currently in GOAL have agreed to devote specified weekly blocks of time to public service projects in exchange for a full scholarship to Hillsdale College.

As Hillsdale College President George Roche explained to the Detroit Free Press:

The idea is * * * to give (students) the freedom, in addition to their academic work, to take on substantial public service projects here during the year and at home in their home communities during the summer.

GOAL students design their own projects and make reports on their efforts, as well as receiving classroom instruction in voluntarism, the history of philanthropy and management of nonprofit organizations.

During the first year of the program, GOAL students worked on projects—and with organizations—which included: Special Olympics, an Optimist Club essay competition, the local Boy Scouts, the county child abuse prevention council, a mentor program for gifted elementary students, a recycling project, Right to Life, Students Against Drunk Driving, and a leadership forum for high school students.

At a time when volunteerism seems to be dwindling, I believe the GOAL program at Hillsdale College is an innovative way to encourage volunteer work by offering the reward of a college education in exchange for public service. It makes a lot of sense to offer scholarships for such civic-minded activities as well as the more traditional scholarship for athletics.

Mr. Speaker, I commend both the faculty and students at Hillsdale College as they continue this exciting program which combines academic excellence and community work.

ETHICS, BALANCE, AND THE "G-WORD"

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to your attention a commencement address by J. Ira Harris, a senior partner with Lazard Freres & Co., to graduates of the University of Michigan Graduate School of Business. He argues forcefully that there is a big difference between self-interest and short-sighted selfish behavior, which is what greed really is. He remarks that Wall Street has been acting as if it only know the "G-word," and stresses that we need to focus on our responsibilities.

ETHICS, BALANCE, AND THE "G-WORD"

(By J. Ira Harris)

(A distinguished alumnus tells our graduates, in his Commencement Address to them last spring, that greed is not good and isn't essential to our private enterprise system. "In fact," he adds, "It's a threat.")

Thirty years ago, I was on the receiving end of a commencement speech here at The University of Michigan. Less than thirty minutes after it was over, I couldn't remember how many hours it seemed to go on, and certainly couldn't recall what it was all about.

Hopefully, tonight things will be different. My remarks will be just a few minutes long. But . . . will I say anything that you'll remember half-an-hour after I finish? I hope so.

There are some commencement speeches that have been remembered. Winston Churchill gave one.

At Harrow School in England, Churchill delivered a commencement address that consisted of the following: "Never give in. Never, never, never, never . . . never give in . . . except to convictions of honor and good sense."

The columnist Art Buchwald is another graduation speaker whose words have been remembered. Here's what he said to a Vassar College graduating class: "We, the older generation, have given you kids a perfect world. Don't louse it up!"

Obviously, if you're a commencement speaker . . . and you want your words to be immortal . . . you've got to be brief. But, I've already talked longer than Churchill or Buchwald. Actually, I've talked longer than the two of them combined.

So, I have to be realistic. I have to accept the fact that, half-an-hour after I'm done, what I said will be "out of ear . . . out of mind." That's why my goal is to get you to think about what I'm saying . . . while I'm saying it.

In addition to being a proud alumnus. I'm also here as a proud parent.

As parents, we love and respect our children. We respect their energy, their new insights, and their eagerness to make the world a better place.

And we respect the fact that they've already indicated that they're not afraid of a challenge—that they don't always choose the "easy way out."

You can see that in the fact that they took on the heavy demands of tough degree programs here at the University of Michigan.

And that's terrific, because as we all know. Art Buchwald was wrong. It's not a "perfect world" . . . by any stretch.

And these new Michigan graduates are just the kind of people we need . . . in the kind of world we have today.

I'd also like to note that the "U of M" business grads of earlier years have a pretty good track record. For instance, Michigan grads have managed to steer clear of the scandals that have hit Wall Street.

In my mind, there would be four possible explanations. Let me put them in the form of a multiple-choice answer.

A. University of Michigan graduates don't advance to the levels where folks get exposed to temptation.

B. University of Michigan graduates do get exposed to temptation . . . but they're not bright enough to recognize it.

C. University of Michigan graduates are so smart that, even though they give in to temptation . . . they don't get caught. Or . . .

D. University of Michigan graduates have higher standards, ideals, and ethics.

I'd like to think that "D" is the right answer. The curriculum, the moral atmosphere, and the admissions standards of the "U of M" deserve credit for that.

But so do your homes, your churches and synagogues, and the other institutions that helped build your ethical foundation.

I bring up the issue of ethics because I see its importance day-in and day-out—as a member of this society and as an investment banker.

At what was to me the ethical low-point of the movie Wall Street, the leading character—Gordon Gekko—bluntly said that "greed is good."

There are some who think that if you take exception to that statement, you run the risk of looking naive—out of touch with the "real world." Well I'm willing to run that risk tonight.

I'm willing to say that greed is not good. Not only is it not good, it isn't essential to our private enterprise system. In fact, it's a threat.

But, one might ask, isn't the private enterprise system based on self-interest? Of course it is. And isn't "self-interest" just another term for "greed?"

The answer is "No." There's all the difference in the world between "self-interest" and "short-sighted selfish behavior"—(which is what greed really is).

Unfortunately, Wall Street—the market—not just the movie—has been acting as if it only knows the "G-word."

Insider trading . . . program trading . . . market manipulation—these activities have turned individual investors away from the financial markets in disgust. No wonder retail brokerage firms have seen their client lists shrink "like a cheap suit."

This is very disturbing. It undermines the legitimacy of our capital markets—which is essential to our economy. And if you look at history, you see why we should be concerned about widespread public dissatisfaction with our capital markets.

That dissatisfaction could lead to damaging regulatory restrictions which could make it impossible for those markets to serve our economy with maximum effectiveness.

To complicate matters, our financial markets—and other key elements of the financial services industry—are undergoing profound change. This makes them vulnerable.

The last thing that Wall Street needs these days is to lose the confidence of the American people.

What can you and I do about the ethical problems of our society? As I see it, we're not helpless.

On that subject, let me mention an interview with Jerald Jellison, professor of psychology at the University of California. It appeared in U.S. News & World Report in 1984. The article was entitled "Why Cheating is on the Rise in the U.S."

Professor Jellison acknowledged that—for better or for worse—the ethical lessons that we learn early in our lives have a big impact on how we behave as adults.

But he also said, and I quote, "instances of dishonesty have a snowball effect. Many people tend to think that since everyone else is cheating, they have to do the same in order to protect themselves."

I think that's sad but true. However, if you look at it another way, it means that each of us has the potential for what I call "ethical leverage."

What I mean is that by example we can inspire others. We can encourage others to do what's right every time we have the courage and the wisdom to stand tall and "just say no!"

Equally important as ethics is the need for "balance"—balance in our business lives, and balance in our personal lives.

To illustrate, I want to tell a brief story about a young MBA grad from a school I won't name.

This freshly minuted MBA was employed by a company in Chicago. One day, a last minute problem prevented our MBA's boss from making use of a ticket to hear Sir George Solti conduct the Chicago Symphony Orchestra performing Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony."

The boss offered the ticket to our MBA—who gladly accepted. The next morning, the boss received a nice thank-you note along with a memorandum that read:

"Thought you'd like to have my analysis of the performance.

One: For considerable periods of time, the four oboe players had nothing to do. Their number should be reduced, and their work spread over the rest of the orchestra.

Two: All 12 violins were playing identical notes. This seems to be unnecessary duplication. The staff of this section of the orchestra should be drastically diminished.

Three: Much effort was absorbed in the playing of "eighth" notes. They seem to be an excessive complication. All notes could be rounded off to the nearest quarter. If this were done, it would be possible to make use of trainees and lower-grade operators.

Four: No useful purpose is served by having the horns repeat the same passage that has already been played by the strings. If all such redundant passages were eliminated, the concert could be reduced from two hours to approximately 20 minutes.

Finally: If Schubert had been better organized, he probably would have been able to finish this symphony."

Hard work and attention to detail are absolutely necessary if you want to succeed in business. But you don't want to be like our young MBA and miss the forest for the trees.

There are many aspects to our lives. We are members of communities . . . we're employees . . . we may be husbands, or wives, or parents . . . and more.

We all have to balance the various parts of our lives. Yet, when we do try to balance our lives, we are faced with tough trade-offs. Spending more time with our families . . . or in volunteer work . . . or in any other worthwhile way . . . will mean time away from our offices. There's no denying that. And it may seem to be at the expense of our careers.

But the fact of the matter is that it's absolutely essential for each of us to widen our focus. For one thing, it renews us. It re-energizes us.

Among other things, this makes us more creative in relating to the needs of our clients and our colleagues. And that gives us an important competitive edge.

I'd also like to make the case for "balance" in a broader context. Specifically, I want to comment on a significant imbalance that's developed in the financial structures of many of our corporations.

I'm referring to the fact that through management buyouts . . . leveraged buyouts . . . takeovers . . . and leveraged recapitalizations . . . company after company has come to rely heavily on debt rather than equity.

This is a serious matter because many of these firms are pillars of our economy.

However, they are flagrantly abandoning time-honored standards of financial prudence. Now, I would be the last to argue that financial guidelines should be rigidly obeyed when they're clearly obsolete.

But I think we ought to be cautious when it comes to the kind of financial wizardry we've seen in recent years.

For sure, it's demonstrated its power to convert many of our nation's major corporations into "debt junkies." But that financial wizardry hasn't had its magic tested in a recession.

A recession is a matter of "when" . . . not "if!" And when it does arrive, firms saddled with heavy debt-service obligations could find themselves galloping over a financial cliff.

Put aside the possibility of a recession . . . the leveraging of corporate America still poses a serious, long-term threat.

It has to do with funds that should be dedicated to research and development . . . and capital investment. Instead, these dollars will disappear into interest charges and repayment of principal.

After all, companies are going to have to service the bank loans . . . the junk bonds . . . and the other forms of debt that have crowded their way onto their balance sheets.

In the meantime, in 1992, Europe will become a huge and dynamic unified market. And Japan doesn't look like its growth is going to stop anytime soon.

So, what will we tell your children—my generation's grandchildren—if they have to ask us why we passed on to them an economy that limps along behind its competitors?

We need to return to more balanced capital structures in our companies. And you and I and all others who manage this nation's economic resources have to make that a high priority.

I've said a few words about ethics, and a few words about balance. Now, I'd like to focus on my third and final topic.

Just last month, an issue of Time Magazine printed a letter-to-the-editor from a Mr. John Karakash, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. I want to read two lines from that letter to you tonight.

Quote . . . "When I landed here as an immigrant, I learned about the Bill of Rights. Naive and ignorant, I inquired whether there was also a Bill of Responsibilities."

I think Mr. Karakash was on to something. And so, I want to talk for a moment about "responsibilities."

In my view, each of us should live our personal and professional lives as if, in fact, a Bill of Responsibilities existed.

We simply cannot say "let the government do it." Government frequently has neither the necessary resources nor the necessary will.

Therefore, one of our responsibilities should be to encourage and help the companies that employ us to meet their social responsibilities.

If we, and the companies we work for, provide the needed leadership and make the essential commitments, this nation of ours will, in fact, be a better society. Business and business-people can and should point the way.

Responsibilities exist in our personal lives . . . as well as our business lives. Each of us must put something back into the system. That is, to me, the least that we can do in appreciation of the opportunities that our country makes available to us.

As a practical matter, that means putting something back into our institutions—in particular, our nation's colleges and universities.

Not surprisingly, there's one university that in my mind stands out way above the rest. It's my alma mater—and soon to be your alma mater—this University of Michigan. In many respects, this is a special place.

I'd like to end my remarks this evening with some words spoken by a great man from my adopted state of Illinois—Adlai Stevenson. 25 years ago, at a graduation ceremony at Princeton University, he said:

"Your days are short here . . . this is the last of your springs. And now in the serenity and quiet of this lovely place, touch the depths of truth, feel the hem. You will go away with old, good friends.

"Don't forget when you leave why you came."

Thank you . . . and good luck to all of you!

H.R. 24, CONFERENCE AGREEMENT ON REAUTHORIZATION OF SCHOOL LUNCH, CHILD NUTRITION, AND WOMENS, INFANTS, AND CHILDRENS [WIC] PROGRAMS

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement reached between the House and Senate with regard to reauthorization of the school lunch, child nutrition, and Women, Infants, and Childrens Supplemental Food Programs [WIC] not permanently authorized in law.

As it happened, the bills passed by the House and Senate were not in great disagreement with respect to congressional intent in reauthorizing the programs that go to feed hungry children and, in the case of WIC, pregnant women and their unborn children.

NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM

The National School Lunch Program is a permanently authorized program. Certain changes are made in that program. Under H.R. 24, is the requirement that schools participating in the school lunch program offer whole milk and fluid unflavored lowfat milk—which includes 2 percent and skim milk—as a beverage.

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS

This legislation requires schools and child care centers to collect Social Security numbers of only that parent or guardian responsible for the child who is the principal wage earner or of another appropriate person as designated by the Secretary, instead of all adult household members, on the initial application for free or reduced price meals.

Concerns have been expressed that the use of Social Security numbers for student participation in the program may have actually deterred the participation of otherwise eligible children. While regulations provide some flexibility in providing meals to students whose applications are not complete, school officials are reluctant to provide such flexibility for fear of an audit exception.

The bottom line is that the importance of nutrition for learning is firmly established, and it is not our intent to let the required use of Social Security numbers to prevent otherwise qualifying students from participating in child nutrition programs.

DIRECT CERTIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY

Schools that can obtain information directly from local food stamp or AFDC offices regarding which children are from families that participate in these programs will have the authority to certify these children as eligible for a free meal without further application.

It is the committee's intent that the Secretary develop regulations on this provision requiring school officials to notify parents of their child's eligibility for a free meal, and give the parents the opportunity to determine whether or not their child should partake of the free meals for which he or she is eligible. This requirement would impose the least burden on the school by requiring that a letter be sent to parents asking them to inform the school if they do not want their child to receive a free lunch. If the school does not receive a response from the parents within a certain number of days, specified by the Secretary, it is then assumed that the parent has given consent for the child to receive the free meals.

SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN

The Summer Food Service Program for Children is expanded slightly to permit private nonprofit organizations to sponsor these programs in areas where public sponsors are not operating such a program. In urban areas, a private nonprofit sponsor may operate a total of 5 sites; in rural areas, such sponsors may operate no more than 20 sites. The committee intends that the USDA continue to use the definition of "rural area" that is currently utilized in the Summer Food Service Program. Of importance is the provision that the USDA and the State agencies devote additional resources to monitoring all phases of future summer feeding program activities to ensure that local participants are fully apprised of and in compliance with all program requirements. Accordingly, the bill reserves one-half of one percent of Summer Food Program funds for the Secretary to develop and implement a State and Federal monitoring system of private nonprofit organizations, and dependent on final evaluations and recommendations made by the Department as a result of such monitoring, the committee may wish to make further modifications to the terms under which private nonprofit organizations participate in the program.

CHILD AND ADULT CARE FOOD PROGRAMS

The bill renames the section in the National School Lunch Act that authorizes the Child Care Food Program and the Adult Care Food Program as the "Child and Adult Care Food Programs," since the two programs serve very different populations. H.R. 24 further requires that the Adult Care Food Program meet one-third of the recommended daily allowance for adults as established by the National Academy of Sciences and allows the Governor of a State to designate a State agency other than the one administering the Child Care Food Program to operate the Adult Care Food Program.

SCHOOL-SPONSORED AFTERSCHOOL CARE PROGRAMS

Because most of the school-sponsored afterschool care programs operate only 9 months of the year, the committees were concerned about the frequency of monitoring such programs—resulting in monitoring visits that took place at nearly monthly intervals. H.R. 24 stipulates that school-sponsored care programs should only be subject to monitoring three times a year, and directs the Secretary to remedy this situation through the regulatory process.

HOMELESS CHILDREN DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

This legislation mandates that the Secretary institute demonstration projects to provide year-round food service to homeless children under age 6 in emergency shelters. Under the demonstration the children served would be eligible to receive the same meals as may be provided under the Child Care Food Program, and at the same reimbursement rates. All children served at such sites shall be deemed eligible to receive free meals without the collection of free and reduced price meal applications, as is the practice in the Summer Food Program.

The purpose of the proposed demonstration is to determine the best means of providing food assistance, and an effective delivery system for such assistance, to homeless preschool children in shelters.

SINGLE AUDIT AND ACCOUNTABILITY REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important changes the committee amendment made in the compliance and accountability provisions is one that outlines a "unified system prescribed and administered by the Secretary for ensuring the local food service authorities * * * comply with the provisions of this Act." The requirement intends that States coordinate all compliance and accountability activities so that the burden on schools is minimized. H.R. 24 requires that in establishing this new single audit system, the Secretary do so through the publication of regulations, thereby allowing for public comment.

To prevent the past practices by the Department of imposing several different layers of audits on local school food service authorities throughout each school year, whether or not reports of significant noncompliance have been received by the Department, the committee expresses the intent of Congress that the Secretary be required to target management evaluations primarily on local food service authorities where there has been demonstrated significant noncompliance with program requirements, rather than the random, many layered audit and accountability systems now in use by the Department of Agriculture which are not necessarily tied to reported or suspected significant noncompliance by such school food authorities.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NEW SCHOOL BREAKFAST ENTITLEMENT PROGRAM

Under H.R. 24, the School Breakfast Program has been expanded in order to initiate School Breakfast Programs in States where there are few, if any, school breakfast programs in operation.

I am pleased to note that West Virginia has a State law which mandates the School Breakfast Program, and that a majority of school districts have a fully implemented school breakfast program in place. It is my expectation that West Virginia School Food Service Authorities will examine these new school breakfast start up assistance provisions carefully to determine whether or not the State can and should benefit from such additional assistance.

Having stated above that West Virginia has had a official mandate on its books for many years requiring school breakfast programs, it is important to note the State also benefitted, as did a majority of all States, from a previous provision in the National School Lunch Program, which has since been allowed to expire, that appropriated funds annually for equipment and other startup assistance necessary for schools to implement school lunch programs. Previously authorized startup assistance, allowing the acquisition of appliances for cooking, refrigeration and storage capabilities for the implementation of lunch programs, should naturally have led to the ability and action by the States to implement school breakfast programs when they were authorized. The fact remains, and the committee recognizes, that many States including those with so-called school breakfast mandates in place, still have not responded to this need by actually implementing breakfast programs for the same hungry children who qualify for free and reduced price lunches. That recognition led to the provision of this new entitlement for school breakfast program startup assistance contained in H.R. 24.

TWENTY-PERCENT COMMODITY REFUSAL

The bill also retains the provision in current law allowing schools to refuse up to 20 percent of the value of commodities that they are entitled to receive each year. Although most school food service authorities do not elect to exercise this option, it has been retained to provide flexibility to those schools that may not be able to utilize certain commodities that may be offered.

SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN [WIC]

Program eligibility: H.R. 24 includes an amendment requiring that an individual at nutritional risk who receives benefits from Food Stamps, AFDC, or Medicaid, or who is a member of a family in which a pregnant woman or infant receives Medicaid benefits be deemed automatically to meet the WIC income test.

Countable income: The bill permits State agencies to not count basic allowance for quarters received by military service personnel residing off military installations as income for the purpose of determining income eligibility for WIC.

BREAST FEEDING

The bill provides for breast-feeding materials and instruction, but it is important to note that the committee does not intend for State agencies to expend public funds on the production of such materials in cases where private agencies have donated a sufficient supply of materials which include correct, complete, and up-to-date information.

It is the hope and expectation of this member of the Education and Labor Committee that the funds for WIC will, to the absolute extent possible, be used to provide for new intake and direct services to women, infants, and children eligible for such services. In other words, I would hope that a State's portion of breast-feeding funds will not be used for hiring so-called lactation specialists as a means of promoting breast feeding. Funds under the WIC Program are being slightly expanded this year, and I believe will continue to be expanded to the extent that the budgetary restraints we labor under will permit. My belief that continued expansion of funding for WIC in the coming years will be approved by Congress is based on irrefutable evidence that the WIC Program works in every way it is intended to work to assist poor, pregnant women and their children up to a certain age to obtain sufficient nutritional foods in their daily diets so as to improve their overall health and well-being. By providing proper nourishment and other pre- and post-natal care to assure healthier women, infants, and children, we improve the infant mortality rates in the United States, and avoid the much more costly care for women, infants, and children that comes from neglect and failure to serve them early enough to make a difference.

WIC, which is not fully funded and does not serve the number of women and infants who are eligible for nutritional services, needs every dime it can get for direct nutritional assistance. This is not to say that breast feeding is not the very best available source of nourishment for newborn infants, and superior to most formulas on the market. Nothing could be further from the truth. But in fact USDA has advised that it now spends far more than $8 million a year on breast-feeding instruction and promotion, and views the $8 million provided for that purpose in H.R. 24 as a cap rather than an expansion of such services.

The bill, H.R. 24, further requires that State WIC agencies utilize a cost containment system that yields the most savings, with respect to baby formula rebate programs in force at the time of enactment, thereby allowing such States to use the savings to increase the number of program participants. There are waiver conditions for the Secretary's consideration in the case where States can document that the bill's cost containment measures would impose undue hardship or otherwise be detrimental to their formula rebate programs for WIC purposes.

WIC FOR INCARCERATED WOMEN

Recent studies have found that women in prison and their babies comprise a population at risk for poor prenatal outcome. Because some penal health care systems do not meet what are nationally accepted as minimal standards in maternal and child health care, children born to mothers in prison, especially to those with alcohol and drug abuse problems, often have severe and chronic health problems which require very specialized and costly treatment.

For that reason, the committee has authorized an optional program, permitting States, at their discretion, to expand WIC coverage to pregnant women and their infants in State and local prisons and juvenile detention facilities.

WIC funding is authorized at $2.16 billion in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

NUTRITION EDUCATION AND TRAINING

H.R. 24 further provides for an expansion of the Nutrition and Education Training Program through 1994, with funding authorizations set at $10 million in fiscal year 1990, rising in increments of $5 million per year through fiscal year 1994 to $25 million. The legislation also increases a State's minimum grant when the actual appropriation increases.

PAPERWORK REDUCTION

The bill contains a series of provisions aimed at paperwork reduction, including the expectation that the Secretary will consider carefully the paperwork burdens that new requirements may impose and to consider whether some existing paperwork requirements may be eased.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee for his strong leadership with regard to the reauthorization of child nutrition and WIC programs, and the expansion and improvement of those programs contained in H.R. 24.

As a Member of the Education and Labor Committee, I am pleased to have been directly involved in the process that has led to the reauthorization of the School Lunch Program, expansion of the School Breakfast Program, improvement of the WIC Program, and other programmatic changes which are designed to lead to fuller participation of all children, adults, and pregnant women qualifying for food assistance services as authorized.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in strong support for passage of H.R. 24.

CAPTAIN KEITH BOYER: AN OUTSTANDING CITIZEN

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, Captain Keith Boyer of the Alameda County Sheriff's Department in the Ninth Congressional District of California has been nominated by the Castro Valley Rotary Club for Outstanding Citizen of the Year. Mr. Speaker, Keith Boyer certainly deserves this honor.

Captain Boyer was born in Missouri and moved to San Leandro, CA, at the age of 12. He attended San Leandro High School and Chabot Community College before joining the Alameda County Sheriff's Department in 1962. He was promoted to Sergeant in March of 1972 and Lieutenant in March of 1975. He was promoted to Captain of the Alameda County Sheriff's Department in June of 1981. He has been the acting chief of the criminal division for 3 continuous years and captain of the criminal division for the past 8 years where he has had responsibility for all law enforcement functions in an unincorporated area encompassing 117,000 people.

Captain Boyer has served on the force for 27 years in many different capabilities. He researched, planned, and implemented contracts for law enforcement services to the new city of Dublin. He developed and participated in planning and implementation of the AC Transit contract. He has had many years of experience in media relations on behalf of the Department. He has also served as a liaison to city governments, councils, homeowner associations, and other political action groups. He is an experienced teacher and lecturer in the criminal justice field.

Even though there is no official police chief in Castro Valley, for the past 8 years, that has been Capt. Boyer's unofficial title. As commander of the Eden substation he has been completely responsible for police services in Castro Valley. Capt. Boyer was responsible for founding a robbery suppression program for the Sheriff's department that greatly reduced the crime rate in Castro Valley. He also worked to develop a crime prevention program which emphasized neighborhood alert and self-help programs. Although his program had no operating budget for years, the crime prevention program won both State recognition and community praise.

Capt. Boyer has also been the author of several ordinances which have greatly helped the city of Castro Valley. He was the author of a cruising ordinance which contained the cruising problem on Castro Valley Blvd. He also worked closely with the Castro Valley drug task force to draft an ordinance that makes parents responsible for teenage keg parties.

Making the community aware of what is happening in the Sheriff's Department has always been a top priority with Capt. Boyer. He has spent hundreds of hours of volunteer time visiting community groups speaking, presenting new ideas in crime prevention and answering citizen's questions. He has worked with businesses, schools, and citizens to improve police service to the community of Castro Valley.

Captain Boyer is also active in many community service groups including the Castro Valley Rotary, the Shrine Peace Officers Association, the Bay Counties Peace Officers, the Footprinters Association, the FBI National Academy Association, the Inter-Agency Drug Council, and, the Boy Scouts of America. He is married to Marty Boyer and they have three children, Mike Boyer, Sherri Zentner, and Angie Schneider.

Capt. Boyer's duty station has been moved from Castro Valley to the Santa Rita jail site. Because of this move, the Castro Valley Rotary Club felt that it was appropriate to honor and recognize Captain Boyer for the long years of faithful service that he has provided to Castro Valley as their only "police chief." I join thousands of Alameda County residents in believing that Capt. Boyer deserves this distinction.

TRIBUTE TO TOM WHITE

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Tom White, proprietor of the Western Auto store of Canfield, OH, who is retiring this week after 37 years of service to his community.

A native of Youngstown, OH, Mr. White descends from a line of restaurant and tavern owners. In 1952 at the age of 27, Tom moved to nearby Canfield to open a small business and become his own boss.

Tom's Western Auto store is a throwback to a bygone era. Over the years, its shelves have stocked hardware, toys, and sporting goods as well as automotive parts. He has served four generations of area families and takes pride in serving his customers instead of just peddling merchandise. His customers have become his friends and the store has become a meeting place for residents to gather and discuss politics, sports, and current events.

Tom preferred his business to remain small and shunned the allure of relocating to a large shopping mall. He never worried about competition and concentrated on minding his store. Tom has spent a total of 11,700 days working in his Western Auto store. This number is more impressive when compared against the 6 days missed due to illness over 37 years. Relying primarily on repeat customers, Tom has been able to remain in the town's business district and provide a pleasant and convenient shopping place for local residents.

Over the years, Tom and his wife, Florence, have become an integral part of the Canfield community. They have served as grand marshals in the Independence Day parade and, I am happy to report, intend to remain in Canfield after his retirement.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Tom White for his impeccable service to his community. The reason for Tom's success as a businessman and a neighbor stems from his knowledge, understanding, and compassion for other people. We are deeply indebted to him for his dedication and the contributions he has made to our area. I am honored to represent this outstanding individual.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF NORTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA'S DALLAS POST NEWSPAPER

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged and honored to rise today to inform my colleagues that the Dallas Post, a community newspaper in my congressional district in northeastern Pennsylvania is celebrating its centennial anniversary this year.

On this special occasion, I wish to pay tribute and to offer my personal congratulations to the Dallas Post family for their meritorious and tireless efforts on behalf of this weekly newspaper. They should feel very proud that the newspaper has clearly established itself as one of the cornerstones of our region's Back Mountain area.

Each week for nearly 100 years, Back Mountain residents have turned to their local newspaper for news and information, for favorite recipes, for meeting announcements, to learn about the achievements of their neighbors, and to consult each edition's extensive classified section.

It was once said that "freedom of the press is one of the great bulwarks of liberty," and indeed I am sure all of us agree with this truism.

As we pause to recognize the rich history of the Dallas Post and its role in the Back Mountain region, I think we may extend this statement to say that "a local newspaper dedicated to serving its neighbors is one of the great bulwarks of a thriving and vibrant community."

Mr. Speaker, the Dallas Post clearly fits this description and I trust and hope that this year's milestone will inspire the publisher, editors, and journalists to continue to provide the Back Mountain community with this weekly news resource.

IF WE MEAN PROTECTION, LET'S REQUIRE PROTECTION

HON. JAMES A. HAYES

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. HAYES of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to amend the Endangered Species Act to ban the importation of shrimp into the United States from nations whose fishing practices, or other activities, adversely affect sea turtles and their ability to reproduce.

The intent of this measure is two-fold. First, it addresses the issue of protecting sea turtles while in their natural habitat. We in Congress have stated that the turtle's prosperity is of concern to us and we have taken action to reflect those concerns. For example, we have attacked the problem of plastic debris in the Gulf of Mexico which sea turtles all too often mistake for jellyfish. This misidentification causes the sea turtles to ingest the product or to become entangled in it, often leading to death.

Furthermore, Congress has also stated its position in favor of the use of Turtle Excluder Devices [TED's] in regard to our domestic shrimping fleet's impact upon the population. If anyone in this body has supported either of these proposals then this bill is the logical extension to your argument. If you believe in protecting the sea turtle, then don't stop your efforts at our shores, bring access to the American market into play in order to affect our foreign counterparts who export to this country.

This bill I am introducing today would simply require that countries that harvest shrimp in waters where sea turtles are present must protect these animals to the same degree as we do in the United States.

For example, the bill requires that nations should not allow the legal harvesting of sea turtle eggs on beaches where they nest. There is at present only one beach in the Gulf of Mexico where Kemp's Ridley sea turtles, maybe the most endangered species, go to nest and yet the nation that has jurisdiction over that beach allows for the taking of these extremely rare eggs. The bill would also mandate that TED's should also be used as they are in U.S. waters.

If you believe that the protection of sea turtles extends beyond national boundaries, then you should support this bill. If you believe in leveling the economic playing fields in which we operate, then this bill should also be appealing to you.

Under the present system of sea turtle protection and enforcement, our domestic shrimping fleet is placed at a severe economic disadvantage. By using a TED, which loses up to half a catch per trawl, a gulf coast shrimper must compete against his neighbors in the gulf from Mexico and Panama who can operate in the same waters without a TED and without the associated loss. Consequently, while U.S. production declines due to the TED, our foreign competition rushes in to fill the void in the marketshare that our decreased domestic catch creates. That is an unfair and, worst yet, hypocritical way to treat both the turtles and shrimpers of the gulf coast.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the right thing to do for both the sea turtles, who so many Members have voiced their concern for, and the shrimpers who must share their waters with the turtles and the grocery counter shelf space with foreign competition.

PANAMA CANAL

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call our colleague's attention to the efforts of the Subcommittee on the Panama Canal and the Outer Continental Shelf to ensure the safety and well being of the employees of the Panama Canal Commission.

These are dark days for Panama, Mr. Speaker, and for employees of the Panama Canal. For 2 years General Noriega has harassed, intimidated and abused the Canal's work force, both United States and Panamanian nationals. In the wake of the ill-fated coup, there is every reason to expect that an already tense situation will become more ominously threatening with each passing day.

The Panama Canal/OCS Subcommittee, of which I serve as chairman, has approved two initiatives designed to protect these employees and enable them to carry out their duties with minimal exposure to avoidable dangers. Unfortunately, the administration has opposed our efforts on the grounds that they could appear as possible violations of the 1977 Panama Canal Treaties.

Congressman JACK FIELDS, ranking member on the subcommittee, and I have written to Defense Secretary Cheney to request that he reconsider this opposition to one of our efforts. I am submitting a copy of that letter for the record. I am also submitting a copy of correspondence I have sent to Senate Armed Services Chairman SAM NUNN, requesting that this committee support these measures when they are brought before the Senate as part of the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation package.

The Panama Canal/OCS Subcommittee will continue to keep a watchful eye on events in Panama that might affect the lives and well-being of the Canal's employees and their families, Mr. Speaker. But we will need the support of the House and the other body if we are to deliver them the relief and assistance they so earnestly deserve.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
Washington, DC, October 5, 1989.

Hon. RICHARD B. CHENEY,
Secretary of Defense,
Department of Defense,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On June 13, 1989, we cosponsored H.R. 2612, a bill to provide temporary authority to certain employees of the Panama Canal Commission to purchase food and other goods at any commissary or exchange store lcoated in Panama which is operated by any military department of the United States. The bill was introduced by the Honorable Walter B. Jones, Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and had the additional support of Representative Robert Davis, the Ranking Member of the Full Committee, Representative Billy Tauzin, former Chairman of the Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf Subcommittee, and Representative Helen Bentley, a member of the Subcommittee.

On May 16, 1989, the Honorable Robert W. Page, Assistant Secretary of the Army (CW), and your representative on the Board of the Panama Canal Commission, wrote to you urging that you seek the necessary authority to extend temporary eligibility or use of such commissaries and exchanges. On May 18, 1989, the Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf heard testimony, including statements from Panama Canal Commission employees stationed in Panama, which strongly supported the need for the temporary privileges sought under this legislation.

In June, 1989, the Department of Defense staff, while recognizing the serious situation faced by Panama Canal Commission employees in Panama, nevertheless recommended that instead of extending commissary and post exchange privileges, which was incorrectly assumed to be a violation of the Panama Canal Treaty, that the stocks of military shoppettes, a variety of military 7-11 convenience store, be expanded and that they continue to be available to U.S. citizen employees of the Panama Canal Commisison for the duration of the crisis. It is our understanding that you approved that position in June of 1989. As of this date, no action has been taken to expand stocks in the shoppettes.

We are writing now to ask you to reconsider your earlier decision and to support the enactment of H.R. 2612 in view of the continuing crisis in Panama and the threat it poses to the continued safe and efficient operation of the waterway. Two points persuade us of the need for support of this bill:

First, prior objections, primarily from the Department of State, have incorrectly urged that restoration of such privileges, withdrawn pursuant to the Treaty in 1984, would constitute a Treaty violation which would lend itself to further anti-American propaganda from the Noriega regime.

Given the present situation it is difficult to believe that this legalistic approach would add much to the torrent of propaganda already directed toward the United States. More importantly, however, is the fact that the last duly recognized government of the Republic of Panama, that of President Eric Delvalle, acting through a representative of Juan B. Sosa, Ambassador to the United States, agreed to the temporary extension of the privileges of the kind covered by H.R. 2612. This authorization was made at a meeting in mid 1988 attended by, among others, the Secretary of the Panama Canal Commission, and staff members of this Subcommittee.

Second, the intervening events have demonstrated that the crisis in Panama is not going to be short-lived and the need for relief for the beleaguered employees of the Commission is now greater than ever.

Whatever the reasons for U.S. inaction during the last few days, and we do not second-guess them at this time, it is clear that conditions have changed since your decision in June and we urge that you now support H.R. 2612 and its enactment at an early date.

Sincerely,

ROY DYSON
Chairman, Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf.
JACK FIELDS,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
Washington, DC, October 10, 1989.

Hon. Senator SAM NUNN,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Armed Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR NUNN: The crisis in Panama is nearing the end of its second year, and General Noriega continues his strong-arm dictatorship. Having survived last week's coup attempt, Noriega has now announced a crack down designed to toughen his martial law rule. In his words, the future in Panama holds "clubs for the indecisive, lead for the enemies, and silver for the friends" of his regime.

As chairman of the House Subcommittee on the Panama Canal and the Outer Continental Shelf, I am gravely concerned that conditions in Panama pose a clear threat to the welfare and security of employees of the Panama Canal Commission, especially of the Commission's American workforce. I am therefore committed to taking every step possible to minimize the potential danger confronting the Canal and its workforce.

The Subcommittee has already acted on two measures that can provide important protection for the Canal's workers and their dependents. These are contained in the omnibus budget reconciliation package adopted by the House last week and now waiting further action in the Senate.

I am contacting you to bring these to your attention and to urge your support for them.

The first of these initiatives would allow U.S. citizens employed by the Commission to shop for their daily necessities at U.S. military installations. Currently these employees and dependents must secure their food and household goods in Panama's public markets. These markets suffer chronic and acute shortages. Moreover, travel to and from these markets exposes U.S. citizens and their dependents to considerable danger.

This issue arose last year in the wake of the Executive Order signed by President Reagan declaring a state of emergency with respect to Panama. Last year the House adopted legislation authorizing temporary commissary privileges for the Canal's U.S. employees. The Administration vigorously opposed the legislation, which received no action in the Senate.

The Administration opposes extending commissary privileges to U.S. citizens of the Canal Commission workforce on the grounds that these are specifically prohibited by the 1977 Treaties. As a half-measure, the Administration offered to grant access to "shoppettes", a military version of the common convenience store. Unfortunately, the Administration has failed to carry through a Defense Department directive to stock these shoppettes with the normal range of food and household items needed by Commission families.

Given the dark months that can be expected to lie ahead for everyone in Panama, I believe it is vital that we provide these employees and their families alternatives to the public markets in Panama. Treaty considerations notwithstanding, this government is justified in extending temporary authority for U.S. citizens employed by the Commission to have access to U.S. military commissaries.

For your review, I am including a copy of a recent letter from Congressman Jack Fields, ranking member on the subcommittee, and myself to Defense Secretary Dick Cheney discussing this issue and requesting the Secretary to reconsider his opposition to our legislation.

The second provision relates to the escrow accounts established on behalf of the Republic of Panama by President Reagan's Executive Order No. 12635 dated April 8, 1988. That order directs all U.S. citizens, corporations or agencies conducting business in Panama to deposit all payments owed to the Government of Panama in special escrow accounts maintained at the New York Federal Reserve Bank. This order includes the Panama Canal Commission, for which the New York Reserve has created the Panama Account No. 3.

The Commission has undertaken a variety of costly measures designed to ensure the safety of its U.S. and Panamanian employees. These measures range from providing 24-hour transportation to and from the Canal for its workforce to relocating U.S. dependents stateside during the crisis. Coming at a time when the Canal is suffering an extraordinary deficit in its operating accounts, these measures compound an already serious budget problem.

The Subcommittee believes that these and additional security measures are essential to ensuring the safety of the Canal and its workforce. We also believe that the U.S. taxpayer ought not pick up the tab for expenses incurred as a result of Noriega's harassment. We have therefore adopted legislation to provide the Canal emergency financing from non-appropriated funds.

Our legislation would recapture the interest accruing to the Commission's deposits into the Panama Escrow Account No. 3. Up to $4 million of that interest accrual would be made available to the Canal Commission. With those funds, the Commission would be able to finance actions taken on behalf of its employees to see that the Canal operates in a safe and efficient manner.

This provision, also contained in reconciliation, is likewise opposed by the Administration on the grounds that it would violate the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977. We disagree. The Treaty specifies that precise payments be made to the Republic of Panama, and none of these payments would be in any way affected by our legislation. We address only the interest that now accrues to the Canal's escrow account. Moreover, we would require that these funds be used only for the purpose of responding to the dangers of the existing emergency, not for routine operational purposes.

As your Committee reviews these provisions, I would hope that you and your colleagues would keep in mind that there is no evidence that the crisis in Panama will come to a swift conclusion. The crisis brings with it dangers to all U.S. citizens residing in the country, and especially those employed by the Panama Canal Commission.

The steps I have outlined are prudent and I believe can bring strong, practical relief for the Canal's workforce. I would urge that you give them your support, and encourage your members to retain these provisions as they stand.

Sincerely,

ROY DYSON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on the Panama Canal and the Outer Continental Shelf.

IN RECOGNITION OF ROBERT N. NOYCE—A SEMICONDUCTOR PIONEER

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, two Texans who are credited with revolutionizing electronics with their co-invention of the semiconductor microchip were selected last week as the first winners of the Charles Stark Draper Prize, the world's largest award given exclusively for engineering achievement.

Robert N. Noyce, the president of Sematech, in Austin, TX, and Jack S. Kilby, chief technical officer of the Houston Area Research Center, will share a $350,000 cash award and each will receive a gold medal.

The Draper prize, which is being awarded for the first time this year, will be presented every 2 years under the direction of the National Academy of Engineering, a private organization affiliated with the National Academy of Sciences.

In announcing this year's recipients, the Academy cited Noyce and Kilby's invention of the single crystal microchip as leading to "a revolution in electronics" which has "become a vital component in machines used in communications, manufacturing, transportation, and computing". The Academy concluded that "very few things have changed the world as dramatically as the integrated circuit" and compared it's invention with the telephone, the light bulb, and the automobile.

It seems difficult to recall today, Mr. Speaker, but before the microchip was invented, all electronic circuits depended on transistors, resistors, and capacitors that had to be soldered and wired together. Microchips, made from a single silicon crystal, can perform the functions of literally thousands of electronic components inside a chip about the size of a match head.

I have been privileged to work closely over the past few years with Robert Noyce in his role as president of Sematech, a consortium located in Austin, TX, which is conducting fundamental research in electronics and computers. I know that he will contribute the same insight, the same creativity, and the same vision for the future which earned him this outstanding recognition for his past achievements.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in offering our gratitude and congratulations to Robert Noyce and Jack Kilby on receiving the Charles Stark Draper Prize.

TEXAS PAIR NAMED WINNERS OF TOP ENGINEERING PRIZE

(By Paul Recer)

WASHINGTON.—Two Texans credited with revolutionizing electronics with their co-invention of the semiconductor microchip were named the first winners Tuesday of the Charles Stark Draper Prize, the world's largest award given exclusively for engineering achievement.

Jack S. Kilby, chief technical officer of the Houston Area Research Center, and Robert N. Noyce, president of Sematech in Austin, will share a $350,000 cash award and each will receive a gold medal.

The Draper prize, which is awarded for the first time this year, is directed by the National Academy of Engineering, a private organization that is affiliated with the National Academy of Sciences. The prize will be awarded every two years.

"We believe that the Draper prize will focus world attention on the important contributions of engineers in the same way that the Nobel Prize now focuses attention on the accomplishments of scientists," said Robert M. White, president of the National Academy of Engineering.

White said that Kilby and Noyce are credited with the independent, co-invention of the single crystal microchip. The microchip has led to a revolution in electronics and has become a vital component in machines used in communications, manufacturing, transportation and computing.

"Very few things have changed the world as dramatically as the integrated circuit," said White. "Like the invention of the telephone, the light bulb, or the automobile, the creation and widespread practical application of the integrated circuit has fundamentally changed our lives."

The microchip is used in electronic circuits that are at the heart of such equipment as calculators, digital watches, telephones, automatic cameras, personal computers, compact discs and in the electronics of satellites, airplanes and military weapons.

Before the microchip was invented in 1950, electronic circuits depended on transistors, resistors and capacitors that had to be soldered and wired together to create a desired function. Microchips, however, are made from a single silicon crystal and the functions of thousands of electronic components can be built into a chip about the size of a match head.

Noyce, 62, was co-founder of Fairchild Semiconductor Corp. in 1957, and 11 years later was co-founder of Intel Corp., now the nation's third largest semiconductor manufacturer. He currently is president and chief executive officer of Sematech, a consortium conducting fundamental research in electronics and computers.

Kilby, 66, joined Texas Instruments in 1958 where he conducted the research that led to his co-invention of the microchip. He retired from Texas Instruments in 1970 and now works as an independent consultant in Dallas and as chief technical officer for the Houston Area Research Center, a technology development concern.

Charles Stark Draper, for whom the engineering prize is named, was the inventor of inertial navigation, a guidance system that helped Apollo astronauts navigate to the moon. The Draper inertial navigation system is now used on airplanes, submarines, missiles and ships.

Draper Laboratories, which was founded by the inventor in Cambridge, Mass., is funding the engineering award.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM DOMINIC CAREY

HON. CHESTER G. ATKINS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of William Dominic Carey, the director of the Park and Recreation Department in Framingham, MA, who is retiring after 36 years of distinguished service.

This is a man, Mr. Speaker, who as well as being a loving husband and father, and a dedicated public servant, has been a pioneer in establishing athletic organizations for America's youth. In 1955, he helped to establish Little League Baseball and served as a member of its board of directors for 11 years. In 1968, he organized the Pop Warner Football League. Through his effort in organization and coaching, he has influenced and helped shape many young men's and women's lives.

William Carey was born in Framingham in 1918, graduated from Framingham High School in 1936, and is still a member of the community. He recently celebrated his 50th wedding anniversary with his loving wife, Anita, and is the father of 6 children, grandfather of 16, and the great-grandfather of 2. He is also an honored veteran of World War II, serving meritoriously with the U.S. Army. An accomplished athlete, William played semipro baseball from 1934 to 1950.

Throughout his career he has been dedicated to both athletics and education, unselfishly donating his time as a member of the Framingham School Committee, the Framingham High School Athletic Council, an organizer of North High School's Booster Club, and a coach of youth baseball.

In 1967, he was appointed director of Framingham's Park and Recreation Department, and has faithfully served the townspeople for 36 years. Through his tireless efforts he has given the town of Framingham not only well-supported and organized athletic organizations, but also the excellent factilities with which to enjoy them. Under his direction the park and recreation department has provided parks and recreational facilities of which he and the town can be proud.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to know the number of lives William Carey has touched through his efforts. It is important today, more than ever, to recognize the contributions of William Carey as an educator, as a coach, and as a role model. This is an man who recognizes that the strength of the future of America lies in the quality and character of its youth. Although it is gratifying to look back on William's accomplishments and to consider his legacy as he retires as the director of the park and recreation department, it is satisfying to look forward to his continued involvement and commitment in the ideals he believes in so strongly.

THE MATERNITY LEAVE ACT OF 1989

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, along with our colleagues, JIM OLIN and DONALD PAYNE, I have today introduced the Maternity Leave Act of 1989.

This legislation provides up to 10 weeks of job-protected leave for women while they are away from their jobs for the birth or adoption of a child. The legislation also allows either men or women to take leave for the adoption of a child; ensures that the employee, upon completion of the leave, will be restored to his or her prior position or an equivalent position; continues health benefits during the leave period; and establishes a straightforward and workable enforcement regimen patterned after the enforcement provisions of the Polygraph Protection Act enacted into law last year.

Unlike the Family and Medical Leave Act, H.R. 770, the Maternity Act is a workable and fair job-security plan that can be embraced by all sides to the debate over a national leave policy standard.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that an outline of the Maternity Leave Act be included in the RECORD at this point:

MATERNITY LEAVE ACT OF 1989 INTRODUCED BY CONGRESSMAN TIM PENNY

1. A. LEAVE REQUIREMENTS

10 weeks (over twenty-four months) of maternity leave.

10 weeks (over twenty-four months) of leave for all employees for the adoption of a child.

An eligible employee must exhaust all accrued sick leave, vacation leave, or other paid leave before using the leave provided by the Act.

The 10-week period of leave is reduced by the period of paid leave.

Requires 30-day notice of intent to begin leave and 21-day notice of intent to return to the job.

B. DEFINITIONS

Employers covered: Any employer who employs 50 or more eligible employees.

Employees covered: Any employee who has worked for a covered employer for 12 months and works at least 25 hours per week.

Certain highly compensated employees are not covered.

C. EMPLOYMENT AND BENEFIT PROTECTION

Requires that an eligible employee be restored to his/her prior position or an equivalent position, with no loss of seniority or other employment benefits.

During the leave period, the employer is required to continue the employee's health benefits.

If the employee fails to return to work as agreed, the employees COBRA health benefits will be reduced by the total period of the leave.

Has no effect on pre-existing collective bargaining agreements or any State laws currently in effect.

D. ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS

Assesses civil penalties of up to $10,000 on any employer who violates the Act.

In assessing a penalty, the Secretary of Labor shall take into account the previous record of the employer and the gravity of the charge.

Gives the Secretary power to take injunctive action to restrain violations of the Act.

The Act becomes effective 6 months after enactment.

Ninety days following enactment, the Secretary is directed to issue such regulations as necessary to carry out the Act.

A TRIBUTE TO ALAMEDA'S PUBLICLY OWNED POWER COMPANY AND ALAMEDA'S PUBLIC POWER WEEK

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the city of Alameda, CA, in my home district has chosen to honor their publicly owned power company by designating this week, October 8 through October 14, as Public Power Week. I would also like to join in the honor by informing my colleagues about the city of Alameda Bureau of Electricity.

The city of Alameda and the citizens of Alameda own and operate their own electric utility, the oldest in California and one of the oldest in the United States. "Public Power Works for You" is more than a fitting theme, because for 102 years the Alameda Bureau of Electricity has been providing the citizens of Alameda with efficient, reliable and cost effective service. The community-owned power system operates without profit to provide Alamedans with the best possible service and efficiency. The citizens of Alameda are both consumers and owners of the public power company and have a direct say in the utility's operations and policies.

Since 1914, the citizens of Alameda have seen their city's general fund enhanced by over $42 million and annual dividends are presently at the $1.9 million mark, due to the utility's sound management and business practices.

It is my honor to pay tribute to Alameda's publicly owned power company. It is my hope that for the next 102 years the citizen-owned company maintains and improves the outstanding service that has made it such a success thus far. I congratulate the citizens of Alameda for producing and maintaining such a well run and efficient system.

FORMER PRESIDENT CARTER PRAISES NICARAGUA'S ELECTION PLANS

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, from time to time I am inserting into the RECORD objective information about Nicaragua's upcoming elections.

Today, I would like to share with my colleagues a recent Washington Post report on former President Jimmy Carter's first visit to Nicaragua to monitor the elections as chairman of the Freely Elected Heads of Government.

The Post reports that President Carter said the following: "From what I know to date, the means used to have a fraudulent election in Panama have very carefully been avoided for Nicaragua."

I think we should take heart from that, Mr. Speaker. I include the article at this point for the information of my colleagues:

IN MANAGUA, CARTER SAYS HE IS SATISFIED WITH NICARAGUA'S ELECTION PLANS

(By Lee Hockstader)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, Sept. 16.—Former president Jimmy Carter, arriving here today to assess preparations for national elections next February, said Nicaragua has taken steps to ensure that a Panama-style electoral fraud does not occur.

"I have examined the [political] agreements . . . and the laws passed and the plans that have been made for the conduct of the election," Carter said in an airport press conference. "From what I know to date, the means used to have a fraudulent election in Panama have very carefully been avoided for Nicaragua."

As the leader of a team of observers to Panama's elections last spring, Carter denounced the official results as a fraud within hours after the polls closed. At the invitation of Nicaragua's government, political opposition and electoral council, he will head a delegation of current and former heads of state monitoring the Nicaraguan elections scheduled for Feb. 25, 1990.

Although the statement was not a blanket endorsement of Nicaragua's electoral preparations or the fairness of the rules that will govern the voting, officials of the Sandinista government appeared pleased that Carter had described the efforts under way here in counterpoint to Panama's electoral fiasco.

Sandinista officials have acknowledged that the government badly needs the elections to receive a clean bill of health from international observers if Nicaragua is to receive the financial aid that is essential to rescue the nation from its economic morass.

Carter predicted that if international observers certified the Nicaraguan elections as free and fair, it would open the way to "immediate improvement in the relationship between the United States and Nicaragua." The Bush administration has cast doubt on the Sandinistas' intention to hold fair elections but at the same time has encouraged opposition politicians to return from exile and unite to participate in the process.

The main opposition federation of 14 parties has nominated conservative newspaper publisher Violeta Chamorro as its presidential candidate. The ruling Sandinista Party is expected on Sept. 25 to name Daniel Ortega, who has led the country since the Nicaraguan revolution in 1979.

After failing to overthrow the Sandinista government by funding the contra rebels, U.S. officials now see Chamorro's candidacy as their best chance to oust the ruling party. Chamorro is the widow of Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, the former editor of the opposition newspaper La Prensa whose murder in 1978 set off a wave of protest that led to the overthrow of former dictator Anastasio Somoza.

Asked about reports that the Bush administration is considering a plan to offer the opposition coalition financial assistance, Carter said: "Any money that comes from the United States should be open and overt . . . and comply completely with the laws of Nicaragua."

His comments echoed government and opposition statements that any U.S. government aid should be aboveboard and not funneled through the Central Intelligence Agency.

In addition to Carter's group, the Sandinista government has invited observers from the United Nations and the Organization of American States. A number of other international groups also will send representatives to watch the process. With scarcely 1.5 million Nicaraguans likely to cast votes, the elections promise to be among the most closely watched in history, at least on a per capita basis.

Carter arrived today for a three-day visit—the first of three trips he will make to the country to monitor the elections as chairman of the Freely Elected Heads of Government, a group of 15 current and former Western presidents and prime ministers, including former Argentine president Raul Alfonsin and prime ministers Michael Manley of Jamaica and George Price of Belize. He appeared at the press conference with his wife, Rosalynn, and Alfonsin, who arrived here Friday. Carter met today with Ortega, Chamorro, political leaders and election officials.

CARL DILLON CLEMENT RECOGNIZED FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I bring to the attention of my colleagues a gentleman who is being honored by his community for his distinguished 30-year career in municipal law enforcement. I am speaking of Carl Dillon Clement of Paulsboro, NJ.

Mr. Clement began his public career with his service in the U.S. Navy in World War II. He began his employment, as a civilian clerk dispatcher with the Paulsboro Police Department more than 20 years ago. In addition to his tenure with the department, he has also participated with borough youth, civic, and veterans groups. In further illustration of his commitment to the community, he served as a supervisor and counselor at the Gloucester County Children's Shelter. Through his dedicated efforts, many troubled young people have been both assisted and befriended. Mr. Clement has continually brought an extraordinary professionalism to all of the positions he has held and has contributed to the tradition of excellence which has always been a part of this south Jersey police force.

It is indeed apparent that the modern, efficient, and responsive force that is the Paulsboro Police Department has greatly benefited from the outstanding efforts of Carl Clement. In recognition and appreciation, he will be honored at a retirement dinner held on Friday, October 27, 1989. He is truly a professional and a role model for members of both the public and law enforcement communities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to join with the family, friends, and colleagues, at the Paulsboro Police Department, of Carl Dillon Clement in extending to him my most sincere best wishes for much success and happiness in all of the years to come.

TECHNICAL DIFFICULTIES IN VETERANS' LAWS

HON. ELIZABETH J. PATTERSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mrs. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, a situation exists today which, because of technical difficulties in veterans' laws, treats certain veterans as second-class citizens in the educational system. Those veterans who pursue vocational education are not treated as equals to those who pursue other forms of educational training. Because of these inequities, certain veterans receive less compensation for the same classes as other veterans.

Today I am introducing legislation which will alleviate these problems faced by our veterans who choose to pursue vocational education. My bill will remove arbitrary distinctions between degree and nondegree programs. In the most egregious example a veteran who had perfect class attendance was penalized with 2 days of excessive absence because of the school's schedule of holidays and class breaks. By eliminating the arbitrary distinctions between the different programs that veterans may follow, situations such as the above will no longer occur.

In addition, this legislation will make the time measurement of technical school classes consistent with the measurement of credit hour classes. Currently, a standard class session is defined as 1 hour—or a 50-minute period—of academic instruction, 2 hours—or two 50-minute periods—of laboratory instruction, or 3 hours—180 minutes—of workshop training. This legislation inserts "or three 50-minute periods" after the 3-hour designation, thereby making each definition of the standard class session of equal length under the law. This presumes 2 hours of outside study for every hour of academic class and 1 hour of outside study for every 2 hours of laboratory class.

Finally, this legislation will make the Department of Veterans Affairs treat all veterans who attend the same classes in an equal manner. Currently, certain veterans who are required to take, for example, a business class for their vocational education degree, are treated differently than a veteran who is taking the same class for a degree in business. This practice is simply not fair and must be corrected.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this legislation, and for those veterans who choose to pursue a vocational education. Let's make them equal to their counterparts who pursue other forms of training.

IN HONOR OF B.J. MYLER

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ben J. Myler who is retiring as chairman of the board of directors and chief executive officer of the Old Kent Bank of Ludington, MI, on October 12. Ben Myler has had a distinguished banking career for 39 years. He and his wife, Anne, upon his retirement, plan to return to their home on Lake Superior.

Ben Myler, who has served the Old Kent Bank as chief executive officer since 1976, is a man of honor and integrity, a compassionate man who has worked as hard for his community as he has in his banking positions. During his career in Ludington, he has served on the board of directors of the Ludington Chamber of Commerce, LEDCOR, Ludington Area Foundation, Memorial Medical Center of West Michigan, Pere Marquette River Watershed Council and Pere Marquette River Advisory Council. He has received numerous awards from national, State, and local organizations, including the American Banker's Association, Michigan Banker's Association, Northern Michigan University, Michigan State Chamber of Commerce, Trout Unlimited, and Ducks Unlimited.

Ben began his banking career in 1950 when he joined the Michigan Bank in Grand Rapids. He was one of the organizers of the Security National Bank of Manistee in 1958 and in 1961 he joined the Empire National Bank of Traverse City, becoming its president and chief executive officer. He went to Marquette in 1966 to assume the position of president and chief executive officer of the Union National Bank.

I had the great privilege of working with Ben on a number of key water projects, involving, in particular, the well-being of one of Michigan's finest and precious assets, its sports fishing. His efforts were truly outstanding and I shall always be, as will the community he served, grateful for his untiring efforts.

Ben is truly a man of the outdoors—a fisherman of unequaled skill and accomplishment. There is absolutely no one more committed to protect our Nation's great natural resources. He has and continues to work to leave our environment, our sports fishing areas, in better condition than when he first discovered them years ago as a youngster.

I know my colleagues will join me in extending our sincere appreciation and congratulations to my good friend, Ben Myler, a man of superlative character and deed. I am very glad for the opportunity to give him this well-deserved recognition in the House of Representatives.

In retirement, I wish him joy in his change of pace with his family and friends and the blessings he richly deserves. Ben and Anne deserve the very best.

REFORM OF THE BUDGET PROCESS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, October 11, 1989 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

REFORM OF THE BUDGET PROCESS

The Congress is giving increasing attention to the idea of reforming the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (GRH) deficit reduction law. Under GRH, if the Congress and the President are unable to reduce the deficit to meet the deficit reduction target for the next fiscal year, automatic spending cuts (sequestration) take place to bring the deficit down. The GRH deficit targets get smaller each year, to produce a balanced budget by 1993. In many respects, this process has broken down.

GRH was enacted with the laudable goal of instilling fiscal responsibility on Washington, but the practical effect has been that the Administration and the Congress have become very ingenious in getting around the targets. Games and gimmicks abound. This year, for example, we see "savings" in the FY 1990 budget by putting the Postal Service and much of the S&L bailout off-budget, and by moving up a military payday and farm program payments a few days so they occur in FY 1989. We also see skillful use of budget baselines to convert spending increases into budget cutbacks, exaggerated estimates of revenue from user fees and asset sales, and possibly a capital gains tax break that will bring in revenue in the near term but lose an estimated $21 billion over the next decade. In addition, optimistic Administration economic assumptions, adopted by the Congress, reduce the magnitude of the needed cuts and make it look like the deficit will simply go away in the long term. It used to be that a few budgetary gimmicks were added after the difficult cuts were made in order to squeeze under the GRH deficit limit; now we have a package that is mostly gimmicks and little real savings.

Such game playing has resulted in the deficits getting worse, not better. While GRH was supposed to be taking us on a path of gradually declining deficits, the deficits have in fact been increasing—from $150 billion in FY 1987, to $155 billion in FY 1988, to more than $161 billion in FY 1989. In addition, the process has distorted the perspective of policymakers. We have a fixation on meeting an exact target for one year only, with little attention to what policies make long-term sense for our country.

We are all the time looking for procedural gimmicks to improve the budget process, when past changes have only brought on more creative ways to skirt the process. What is needed is the willingness of the President and the Congress to make the tough political choices to reduce the deficit. Procedures do not guarantee sound judgement or political courage. As has been noted, the problem is not the process; the problem is the problem.

Nonetheless I believe that we can improve the process to at least cut down on the worst abuses. I think it is premature to scrap the entire process, as some have suggested. GRH has focused attention on the spending problem, and has slowed the rate of growth of federal spending. It helped bring down the deficit its early years, when the deficit was hovering well over $200 million. Moreover, although not steadily decreasing, the deficit at least is holding in the $150-$160 billion range and is not increasing sharply. That has meant that, as the U.S. economy has continued to grow, the deficit has gradually become a smaller share of GNP, our national income. The federal budget deficit is now 3.3% of GNP, compared to 5.3% in 1986.

I favor several steps to improve the GRH deficit reduction process. First, we could cut down on the use of overly optimistic economic forecasts by setting up an independent panel of economic experts to choose between Congressional Budget Office and Administration estimates for the economy. This would encourage the Administration to be more realistic in its forecasts, to avoid being thrown out of the game entirely. Second, we should require the President and the Congress to outline in their budget documents what future actions they would take to balance the budget, should they choose not to do so that year. Third, we should enact "pay-as-you-go" budgeting, which would require that someone proposing a new program should specify how to pay for it—either by cutting some other program or increasing taxes. Fourth, we should shift to a two-year budget cycle to ease the last-second pressure under which we too often operate. Fifth, we should close specific loopholes in the current process, for example, no longer allowing timing shifts (such as moving pay days), putting additional curbs on the use of asset sales to reduce the deficit (which involve revenue gains now but losses later), and making it more difficult to move government entities off-budget.

Other proposals could be considered: requiring that when actual spending exceeds the GRH target, offsetting cuts be made in the next year; giving the President enhanced rescission authority if deficit targets are not met; broadening the pain of the sequestration cuts, which now affect only about half of the spending programs and exempt taxes; shifting from the "current services" budget, under which actual spending for a program could increase sharply but still be considered a "cut" from projected levels that factor in inflation and increased usage; and no longer counting the build-up of the social security reserves as reducing the deficit.

I also support efforts to make clearer the overall goals of the budget process. One such proposal would be for a "GNP budget". The idea would be to determine what percent of America's GNP goes for various major uses, such as investment, defense, private consumption, and health care. Getting a broad overview of how the U.S. is allocating its national output—for example with 55% of it going for consumption by the nonpoor and only 14% going for investment—could elevate the debate on our nation's priorities and guide tax and spending policy. It could help get us away from our preoccupation with the somewhat artificial budget numbers that dominate the GRH debate.

We should not be overly optimistic about how much can be accomplished through reform of the budget process. Every attempted reform could have unintended consequences, and, as in the past, might only elevate the budgetary games to a higher level of sophistication. We have seen the proliferation of games and gimmicks in recent years because profound political differences exist over how to reduce the deficit. Procedures cannot impose a consensus where none exists. Yet they can be of some help in curbing some of the worst abuses and in helping us refocus the debate on national priorities.

LOVE FOR OLD GLORY

HON. EARL HUTTO

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, the recent ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court upholding the burning of the American flag brought an outcry from our citizens. Though there are differences of opinion on whether or not we should pass a constitutional amendment protecting the flag, there is no question that Americans are almost unanimous in their love for Old Glory.

I am submitting for the RECORD two poems written by my constituents on this issue.

OUR FLAG'S DEVOTION

(By Luther Hamilton, Lieutenant, USNR (Ret.)

In the quietness of the dawning
Of an Independence Day,
By his flagpole stood an old vet,
Slow of pace and hair of grey.
From his hands he took an ensign,
Tattered, old and worn as he,
Which he hoisted to the summit
With all pride and dignity.
Then as he turned to walk away,
"Hi-Ho there," he seemed to hear
It cannot be, at first he thought,
Just this aide within my ear.
But again it came, quite clearly,
"Hello, Patriotic Friend,
I'm glad to find you thus alone
My warmest greeting to extend."
Stay, I pray thee; listen closely
To this story I must tell.
Of a money-hungry Nation,
Of our Homeland, loved so well.
I am proud our Founding Fathers
At the time I was conceived,
Had not thoughts of an abortion,
As do "lovers," up their sleeves.
Tho I'm young at one and twenty
If you count me by decades,
My old Grandpa flags before me
Told of plans which had been made,
Long ago within the Bible
For God's blessings in our day,
Made before the Pilgrims landed
On our shore of Plymouth Bay.
Since I have no S/S Number
I cannot redress the wrong,
Of our Highest Court's decision
Which could lead to my Swan Song.
But as trends become apparent,
Stay alert and wide awake,
Lest fools clad in "free-speech" armor
Burn our Eagle at the stake.
Was it wise to spend tax billions
On our space-made travel tabs,
To secure a few Moon pebbles
For a close-up in our labs;
Then not see Earth's problem pebbles
Grow before our "boob-tube" eyes,
Into "Labs-of-Congress boulders
To remain unanalyzed?"
We have dropped the Golden Standard
From our once-sound banking rules,
And with Bank Notes backed by paper
Up our promises like fools.
Prayer is absent from our schoolrooms
Since O'Hair's court-umpired play,
But prayer from Hell can't win appeals
For Strike Outs on Judgement Day.
I have flown and talked 'til Sunrise
But there's more that comes to mind,
Of spy-files in secret ointments
And our frauds of every kind.
And the lack of 3-R's knowledge
In our classrooms of today,
Where they integrate the students
But leave facts in disarray.
When I fly in forty places
With the chosen of our land,
And near pro and con distortions
Of the "boulder" then at hand,
With stress on roll call and "effects,"
Not convictions from within,
Brought about through "love of money"
And its "root-of-evil" sin.
With unyoked parents' child-care doles
Broken homes raise no concern,
Lest we push God's finite patience
To the point of no return.
Tho Navy-proud, I am humble
At our services at sea,
And fly beneath our Chaplains' flags
Of the God who "ordained" me.
My colors drip with gratitude
For your often, fond salutes,
And your pledges of allegiance
Which assure we're in cahoots,
To keep wise Captains at the helm
Of our great, Proud Ship of State,
Lest God break our "Pride of Power"
Into rowboats on a lake!
Since you've listened with attention
To my verses of our past,
May our years ahead be sweetened

With God's honey 'til the last.
Let us all renew our pledges,
Whether poor or blessed with wealth,
To the future of our Homeland
Both in sickness and in health.
And should they ring my "golden Bell"
From "Lands Beyond the River,"
I'll fly with thee and make come true
Our "Stars and Stripes Forever."

DON'T BURN THE FLAG

(By Dr. Bradley Price)

They said today that it's okay
To burn the flag of the USA.
It's just a rag—that grand ole' flag
Freedom won't be hurt—it will not lag.
But spirits rise—with gleaming eyes
From fields where they bled and gave their lives.
I wonder what those brave men thought
Who gave their blood and for freedom fought.
Are we such fools to make these rules
Shall we teach this mess to kids in school.
Oh no I say—it's not okay
To burn the flag of the USA.
We lose it all if that flag falls
Then none will hear sweet freedoms call.
Let everyone rise and lift our cries
We love that flag and our freedom prize.
We will not turn while others spurn
And torch our flag to make it burn.
For we must save what our forefathers gave
And keep that flag—and let it wave.

NOVEMBER: NATIONAL HOSPICE MONTH

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging's Subcommittee on Human Services, I would like to recognize that November has been designated "National Hospice Month." I would like to commend my colleague BILL GRADISON for introducing this resolution which was signed by the President on August 11, 1989.

The observance of "National Hospice Month" calls upon "all government agencies, the health care community, appropriate private organizations, and all the people of this Nation to participate in programs and activities designed to encourage national recognition of and support for hospice care as a humane response to the needs of the terminally ill and as a viable component of the health care system in this country." It is important that we pause during November and acknowledge the important place that hospices and hospice workers have in our communities.

The hospice is an innovative concept in health care; it is a special way of caring for dying patients. The terminally ill differ physically and emotionally from other patients in many ways, primarily in their inability to escape the immediacy of pain and death. The hospice treats the total patient, providing emotional support as well as medical services. Hospices also help and work closely with family members, who suffer along with the patients. Hospice care continues after the patient's death, giving emotional support to the family. This approach is both effective and important because it demonstrates an alternative to standard health care services.

Hospice care can be delivered in a variety of settings. Some hospices offer only inpatient care, while other specialize in home care. Some even offer both inpatient and home care. Throughout hospice programs in the United States, care is administered by teams composed of physicians, nurses, social workers, psychiatrists, psychologists, clergy, trained volunteers, and family members. These teams working together try to ease the pain of the terminally ill patient, allowing them to live in dignity for as long as possible. What people need the most when they are dying is relief from the distressing symptoms of their disease, the security of a caring environment, expert care, and the assurance that they and their family members will not be abandoned. The hospice staff provide these services and much more. They deserve our recognition and our thanks.

The hospice program has grown rapidly since the establishment of the first formally organized hospice in 1971 in New Haven, CT. Hundreds of hospices across the Nation are providing compassionate and professional care to dying patients of all ages, and many more are in the planning stages. It is appropriate that these unique facilities, their staffs, and volunteers be commended for their invaluable services to the terminally ill and their family members.

THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA'S NATIONAL DAY

HON. DAVID E. PRICE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the people of the Republic of China on Taiwan as they celebrate National Day.

My understanding of Taiwan's early struggles, its present successes, and its hopes for the future has been greatly aided by a recent trip to this country. During the August recess, Congressmen MARLENEE, HASTERT, and I were fortunate enough to observe Taiwan's impressive progress firsthand. In the short span of 40 years, Taiwan has turned from an impoverished country with few resources into a major player in the world economy.

In turn, Taiwan is boosting other countries' growth. Last year, Taiwan announced the establishment of a $1 billion foreign economic development fund, from which cash will be distributed to countries needing Taiwan's assistance. Meanwhile, Taiwan's private sector is investing billions of dollars abroad by setting up hundreds of factories and investing in joint ventures.

During our trip, my colleagues and I were able to discuss economic and political issues of importance to Taiwan and the United States. In talks with President Lee Teng-hui, Vice Premier Shih Chi-Yang, Foreign Minister Lien Chan, other governmental and business leaders, the need to open up markets and promote reciprocal trade was underscored, as well as mutual security issues in the Pacific and the challenges posed by current political developments in both countries.

More recently, Congressman LANCASTER and I were honored to welcome Representative Mou-Shih Ding, his deputy Hsien Lin, and C.Y. Chu, director general of the Coordination Council for North American Affairs in Atlanta, to our districts in North Carolina. Our guests were honored at a dinner in Raleigh attended by some 400 members of the Chinese-American community. Our subsequent discussions focused on trade; Taiwan has become a major market for agricultural, electronic, and other products from our State. We look forward to the strengthening of our mutually beneficial economic ties in the future.

Mr. Speaker, on the Republic of China's 78th National Day, I join my colleagues in extending to President Lee Teng-hui and the citizens of Taiwan our hearty congratulations and in expressing our high hopes for continuing friendship and cooperation in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM ASHBY

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to draw to the attention of my colleagues the accomplishments of an outstanding New Jersey citizen and activist who will celebrate his 100th birthday this weekend, Mr. William M. Ashby.

Born in Carters Grove, VA, on October 15, 1889, Mr. Ashby is the oldest living graduate of Lincoln University in Pennsylvania. He is also a 1916 graduate of Yale, where he wrote his first book, entitled "Redder Blood." Although a work of fiction, the book was Mr. Ashby's first attempt to come to terms with the issue of segregation.

Over the course of many productive years, Mr. Ashby has worked tirelessly to promote justice, equality, and a higher standard of living for all Americans.

In 1916, he founded the Urban League of Newark to enhance employment opportunities and make other improvements in our community. The league became the lifeline for black citizens in Newark during the Depression, when many were unable to get help through traditional agencies despite being disproportionately hit by the disastrous economy.

Under the leadership of Mr. Ashby, the New Jersey Welfare League was formed to help black citizens cope with the realities of urban life.

Mr. Ashby also served for a time as director of the urban league in both Springfield, IL, and Elizabeth, NJ.

Mr. Ashby has a wide range of interests; he was one of the founders of the Preservation and Landmark Committee of Newark. In honor of his years of community service, a State office building has been named the William M. Ashby Community Affairs Building.

The author of several books and plays, Mr. Ashby, at age 99, completed 20 chapters of a sequel to his most recent work, "Tales Without Hate."

In 1988, Mr. Ashby was awarded the prestigious Whitney Young Medallion by the National Urban League.

Mr. Speaker, we in New Jersey are very fortunate to have in our midst a man of Mr. Ashby's vision, creativity, commitment, and energy. I know my colleagues join me in extending best wishes for continued success and happiness to this outstanding citizen on his 100th birthday.

TOWN OF COVENTRY SUPPORTS THE FLAG

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with the House of Representatives an initiative recently pursued by the town of Coventry, RI. On August 28, 1989, Coventry's town council adopted a resolution urging me to support an amendment to the Constitution making the burning of the American flag an illegal act. I fully agree with the position of Coventry's town council, and would ask that its resolution be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

RESOLUTION OF THE TOWN COUNCIL

Whereas, the Town Council of the Town of Coventry recognizes, supports and proudly represents the Constitution of the United States of America and the freedoms it provides us with; and

Whereas, the Town Council recognizes, supports and proudly represents the American Flag and the freedoms and honor it has symbolized. Whether it was our original fight for independence, our victorys during the war, our landing on the moon or our draping of the caskets of fallen Presidents, the flag has always symbolized honor and victory of freedom; and

Whereas, the Town Council feels that our Constitution provides us with numerous opportunities to lawfully express ourselves without having to destroy the very symbol which represents these freedoms; and

Whereas, the Town Council recognizes those men and women and the families of those men and women who have given the ultimate sacrifice in the preservation of our Nation and its symbol;

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Town Council of the Town of Coventry that:

1. This Town Council supports and requests that an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America making the burning of the American Flag an illegal act be introduced; and

2. That such an Amendment is not intended to restrict any freedoms of speech or expression that we may have, but rather re-enforce these freedoms by preserving its symbol.

Now, be it further resolved by the Town Council of the Town of Coventry that:

1. A copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Honorable United States Senators and United States Representatives; and

2. A copy of this resolution also be forwarded to our Honorable Senators and Representatives of the State of Rhode Island; and

3. A copy of this resolution also be forwarded to the Honorable Town Councils of the Towns and Cities of the State of Rhode Island.

Now, be it further resolved by the Town Council of the Town of Coventry that:

1. This resolution shall be in full force and effect upon adoption.

Passed and adopted this 28th day of August 1989.

ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE

HON. CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, the world has focused on the immediate problems of the earthquake that struck in Armenia on December 7, 1988, and slowly and surely leaders are looking to the future.

Late this summer the First World Congress of Armenian Engineers, Scientists, and Industrialists met in Los Angeles, and President George Bush wrote to the gathering that "I am well aware of and have heartfelt sympathy for the personal as well as economic devastation suffered by the Armenian people. By pooling your professional skills and abilities to help your fellow Armenians in time of great tragedy, you displayed the best of the human spirit—a compassion that transcends international borders and recognizes the brotherhood of all men."

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to share the response of those participants.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE FIRST WORLD CONGRESS OF ARMENIAN ENGINEERS, SCIENTISTS, AND INDUSTRIALISTS

Resolve to:

1. Support the physical and economic revitalization of the earthquake damaged regions of Armenia and request all responsible individuals, institutions and government agencies to examine their criteria and procedures, and to take immediate steps to improve the earthquake safety of new and existing constructions,

2. Develop the expertise to research and provide technical guidance to fully integrate the handicapped survivors of the earthquake,

3. Assist Armenian engineers and scientists and their institutions in their effort to improve the quality of life in Armenia, as well as their continuing effort to accomplish the technical and economic integration of Artsakh with Armenia,

4. Establish a program of technical exchange of academics, professionals, and graduate students to develop in Armenia and Artsakh state of the art information and communication capability, manufacturing automation, environmental protection, and earthquake damage protection,

5. Endorse the proposal to form and assist in the creation of a technical university in Armenia that is modeled after the American system of technical universities or institutes of technology,

6. Join in the effort to establish leading expertise in Armenia on environmental protection technology and non-fossil fuel research and devleopment,

7. Assist and request that the Armenian Chamber of Commerce and industry take additional steps, including prompt establishment of free trade zones, to substantially increase the number of joint ventures with Armenian industrialists in the diaspora,

8. Request that the Armenian Chamber of Commerce and Industry consider securing western consultants and staff to attract significantly more western investment to meet economic development goals,

9. Create an international professional organization of engineers, scientists and industrialists with the prime objective of combining their knowledge and expertise to achieve world class technological capability for all Armenians. This organization will combine the Armenian Engineers and Scientists of America, Inc. (A.E.S.A.), and institutions and organizations in Armenia, Europe and throughout the world. Initially, this new organization will have its headquarters in the U.S.A.,

10. Convene biannual congresses with the Second World Congress to be held in Yerevan, Armenia.

HONORING THE HANDICAPPED ADULTS ASSOCIATION IN CO-OP CITY

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Handicapped Adults Association, Inc. in Co-op City. This organization, located in my congressional district, plays an important role in the lives of the disabled and the frail elderly.

Started over 17 years ago, this association gives almost a thousand handicapped people from across the North Bronx who would otherwise be homebound an opportunity to get out into society.

The association provides transportation to doctors' offices, hospitals, shopping and recreational activities for several hundred people. The Handicapped Adults Association also plays an important role as an advocate for the needs of this segment of society. They have fought for curb cuts and more paratransit, which allows the handicapped to travel on their own. They are also strong supporters of legislation that allows increased accessibility by the handicapped and frail elderly in housing, restaurants, and social events.

I am proud to have worked with this important organization while I have served in public office. The members of the association are to be commended for a job well done.

TRIBUTE TO DR. JEFFERY P. LA FAGE

HON. RICHARD H. BAKER

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my deepest regret on the senseless and brutal murder of one of my constituents, Dr. Jeffery P. La Fage.

On July 25, 1989, Dr. La Fage, an internationally recognized urban entomologist from Louisiana State University, was killed during an attempted robbery in New Orleans, LA. His untimely death is a great loss to the State of Louisiana, as well as the rest of the world.

Dr. La Fage was a unique individual whose research efforts centered around understanding termite biology and control. In this regard, his research efforts were always on the cutting edge of science and always looking to the future. Many of these efforts were centered around trying to find answers to questions which were 5 to 10 years in the future.

While his long-term goals focused on the future, he did not neglect current problems. He also conducted research geared to finding solutions to today's urban pest problems, as well as making sure that his results were communicated to the pest control industry, and to the hundreds of undergraduate and graduate students he taught at Louisiana State University. In doing so, Dr. La Fage not only influenced many of today's pest control leaders, but also helped shape the thinking of many future researchers.

In addition to his research and teaching efforts at Louisiana State University, he began work on a national basis to increase Federal and State research funding for urban entomology research. Dr. La Fage felt that this increase in funding was needed to help develop future control methods in urban pest management.

Dr. Jeff La Fage will be missed by everybody associated with the pest control industry, and by the millions of homeowners throughout the United States who would have benefited from his future contributions to continued improvements in urban pest management practices.

I want to extend my sympathy and best wishes to Dr. La Fage's wife and two daughters who live in Baton Rouge, and to his parents who live in Connecticut.

HONORING TERRI LYNCH

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished leader and a friend, Terri Lynch. She is being honored by the San Fernando Valley Bar Association for her outstanding contributions to the legal community. It is my pleasure to honor her today.

Terri has a distinguished record of achievement and service in the San Fernando Valley. She has served from the bench as a judge pro tem and made valuable contributions as a court mediator. As a past president of the San Fernando Valley Bar Association as well as a trustee of that organization and the Los Angeles County Bar, she has earned the respect and trust of her peers. Her professional contributions also include a term as an officer of the San Fernando Valley Bar Association.

Terri is a specialist in family law and began her practice doing plaintiff personal injury, business and Federal casework. She attended school at Wells College in Aurora, NY, UCLA, USC, and the San Fernando College of Law and was admitted to the bar in 1974.

Terri and Robert Lynch have been married since 1957. They have three children—Katherine Lynch Pugh, William Norman Lynch, and Thomas Robert Lynch and two grandchildren—Kelly Annette Lynch and Leanne Katherine Pugh.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me in acclamation of Terri Lynch, a respected professional, a leader in her profession and a role model for all.

THE WORLD'S UNWANTED

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I direct the attention of my colleagues to an article written by Mr. R. Bruce McColm, executive director of Freedom House, on the growing number of refugees—recognized and de facto—around the world. The article, which appeared on September 28, in the Wall Street Journal, follows:

[From The Wall Street Journal, Sept. 28, 1989]

THE WORLD'S UNWANTED

(By R. Bruce McColm)

In this century, few international developments have been as persistently contentious and destabilizing as the "refugee problem." Around the globe, population flows exacerbate interstate and regional tensions, drain the economies of host nations, overextend humanitarian support mechanisms, and put a strain on the world's compassion threshold. Even as the West Germans welcome the 16,000 East Germans who just escaped via Hungary, the doors are closing on thousands of Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong, 400,000 Indochinese have languished for years in camps in Thailand, and hundreds of thousands of ethnic Turks have been expelled from Bulgaria. And then there are the millions of refugees long dispersed in Africa and Latin America.

Governments and international groups cannot agree on a definition of "refugee." For this survey, Freedom House defined refugees as people who are forced to flee or are expelled from their homelands due to war, civil conflict, pestilence, natural disaster or persecution based on ethnicity, race, tribal affiliation, religion or political beliefs. Unless otherwise noted, the numbers are cumulative totals for 1988.

A significant group not included here and not recognized by international agencies is internal refugees. These are the millions world-wide displaced from their homes for much the same reasons as external refugees but who cannot or choose not to leave their countries. Often brutalized by their own governments and subjected to egregious human rights abuses, they usually fall out of the purview of international relief efforts. They include an estimated 700,000 to 1.5 million Ethiopians forcibly resettled inside the country by the Mengitsu regime or forced to move because of famine and the up to 2 million Mozambiquans driven from their homes by civil war. The 3.6 million South African blacks resettled in tribal homelands fall into this category as do the 150,000 to 500,000 Salvadorans uprooted by civil war.

The total international refugee population is difficult to measure for several reasons. First, the dynamics that create refugees are volatile and often chaotic. For example after the Burmese government launched a reign of terror in the summer of 1988, 8,000 to 10,000 Burmese fled to border areas and into Thailand. Burma claims 3,115 have returned; unofficial estimates are half that. Some 2,500 are reported in Thai camps, while unknown thousands have joined insurgency groups along the border. A second difficulty is the differences in the way countries classify and process refugees. When East Germans get West German citzenship, they are no longer considered refugees. Many Hungarians who fled to the west after the 1956 Soviet invasion now carry other citizenship and so do not count as refugees. A third difficulty is that, for political reasons, nations often do not disclose the number of refugees who have fled or how many from other countries reside within their borders.

While Freedom House has found advances in political rights and civil liberties around the world in recent years, the millions of refugees remind us that significant parts of the globe continue to be marred by strife, privation and bigotry. These displaced men, women and children are carriers of history, indicating the state of human relations. They are living reminders that the quest for freedom from repression and intolerance is typically told by the ebb and flow of population movements. The world cannot pretend to be isolated from their suffering.

REFUGEES 1988: WHERE THEY'RE FROM, WHERE THEY'VE GONE

LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

Chile—4,800

Argentina, 4,300; Boliva, 200; Ecuador, 200; Colombia, 100.

Most left Chile in the early '70s, during Pinochet's first years. Many have returned since last September's amnesty.

Cuba—5,973

Costa Rica, 2,500; U.S., 2,273; Spain, 700; Peru, 400; Ecuador, 100.

Sudan, 660,000; Somalia, 365,000; Djibouti, 7,000; North Yemen, 7,000; Kenya, 2,155; U.S., 1,456.

Fled civil conflict and famine, including government interruption of food aid and civilian massacre in Tigre and Eritrea.

Guinea-Bissau—Senegal, 5,000.

Tribal conflicts, government repression.

Mozambique—1,147,013

[* Numbers are in dispute.]

Malawi, 630,000; South Africa, 225,000; Zimbabwe, 171,000; Tanzania, 72,000; Swaziland, * 64,000; Zambia, 30,000; U.S., 13.

Civil war, which escalated in '88.

Namibia—81,403

Angola, 74,000; Zambia, 7,300; Cameroon, 100; U.S., 3.

Civil war. Many were repatriated this year.

Rwanda—210,100

Uganda*, 110,200; Burundi*, 65,800; Tanzania, 21,000; Zaire, 11,000; Kenya, 2,013.

Tutsi-Hutu tribal conflict. Most fled 20-30 years ago.

Somalia—350,004

Ethiopia*, 350,000; U.S., 4.

Civil conflict in '88 between nationalists and government.

South Africa—24,942

Swaziland, 6,700; Lesotho, 4,000; Zambia, 3,200; Angola, 900; Zimbabwe, 500; Mozambique, 200; U.S., 42.

Most in Angola are members of the banned ANC. Those in Swaziland fled tribal violence.

Sudan—355,000

Ethiopia, 350,000; Uganda, 5,000.

Civil war in the south since 1955.

Uganda—9,631

Kenya, 5,618; Sudan, 3,600; Burundi, 400; U.S., 31.

Ugandans in Sudan fled government violence in 1982. Those in Kenya fled government-dissident violence in north and east.

Western Sahara—Algeria*, 165,000.

[*Numbers are in dispute.]

Fled war with Morocco that began when Spain gave Morocco the territory in 1975.

Zaire—53,210

Tanzania, 16,000; Angola, 12,260; Burundi, 9,600; Zambia, 9,000; Sudan, 5,000; Uganda, 1,000; Congo, 300; U.S., 10.

Most fled in the early '70s and are more or less permanently settled outside the country.

Zimbabwe—1,307

Botswanna, 1,300; U.S., 7.

Mostly Ndebele, remaining from the 12,000 who fled ethnic violence in the early '80s.

EASTERN EUROPE

ATROCITIES AGAINST CHILDREN: HEALTH CARE FOR NYC BABIES

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Education and Labor Committee I am concerned about education problems and other issues affecting our children throughout the Nation; however, I am particularly and deeply concerned about education and other services to children in my own 12th Congressional District in New York City. In reality, my national and local concerns are not mutually exclusive. My district is a mirror of some of the best and the worst educational activities and social services for children in the country. Lessons learned in my district would be useful anywhere in the Nation. From time to time, in my district, I discover situations which can only be described as atrocities against children. I think it would be useful if these outrages were exposed to the whole Nation.

Today a terrible crisis grips the prenatal and neonatal health care system in New York City. Alarming increases have been reported in both the number of low-birthweight babies and the incidence of disease and other major medical problems among newborn infants. The number of infants born in our public hospitals last year who weighed less than 2,500 grams rose 19 percent; the number of the tiniest and most frail babies—those weighing under 1,500 grams—grew by more than one-third. The number of infants showing signs of drug withdrawal has risen a staggering 400 percent over the last 3 years; in some areas of the city, including the 12th Congressional District, an estimated 1 out of every 10 babies are born to a woman who used cocaine or other narcotics during her pregnancy. AIDS and other infectious diseases have proliferated among newborns as well. At one city hospital, the number of infants with congenital syphilis has grown 600 percent since 1985.

Incredibly, at a time of such critical need, Federal, State, and city policies have starved New York's public health care system of the resources it urgently needs to address this crisis. Fully 20 percent of the women giving birth in the city have had no or inadequate prenatal health care. Prenatal care services for poor women are now effectively rationed. Last year, due to insufficient funds, more than 2,300 low-income pregnant women who sought care at the city's 10 outpatient maternity clinics were actually turned away. Women who sought outpatient prenatal care from public hospitals fared better, but they had to wait 24 percent longer to schedule their first appointment than in the previous year, squandering precious weeks in the development of the fetus. Neonatal care units in the public hospitals have been seriously overcrowded for 3 years now, each year worse than the last, with one hospital's neonatal unit reporting an average 200 percent occupancy rate last year. Obstetric residents and doctors in the public hospitals are supposed to meet an optimal productivity target of 4,000 patient visits per year; last year the average provider logged 50 percent more than this target—5,875 patient visits per provider.

This triage health care policy has taken a deadly toll on the youngest and most vulnerable of our children. The mortality rate for low-birthweight babies in most areas of the country has been steadily declining as a result of the use of new medical technologies and improved access to quality prenatal and neonatal health care. But not in the 12th Congressional District, not in New York City. Last year the mortality rate for these babies shot up 19 percent.

These fragile infants literally struggle to be born, fighting for life under the most traumatic circumstances—against poisonous narcotics, malnutrition, poverty, and disease—battling the odds to enter this world and survive. And in New York City today, their miraculous arrival is greeted with a life-smothering shrug of indifference. It is an atrocity against children.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CLINTON COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the members of the Clinton County Chamber of Commerce in celebration of the organization's 50th anniversary.

Since its inception in 1770, the American Chamber of Commerce has focused on improving and expanding opportunities for our communities and workplace. These important objectives have become the cornerstone of what is now today's U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

In keeping with the traditions of the original ethos, the Clinton County Chamber has actively participated in a number of programs that promote free enterprise and economic development. The Clinton Chamber, like other local chamber offices across the country, wear many hats and for these difficult roles they deserve our utmost appreciation and our applause.

Through annual programs like the summer exposition, which draws thousands, and the PennDOT tour, which allows the public to tour new infrastructure projects, Clinton County has exemplified the spirit and tradition of the chamber.

On behalf of the 23d Congressional District of Pennsylvania, I would like to salute the 50th anniversary of the Clinton County Chamber of Commerce and its continuing efforts to build a healthy economy and improve the quality of life in the community.

THE BIG LIE PERSONIFIED

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday marked the anniversary of one of the darkest days in our world's history.

Four months ago, thousands of innocent young Chinese students lost their lives in the Beijing massacre.

Yet, no vigil was held in Tiananmen Square in memory of this solem occasion.

Instead, tens of thousands of young Chinese were literally dancing on the graves of their countrymen by celebrating the 40th anniversary of the People's Republic.

Even worse, at the same place where the Goddess of Democracy stood last spring as a symbol of hope and freedom, a new statue now stands—a plastic monument celebrating socialism who features a steely-eyed soldier, a worker, a peasant and an intellectual.

Mr. Speaker, it does not take an intellectual to know that statues cannot turn back a movement for basic human rights.

This latest version of "the Big Lie" is just a facade for a fundamentally failed and flawed system.

TRIBUTE TO SISTER SYLVIANNE

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of Santa Barbara's outstanding citizens, Sister M. Sylvianne Mattern, president of St. Francis Hospital, on the occasion of her departure from St. Francis Hospital and Santa Barbara.

Sister Sylvianne, "The Guiding Light" as she is affectionately known, was sent to Santa Barbara 24 years ago from a 6-year assignment at St. Joseph's Hospital in San Francisco. When she came to St. Francis, "the fire department was about to shut the place down," as she says. But she convinced them otherwise, and the hospital has been thriving ever since. From the start, she has worked tirelessly and with great vision to make St. Francis the premier health care facility it is today.

Among the many projects she has completed at the hospital were the establishment of the eye ward and later the hospital's first laser used for eye treatment, the purchase of the city's first C. T. scanner for the x-ray department, the addition of a new surgical wing onto the hospital, the development of three medical office buildings around the hospital, the construction of a brand new critical care/intensive care unit, the opening of the family birth center, and even the organization of an annual Pro-Celebrity Golf Tournament as a fundraising event for St. Francis. In addition, Sister Sylvianne has been instrumental in soliciting the millions of dollars in donations to St. Francis which have funded these projects.

Her influence and insight are far-reaching. She is well-known and respected by government and community leaders as well as the medical and hospital staffs. Her guidance, leadership, and vision have made St. Francis into a strong, viable entity with a solid plan for the future.

Sister Sylvianne has recently chosen to relocate to Mokena, IL where the Franciscan Sisters Healthcare Corporation is headquartered. She will however, retain her position on the St. Francis Hospital board of directors and continue to work on fundraising and building projects for St. Francis.

She has a motto "sempre avante" (always ahead) and she surely has great designs for the future. Sister Sylvianne will be missed at St. Francis, but her presence will always be felt.

CARL EDWARD BARTCH

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to a man who served his Government well and was truly a goodwill ambassador for the United States in many parts of the world. After a lifetime of service in education and foreign diplomacy, Carl Edward Bartch passed away September 26.

A native of my hometown, Findlay, OH, Carl Bartch had a long career with the U.S. Department of State, from 1948 until his retirement in 1979. He served as deputy news director for 3 years during the 1960's. In this post, Bartch often acted as the State Department's spokesman to the news media. He was Director of the Press Relations Office from 1969 to 1970.

Other appointments he held included Chargé d'Affaires and Deputy Chief of Mission at the American Embassy in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, 1976–78; Director of the Argentine, Paraguayan, and Uruguayan Affairs Office at the State Department, 1975–76; Inspector of the Foreign Service Inspection Corps, 1975; and United States Consul General and Principal Officer of the American Consulate General in Edinburgh, Scotland, 1971–74.

From 1965 to 1966, Bartch was Deputy Director of the Office of Mexican Affairs. He held the posts of Officer in Charge of Argentine Affairs, 1963–65; First Secretary and Chief of the American Embassy's political section in Lima, Peru, 1959–63; and Officer in Charge of Venezuelan Affairs, 1956–59.

Mr. Bartch was also a member of U.S. delegations to the U.N. General Assembly, the North Atlantic Council, and the Southeast Asian Treaty Organization.

During World War II, he served in the Army Air Corps, attaining the rank of technical sergeant.

A graduate of Findlay High School, class of 1940, Mr. Bartch attended Findlay College and Bowling Green State University. He earned a bachelor's degree in foreign affairs, class of 1947, and a master's degree in economics, 1950, from George Washignton Unviersity in Washington, DC.

At the time of his death, Mr. Bartch was earning a doctorate in history at the University of Kentucky. Most recently, he had been a political science instructor at that school, 1985–87, and was also a senior lecturer at Findlay College.

Findlay honored him in 1969 with the Fort Findlay Award, which recognizes former Findlay natives who have distinguished themselves nationally.

Carl Bartch is truly an example of a life well lived.

THIRTY YEARS OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening, October 14, 1989, the men and women of the Massachusetts Air National Guard will honor Lt. Col. Grant O. Epler who is retiring after more than 30 years of distinguished service.

Colonel Epler, of Lynnfield, MA entered the Air National Guard as a firefighter in 1958. Progressing through the ranks, he was commissioned as an officer and in 1979 took command of the 102d Civil Engineering Squadron, based at Otis Air National Guard Base on Cape Cod. Colonel Epler supervised his squadron through numerous assignments, both stateside and abroad, including tours in England in 1982 and West Germany in 1986. For his dedication and commitment, Colonel Epler has been recommended for the Air Force Meritorious Service Award.

Mr. Speaker, the men and women who serve their country in military reserve units across the Nation represent the backbone of America's military preparedness. The sacrifices these individuals make—both personally and professionally—in order to serve their country are truly commendable.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of his friends and neighbors in southeastern Massachusetts, I wish to offer my warmest congratulations to Lt. Col. Grant Epler on the occasion of his retirement, as well as our sincere thanks for a job very well done.

TRIBUTE TO A REAL VOLUNTEER

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a woman whose life exemplified the spirit of sacrifice, dedication and human charity. Her passing brings sadness not only to her family and friends but, to all those she touched in a lifetime filled with community awareness and caring. The contributions made by Jessie Mae Beavers truly made her a pillar of the community.

Her 40-year commitment as the society editor of the Los Angeles Sentinel is testament of her ability to apply herself wholeheartedly to achieve goals that she had set. Aside from a 16-year alignment with the Los Angeles City Human Relations Committee, she acted as an organizer of the National Association of Media Women, was president of the Links—Los Angeles chapter, Jack and Jill and the Lullaby Guild of the Children's Home Society. She also found time for other community-related activities.

Jessie Mae is described by friends as faithful, courageous, and cooperative. It is rare that someone can bring such numerous talents together to create this kind of impact. It is with these memories, those which show a unique strength in character and spirit, that I would like to pay tribute to Jessie May Beavers. She remains a shining light among us all, to whom we owe our most sincere thanks.

A TRIBUTE TO LT. COL. LUTHER C. COX

HON. BILL McCOLLUM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to Lt. Col. Luther C. Cox (ret.). Lieutenant Colonel Cox was a servant of our country in the armed services for 45 years.

Colonel Cox was a prisoner of war in World War II and was a pillar of strength to many prisoners. He used his unique talent of dealing with people to help organize a camp escape organization. In addition, he served as a medical technician providing first aid and therapy to over 2,000 fellow prisoners.

Just prior to his retirement in 1969, Lieutenant Colonel Cox was the chief of program management and requirements at the Air Force Eastern Test Range, Patrick Air Force Base, FL. Despite his retirement from the active Air Force in 1969, Lieutenant Colonel Cox served with Air University from September 1969 to June 1985 as an Air Force Junior ROTC instructor.

In 1974, Lieutenant Colonel Cox started the first AFJROTC Program in all of Orange County, FL. At Oak Ridge High School the lieutenant colonel won the prestigious Meritorious and Honor Unit Awards. Oak Ridge High School has won the Honor Unit Award for 7 consecutive years and the lieutenant colonel has been recognized as outstanding instructor seven times. For the first time in history Lieutenant Colonel Cox was recognized as instructor emeritus by Air University.

I could go on listing all the outstanding contributions and achievements for which this man is responsible. Lieutenant Colonel Cox was a courageous hero and superior officer. I know my colleagues join me in saluting this great man for what he has done to contribute to our country.

IN RECOGNITION OF DELAWARE VALLEY HOUSING ASSOCIATION

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the 80th anniversary of the Housing Association of Delaware Valley. A nonprofit housing advocacy agency established to help end housing racism and exploitation, the association is the Nation's oldest citizen's housing agency.

Since 1909 when its precursor, the Philadelphia Housing Commission, was founded, the housing association has endeavored to ensure decent housing for all residents of the Delaware Valley, without regard to race or economic status. In the early years of the century they began to address important, basic issues in housing: drafting the city's first comprehensive housing code; forcing its implementation by mandamus suit; and working toward the adoption of zoning laws. In the 1940's the association drafted the first redevelopment law in our country, and supported the development of programs to meet the postwar housing demands.

Since then, in addition to their continued efforts to improve and enforce city housing codes, the Housing Association of Delaware Valley has developed and put into place a great range of innovative housing initiatives. From a regional desegregation proposal in 1959 to the formation in 1972 of a housing coalition to help Philadelphia's Spanish-speaking community, the association has been concerned with protecting the housing rights of minorities. Their efforts to have a civil rights audit made in the late 1970's of the city's housing expenditure helped shape the future of community development block grant funds in the region. They have been active in attempts to come to the aid of the poor and disabled, establishing an association to counsel the poor on housing questions and a consortium to increase affordable housing for the disabled.

Today, the Housing Association of Delaware Valley has added to its activities, the publication of several guides to inform tenants and landlords of their rights, as well as a weekly report of action by public agencies and the only regional housing magazine. Carrying out studies on a wide range of subjects, the association has played a central role in gathering information about the housing industry. Their research has included such issues as the abandonment of housing in the region, the problems of public housing and tenant management program failures. The association has found concrete solutions to help solve the problems of building concrete walls—solutions like urban homesteading plans and anti-redlining regulations.

Mr. Speaker, the contributions of the Housing Association of Delaware Valley over the past 80 years to the Philadelphia region are immeasurable. I have highlighted only a few of them today. Our community's achievements in adequate, equitable housing should be credited in no small part to their efforts. I am sure that you will join me, Mr. Speaker, in lauding the four score years of accomplishments the housing authority celebrates this fall, and in wishing them continued success in the years to come.

ROUKEMA RECOGNIZES "HANDS ACROSS HILLSDALE"

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, October 14, 1989, the residents of one community in northern New Jersey will fire another important salvo in our intensifying war on drugs. "Hands Across Hillsdale" is just the type of community-based activity that we need in every corner of America.

The National Institute of Drug Abuse [NIDA] recently published the results of its ninth annual national household survey on drug abuse—the first such comprehensive study in years. Predictably, the survey contained some bad news. Use of one particularly insidious type of drug—crack cocaine—is exploding from the depths of the inner city into towns and neighborhoods across America. It is clear that drugs, and the crime they breed, remain a real and terribly dangerous threat to our communities, our neighborhoods and our families. In order to win we need aggressive interdiction, vigorous enforcement, effective treatment, and tireless education.

However, most of the news contained in the survey is positive. According to the NIDA, current use of narcotics is down significantly—37 percent. This progress clearly shows that grassroots America can meet the challenge of drugs, and meet it well.

That is exactly what the residents of Hillsdale, NJ, will be doing this Saturday as they conduct "Hands Across Hillsdale." This laudable community-wide program will focus on the drug problem and its solutions. As we all know, the drug crisis is the product of individual choices and those choices can be best influenced by those institutions closest to the individual—the family, the neighborhood, the church or synagogue, the community.

President Bush said it best in his recent speech when he said:

This war on drugs will be hard won, neighborhood by neighborhood, block by block, child by child.

Programs such as "Hands Across Hillsdale" fit hand-in-glove with the President's national strategy. They are a positive step toward our ultimate victory.

I invite my colleagues to join me in commending the residents of Hillsdale, NJ, and their community leaders for their commitment to the war on drugs. And to urge communities across America to march hand in hand with Hillsdale toward a drug-free America.

THE RETIREMENT OF NORMAN P. ROBERTS

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Norman P. Roberts, a distinguished officer of the law who will soon be ending his service to the State of Massachusetts to begin a new career in special investigating.

Twenty-two years ago Norman Roberts began his career in law enforcement by entering the State Policy Academy where he was an outstanding young cadet. It was there that Norman learned the finer points of law enforcement that have served him in good stead through the years. In only 3 months time, Norman graduated from the academy and began to move on in his law enforcement career.

Later that year, Norman was assigned to the Police Department in Pittsfield, MA, where he was known as a reliable and dependable officer. In 1969, he was transferred from Pittsfield to Northampton where he continued to enforce the law until 1971. Norman made one last move to the Shelburne Falls Police Department where he remained through May, 1 1975.

It was on May 1, 1975 when Norman began his career with the Franklin/Hampshire District Attorney's office and started working as a detective. His duties included homicide investigation for Hampshire and Franklin Counties. During his tenure in the DA's office, Norman was instrumental in solving 30 homicide cases, leaving, in fact, only 1 unsolved case over that period, an accomplishment the police department still points to with pride. After 14 years of hard work in the district attorney's office, Norman is taking on a new venture. Soon he will be starting as a special investigator for U.S.F.&G. a company that will no doubt benefit from his law enforcement expertise.

Several members of Norman's family have also been dedicated to the world of law enforcement. Veronica, Norman's wife of 20 years works for the Montague Police Department and his son Gregory, 18, is currently a criminal justice major at Bunker Hill Community College. His daughter Danielle, 20, is a student at the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to have had this opportunity to speak on behalf of Mr. Norman P. Roberts. He has dedicated his life toward the protection of others and I am pleased to honor him for his many years of selfless service to the people of western Massachusetts. Good luck, Norman, in all of your future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO THE POLISH DAILY NEWS—DZIENNIK POLSKI

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Polish Daily News-Dziennik Polski which will be celebrating their 85th anniversary of publication in the Detroit metropolitan area.

The anniversary will be a grand celebration which will feature dinner, dancing, and special performance by Slowianie, a local Polish dance troupe. It will be held on October 28 at the recently opened American Polish Cultural Center in Troy. Guests from the Polish-American community along with local officials will be in attendance.

The Polish Daily News was founded in 1904 as a way to keep immigrants informed about their homeland and other events in their native language. The paper was strictly in Polish and went under the title of Dziennik Polski which means Polish Daily News. It was a daily newspaper until 1964 when it was published only on a weekly basis. In 1967 a weekly English edition was added to attract Polish Americans who did not know Polish yet were interested in staying informed with happenings in the Polish community. The two editions merged last month due to financial difficulties; yet the staff and the readers remain very optimistic about the paper's future.

The Polish Daily News provides its readers with a sense of togetherness. It tries to focus on articles and features which are of interest to Polish Americans. The paper features several columns including one written by a Detroiter living in Warsaw, Poland and one written by members of the Polish Youth Association. There are also numerous history and political articles and often a profile of a fellow Pole in the community or in Polish history. World and national news are also covered along with a listing of meetings and events in the area.

The newspaper's staff has always been comprised of enthusiastic and dedicated people. As of July 1988, Stanley Krajewski, who had been the editor for 40 years retired. Donald Horkey became the editor and will maintain his position along with Ewa Junczyk-Ziomecki who will become the editor of the Polish Edition. These changes are a response to the financial problems that plagued the paper last month. Mr. Roman Ulman is the newly elected president of the board of directors. He is an active member of the Polish community and also serves as the president of the Central Citizens Committee.

The Polish Daily News has always had tremendous support from the community throughout its history. The people view the paper as an important link between themselves and fellow Poles in the area. My dear colleagues, please join me in honoring the Polish Daily News-Dziennik Polski on the occasion of its 85th year of publication and wish them great success in the future with their newly formatted newspaper.

TWO JEWISH STUDENTS ATTACKED BY MOB

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to express my extreme outrage at the senseless attack against three Jewish college students by a vicious predatory mob. On Sunday, October 8, 1989, hours prior to the onset of Yom Kippur, 15 to 30 white youths attacked and severely beat two of the three Jewish college students after repeatedly yelling racial and ethnic slurs which went unanswered. Both young men underwent emergency surgery to correct massive internal injuries and multiple fractures.

I believe this attack is the most recent episode in the escalating atmosphere of racial tension which has plagued New York City. I find it difficult to believe that this city, once the paradigm example of the American melting pot has degenerated into continuing outbursts of racial and ethnic violence. As residents of one of the largest cities in the world, we can do better than this; we must do better than this. Every person in this city deserves to walk down the street unafraid and unmolested. No one should fear attack because of his race, creed or color.

All responsible and concerned citizens of this city and of this country must speak out against these horrendous hate crimes. Let us not forget that the Founding Fathers sought to establish a country where every minority would find freedom and protection from the whims and caprice of the majority. The tyranny of the mob cannot and must not rule. We must make it clear that people of all races, creeds, and colors are welcome in New York. Those who espouse bigotry, prejudice, and violence are not.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SEMICONDUCTORS URGES NATIONAL HDTV INITIATIVE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Members an article that appeared in Electronic News on September 11, 1989, concerning the need for a national initiative on high definition television. The recommendation was made by the National Advisory Committee on Semiconductors to President Bush in the form of a panel letter to stress the urgency of this issue. In the letter, the committee states, "We advise and urge that a national initiative be defined to reestablish a significant U.S. position in consumer electronics, that this include an effort on HDTV technology, and that this project be industry led and Government facilitated." The committee was established in 1988 in response to concern about America's loss of leadership in the electronics industry. A final report by the committee is expected to be released shortly with specific recommendations on the HDTV issue.

PANEL URGES HDTV INITIATIVE

(By Jack Robertson)

WASHINGTON.—The National Advisory Committee on Semiconductors has made an interim recommendation to President Bush to launch a national High Definition Television initiative to sustain the competitive position of the industry.

In a panel letter released last week, Ian Ross, president of AT&T Bell Laboratories and chairman of the Presidential semiconductor advisory group, said "The Committee supports a joint industry-government initiative to develop a robust position for U.S. companies in the emerging HDTV market as a strategic step to ensure our continuing technological competitiveness.

"The Committee believes that the loss of a U.S.-controlled consumer electronics industry has contributed to the erosion of the ability of American semiconductor manufacturers to compete effectively with their global counterparts. The Committee believes strongly that it is vital for the U.S. to reenter the consumer electronics industry now.

"It is the judgment of the Committee that commitment to a robust U.S. HDTV industry could provide an important element in a successful reentry strategy," Dr. Ross said.

The interim HDTV recommendation is the first definitive action taken by the semiconductor advisory panel and was made only shortly before the committee's final report will be released at the end of September. A spokesman said the panel felt the HDTV issue was so urgent that the recommendation couldn't wait until the final report was completed.

Industry sources said that White House leaders for the last month have been bitterly divided over what course of action to take on HDTV. They believed the prestigious National Advisory Committee made an early recommendation strongly supporting HDTV as an attempt to swing the Administration behind the program.

The committee spokesman last week said the panel hadn't received any word back from the Administration on its interim HDTV statement.

Dr. Ross was out of town late last week and was unable to be contacted for further comment on the HDTV actions of his committee.

The full committee will meet today in Arlington, Va., to complete work on its final report, due to be released by the end of September.

In his letter to the President, Mr. Ross said the committee would elaborate fully on the need for launching a strong national HDTV program to support the semiconductor industry and other segments of the electronic industrial base.

Sources said earlier drafts of the committee report included proposals to seek "commercialization" of technology developed by government labs, as well as recommendations to reduce the high cost of capital for U.S. semiconductor investments.

The HDTV action of the committee was never forecast at any of its earlier public sessions. Sources said the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, which is trying to launch a $300 million three-year HDTV technology program, strongly influenced the Presidential advisory panel to make the interim recommendation.

The White House has taken no major position on HDTV. The Commerce Department, tasked by the President to come up with an overall HDTV policy, is months overdue in making its report, and officials refused to give any date when an HDTV report might be expected.

The President requested no HDTV funding for the DARPA program for Fiscal 1990, although the various Pentagon budget bills now in Congress would add $20 million to $50 million in the upcoming fiscal year for DARPA's HDTV research. Sources believed the interim semiconductor panel statement on HDTV was also intended to press Congress to add as much funding as possible to the DOD budget.

Dr. Ross' letter said the committee "strongly endorses government and private initiatives that fund the research, development and manufacturing technologies underlying HDTV. We advise and urge that a national initiative be defined to reestablish a significant U.S. position in consumer electronics, that this include an effort on HDTV technology, and this project be industry-led and government-facilitated.

"Specific recommendations by the Committee on this matter will be contained in its upcoming report."

The letter reiterated industry's argument that HDTV "can serve as a critical semiconductor technology driver, since related equipment will utilize significant numbers of DRAMs, microprocessors, signal, video and image processing chips. HDTV will also create important technology spill-overs into computers (advanced high-resolution flat-panel displays), telecommunications (fiber-optic networks), auto electronics (compact flat-panel displays), defense (military display applications).

"All of these industries are critical to our economic and national security and are facing competitive threat from abroad."

In addition to Mr. Ross, industry members on the semiconductor advisory panel include John Armstrong, IBM vice president of research; Charles Sporck, chairman of National Semicondutor; Jerry Junkins, chairman of Texas Instruments; James Treybig, president of Tandem Computers; and James Morgan, chairman of Applied Materials. The committee also includes officials from the Departments of Defense, Commerce, Energy, the National Science Foundation and the Presidential Science Advisor.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SEMICONDUCTORS,
Arlington, VA, July 21, 1989.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The National Advisory Committee on Semiconductors (NACS, hereafter the "Committee") affirms that re-establishment of a strong domestic consumer electronics industry is essential to the future health of the U.S. semiconductor industry as well as the economic well-being and national security of the U.S. A strong domestic industry would create high income jobs, increase tax revenues and substantially improve the U.S. industrial base. Accordingly, the Committee supports the establishment of a joint industry-government initiative to develop a robust position for U.S. companies in the emerging High Definition Television (HDTV) market as a strategic step in what must become a broad-based, long-term and cooperative national effort to ensure our continuing technological competitiveness.

The importance of semiconductors to America's economic and national security led to the establishment of the Committee through the "National Advisory Committee on Semiconductor Research and Development Act of 1988." The Committee is chartered with "devising and promulgating a national semiconductor strategy, including research and development, the implementation of which will assure the continued leadership of the United States in semiconductor technology * * *" and "recommend appropriate actions that support the national semiconductor strategy."

In fulfilling its charter to date, the Committee has met four times and has created three working groups to examine critical semiconductor issues concerning the global marketplace, technological development and the environment in which U.S. semiconductor manufacturers operate. The following is an interim recommendation.

The loss of a U.S.-controlled consumer electronics industry has contributed to the erosion of the ability of American semiconductor manufacturers to compete effectively with their global counterparts. This point has been made repeatedly over the last several years by a number of government, industry and academic studies.[1]

Consumer electronics is important because it is a major high volume market for the low cost, high quality but technologically sophisticated components that are used throughout the electronics industry. The total consumer market is large, on the order of $100 billion globally and $40 billion in the U.S., and even larger if related "high technology/high volume" products such as fax, personal computers, cellular phones, pagers, copiers, and the like, are included.

The Committee believes strongly that it is vital for the U.S. to re-enter the consumer electronics industry now, in order to sustain our electronics industry's competitive position. It is the judgment of the Committee that commitment to a robust U.S. HDTV industry could provide an important element in a successful re-entry strategy.

We believe HDTV can serve as a critical semiconductor technology driver, since related equipment will utilize significant numbers of DRAMs, microprocessors, signal, video and image processing chips. HDTV will also create important technology spillovers into other industries. These include: computers (advanced high resolution flat panel displays), telecommunications (fiber optic networks), auto electronics (compact flat panel displays), defense (military display applications). All of these industries are critical to our economic and national security and are facing competitive threat from abroad.

Therefore, we strongly endorse government and private initiatives that fund the research, development and manufacturing technologies underlying HDTV. This is important and necessary, but it is not sufficient in and of itself to establish a competitive American consumer electronics industry. Accordingly, we advise and urge that a national initiative be defined to re-establish a significant U.S. position in consumer electronics, that this include an effort on HDTV technology, and that this project be industry-led and government facilitated. Specific recommendations by the Committee on this matter will be contained in its forthcoming report.

Sincerely,

IAN M. ROSS,
Chairman.

AUSTRALIA WEEK

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, next week is "Australia Week" in Washington. Australia Week is a series of events aimed at improving tourism and trade between Australia and the United States.

I believe it is fitting and important to bring Australia Week to the attention of my colleagues since Australia and the United States have not only traditionally been allies and business partners in the Pacific rim, but also mates—to use the Australian word for "close friend."

My district of San Francisco has been the home of the Americas region headquarters for Qantas, the Australian airline, since 1954, when it pioneered air service between Australia and the United States. We are proud of our role as a first-stop for Australians coming to the United States.

Since 1968, San Francisco has been a "Sister City" to Sydney, Australia in recognition of the special affinity between the two communities. Like San Francisco, Sydney is a beautiful coastal city with a diverse population. It is also a center for commerce, recreation and the arts. We, in San Francisco, have long appreciated the Australian-American relationship and support actions which will strengthen it.

Australia Week in Washington, DC, will highlight this special relationship between Australia and the United States through a series of meetings, speeches, travel seminars, sports and social events.

I urge my colleagues to participate in as many of these events as possible in recognition of the close ties between our two countries.

ROGUE VALLEY COMMUNITY COLLEGE LEGISLATION

HON. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will convey a small parcel of Oregon and California Railroad grant land to the Rogue Community College in Josephine County, OR.

Located on the parcel of land identified in the bill are a number of buildings that belong to Rogue Community College, an educational institution that is important to both the southern Oregon region and the entire State. Since acquiring those facilities in 1971, the college has attempted to gain title to the lands on which they sit. Currently, they are leasing the property from the Bureau of Land Management [BLM].

It was originally thought that this transfer could occur through the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act. Under those provisions, the property would be transferred to the General Services Administration [GSA], deemed surplus to the Federal Government, and sold to the college.

While this scenario was supported by the BLM, the GSA was unable to implement the transfer sale due to the property's special designation as O&C land. Because O&C lands are reacquired public domain lands, they cannot be disposed of under current law. Therefore, conveying title to the land occupied by the college requires the legislative solution which I am introducing today.

Mr. Speaker, in general, the primary use of O&C land is timber management. That practice benefits the local counties economically by providing timber to local mills and by a special revenue-sharing arrangement based on timber sale receipts. However, the land now occupied by the Rogue Community College and identified in this bill has been certified by the BLM as incapable of reforestation. Accordingly, its transfer to the college would in no way diminish the productivity of O&C lands.

In fact, I believe just the opposite would occur. By allowing the college the certainty to plan for expansion, this transfer would enhance what I believe is a very high-value use of that particular parcel—educating our young people.

As some of you may remember, I introduced this bill during the last Congress. Unfortunately, there was not time for the House to complete action on that legislation. It is my hope that during this new Congress both the Interior Committee, on which I serve, and the entire House will consider and approve this legislation in an expeditious manner. Rogue Community College and its fine president, Dr. Harvey Bennett, deserve to see their facilities secured for future growth and expansion.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum prepared by the Department of the Interior's Pacific Northwest Regional Solicitor which explains the history of this issue in great detail, and a copy of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Portland, OR, April 16, 1984.

To Oregon State Director, Bureau of Land Management (431).

Over the past three years the BLM has been negotiating with the General Services Administration as to the possible disposal of the O&C land on which the Rogue Community College is operating its college under a twenty-five year lease. However, the GSA has continued to question its authority to accept this property under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, (40 U.S.C. § 471 et sq), hereinafter referred to as the FPASA, because of its special status as O&C land. You have requested that our office examine the issues involved and provide you our legal opinion on this question. Based upon a careful examination of the legislation history of the O&C lands and the provisions of the FPASA we have concluded that O&C lands are reacquired public domain land which have been reserved for special purposes and that they cannot be disposed of under the FPASA.

To assist in understanding this matter it is helpful to outline the circumstances leading to the present situation.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

The land in question consists of the SW ¼ NE ¼ of Section 27, T. 36 S. R. 6 W. Willamette Meridian. It is located approximately 2½ miles southwest of the city of Grants Pass, Oregon, which is the county seat of Josephine County. The land was originally part of the public domain which was granted to the Oregon and California Railroad Company in aid of the construction of a railroad from Portland to the Oregon—California boundary by the act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239). Because of violations of the terms of the grant, the Congress revested all unsold lands by the Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218).

In 1965 and 1966 the Fort Vannoy Job Corps Center was constructed on the area. It consisted of approximately 36 buildings and sheds, having a estimated value in 1971 of approximately $730,000. According to BLM records no merchantable timber remains on the area. The camp was terminated in 1968 and the Rogue Community College initiated proceedings to acquire the site and its buildings. The buildings were surplused to the General Services Administration by the BLM under the FPASA and subsequently transferred to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

By an Agreement of Sale with HEW dated August 19, 1971, the Roge Community College acquired the buildings on this land without cost. In accordance with the terms of the agreement the college earned a public benefit allowance for the value of the buildings by agreeing to use the property for educational purposes for 15 years. Concurrent with the sale of the buildings, the BLM leased the underlying land to the college for a period of 10 years under the terms of a Recreational or Public Purpose Lease dated July 1, 1971, for a lump sum payment of $100. The land was leased rather than sold under the R&PP Act because that act specifically provides that O&C land may only be leased. (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)) in 1973, in response to a Congressional inquiry, the Medford District Manager advised the Oregon State Director that because O&C land was involved it could not be disposed of through GSA under the FPASA and would therefore have to be exchanged or sold through special legislation. The possibilities of an exchange were explored at that time by the parties but were never fully pursued because of the complexities involved and time which this would take.

The files of the BLM also contain a copy of a memorandum of some interest from the Oregon State Director to the Director dated April 18, 1973, which, however, was apparently never sent. This draft memorandum indicates that the BLM knew of no precedent for the disposal of O&C lands by the GSA and that the Director's policy at the time the site was leased to the college was to limit disposal to a lease under the R&PP Act. While the statement sheds no light on whether the land could be legally disposed of under the FPASA, it does point out the important policy questions involved if a disposal of fee title under the act were to be pursued.

Between 1973 and 1979 no further activities were reported concerning the acquisition of the property by the college. However, approval was given by the BLM for the construction of several new school buildings.

In 1979 inquiries were again made by the college through Senator Hatfield as to the means by which the college could acquire title to the site. In response to this inquiry the Oregon State Director advised Senator Hatfield in a letter dated November 21, 1979, that sale for fair market value under FLPMA or land exchanges were the only two methods by which the college could acquire the title to the property under existing law. There is some confusion as to whether this response was intended to refer only to statutes under which the BLM operates directly or was also intended to imply that disposal by the GSA under the FPASA was not possible.

After learning that the Josephine County Commissioners and the Association of O&C Counties were agreeable to a disposal of the land through the GSA, the Oregon State Director advised the Medford District Manager on March 13, 1980, to proceed with disposal if the college formally requested such disposal and could demonstrate that the present lease was inadequate. The college was so advided and on April 24, 1980, formally requested the transfer of title.

Following the preparation of the necessary environmental analysis and land report, the District Manager reported the property available for dispoal on August 4, 1980. The report was approved by the State Director and forwarded to the Denver Service Center on September 8, 1980, with the recommendation that the land be declared surplus, reported to GSA for disposal and conveyed to the college. On January 6, 1981, the Denver Service Center reported the land to GSA. Additional information was provided to GSA on February 26, 1981, including the fact that because of its isolated character and developments on the land it was uneconomical to manage and could not be restored to timber growth.

By a letter dated April 13, 1981, the GSA advised the BLM that it could not dispose of O&C land under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 for the following reasons:

Because of the O&C land designation, we sought advice from our Regional counsel. GSA can accept excess property for disposal under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended. However, counsel advises that the term "property" does not include land in the public domain. It has been held that "O&C" lands are a part of the public domain and as such may not be disposed of by GSA under its authorities. Accordingly, we are returning your report of excess.

Discussion of the letter with the GSA has revealed that it was based upon the informal oral advice of the attorneys for the GSA and that no written opinions were prepared.

On May 20, 1981, the BLM resubmitted its excess land report to the GSA and advised that "property" which can be disposed of by GSA "includes lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain when such lands have been determined by the Secretary of Interior, with concurrence of the Administration of GSA, [as] not suitable for return to the public domain because they have been substantially changed by improvements or otherwise." The resubmission then indicated that the BLM had determined that the lands in question were unsuitable for return to the public domain. This document notes that the matter had been discussed by the Solicitor's Office in Washington with the GSA and that it was felt that the initial application had been returned by the GSA because it failed to state that the lands in question were unsuitable for return to the public domain.

The GSA responded to this resubmission again questioning whether it had any authority to dispose of O&C land under the Federal Property and Administrative Act, and that in any event if the lands were transferred to GSA for disposal there could be no assurances that they would be retransferred to the Rogue Community College.

In an attempt to resolve this impasse, our office wrote to the GSA on October 16, 1981, indicating that while we were reluctant to advise GSA as to its authorities, it appears that GSA has authority to dispose of all property which is excess to the needs of a federal agency unless the property falls within one of the specific exceptions cited in the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act. We noted that:

The O&C lands are portions of public domain which were granted to the Oregon and California Railroad Company in aid of the construction of a railroad. Upon violation of certain covenants in the grant, the lands were revested to the United States by an act of Congress on June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218). If such O&C lands falls within any of the exceptions which deprive the GSA of disposal authority, this would appear to be the exception for "lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain." However, there is specifically excluded from this exception "lands or portions of lands so withdrawn or reserved which the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Administrator, determines are not suitable for return to the public domain for disposition under the general public land laws because such lands are substantially changed in character by improvements or otherwise."

It was under this exclusion to the public domain exception that BLM reported the Rogue Community College site to the GSA. We also outlined the means by which the site could be transferred to the Department of Education and thence to the college if the GSA were willing to accept the property as surplus.

In response to the comments from our office the GSA advised by a letter dated November 4, 1981, that it would only consider the acceptance of the land if it received:

1. An unqualified certification that the BLM may properly, within its authorities and existing statutes, withdraw the lands at Grants Pass from their O&C classification, determine them to be "property" as defined under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and report them excess to GSA for disposal.

2. A formal land determination from the BLM that the O&C lands in question, or a portion of them, are unsuitable for retention in the public domain together with a request that GSA concur in that determination.

Certain additional information was also requested from the BLM.

Because of the delays in disposing of this property to the college it became necessary to extend the existing lease. On November 5, 1981, a new 25 year lease was offered to the college at a rental of $50 per five year period. This offer was accepted by the college and the new lease was approved by the BLM on November 19, 1981.

LEGAL ANALYSIS

The O&C Lands were originally portions of public domain which were granted in aid of the construction of a railroad. Their subsequent history up to the time of revestment has been succinctly set forth as follows by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Skoko v. Andrus, 638 F.2d 1154 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. den. 444 U.S. 927, 62 L.Ed.2d 183 (1979):

Between 1866 and 1870, Congress granted almost 4,000,000 acres of land to the Oregon & California Railroad to promote the construction of a railroad from Portland, Oregon, to the California Border. The granting statutes contained a proviso, "That the lands granted . . . shall be sold to actual settlers only in quantities not greater than one quarter section to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre." Oregon & California Railroad Co. v. United States, 1915, 238 U.S. 393, 403, 35 S. Ct. 908, 913, 59 L.Ed. 1360.

The railroad was built, but the proviso was violated. As a result, Congress, by joint resolution, directed the Attorney General to enforce the proviso. 35 Stat. 571 (1908). In the ensuing action, supra, the Court held that the proviso was a covenant, not a condition. It therefore refused to forfeit the lands still owned by the railroad, ordered the covenant enforced, and gave Congress "a reasonable time" to frame the remedy. Id, at 438-39, 35 S. Ct. 908.

Congress responded with the Chamberlain-Ferris Revestment Act of June 9, 1916, 39 stat. 218, which declared all undisposed of grant lands "hereby, revested in the United States." 39 Stat. 219.

In 1912 while federal court actions were in progress to forfeit these lands, the Congress passed what has been called the "Forgiveness Act" (Act of August 29, 1912, 37 Stat. 320). This act permitted the government to compromise with and issue patents to those persons who had purchased O&C lands from the railroad grantee. It also provided in Section 2 of the Act:

That none of the lands reverting to the United States by virtue of any right of forfeiture thereto as aforesaid shall be or become subject to entry under any of the public-land laws of the United States, or to the initiation of any right whatever under any of the public-land laws of the United States.

This reflects the intent of Congress that upon any successful forfeiture action the forfeited lands would not be directly disposed of under the homestead, lieu land or other statutes which were then the subject of such controversy.

The status of any reacquired O&C lands was again considered by Congress during the hearings leading up to the Revestment Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218). As reported at page 116 of the Hearings Before the Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives on H.J. Res. 58, 64th Cong., 1st Sess., February 24, 1916, it was indicated by C. J. Smyth, Special Assistant to the Attorney General that the above quoted provision of the Forgiveness Act of 1912 would have no application where the Congress rather than the courts provided for the revestment of the O&C lands to the United States. He concluded that:

It might be (sic) well be said that if the title to these lands was resumed by the United States without any provision for their future disposition they would become subject to the public-land laws now in existence. In fact, I do not see at this moment how that conclusion could be escaped. If, therefore, Congress concludes to revest the title in the United States, it ought at the same time to provide for some disposition of the lands.

In order to avoid subjecting the revested O&C lands to the general public-land laws then in effect, Congress specifically provided under the terms of the Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218) for the disposition of these lands. The act provides that the lands be classified into (1) power-site lands, (2) timber lands, or (3) agricultural lands; that the timber on the lands should be sold for cash; and that the non-mineral agricultural lands should be subject to entry and sale under the homestead laws. It further provided that rights of way could be granted across such lands in the same manner as for public lands and that mineral lands (other than those suitable for power sites) were subject to entry and disposition under the mineral-land law of the United States.

This statute was later amended and supplemented by the O&C Act of August 28, 1937, (43 U.S.C. §1181a) which provided that lands classified as timber lands be managed for timber production in support of local communities and industries. It also provided for the reclassification of lands more suitable for agricultural use.

Based upon the special history of the O&C lands and the above statutes, the Department of the Interior has on several occasions issued opinions which concluded that Congress has set aside the O&C lands for the purposes specified in the 1916 and 1937 acts and that they may not be used or disposed of for purposes or by means not provided for by the Congress.

In an opinion dated Mach 9, 1940, the Solicitor advised the Secretary that:

[C]ongress has specifically provided a plan of utilization of the Oregon and California Railroad revested lands. This plan among other things involves the disposal of lands and timber and the distribution of the moneys received from such disposition. It must be concluded that Congress has set aside the lands for the specified purpose.

In view of this the Solicitor concluded that a presidential withdrawal of the O&C lands as an addition to the Oregon Caves National Monument was not authorized since it would conflict with the requirements of the O&C Act.

One year later on August 25, 1941, the Assistant Secretary issued an instruction advising that the mining laws were in conflict with the timber management requirements of the O&C Act and therefore did not apply to such lands. (57 ID 365) In reaching this conclusion the Assistant Secretary noted that the O&C Act required the permanent retention of lands classified for forest management and their management for timber production and other purposes specifically stated in the act. He also noted that it was a well established policy of the Congress to reserve lands from disposal except where there existed express statutory provisions for their disposition citing the case of United States v. Sweet, 245 U.S. 563, 62 L.Ed 473 (1918).

The same conclusions as to the special status of the O&C lands was reached by the Associate Solicitor for the Division of Public Lands in an opinion to the Director of the BLM dated October 7, 1966 (M-36697) Here the Associate Solicitor stated that:

Congress has in a special manner sought to preserve the interests of the United States, and of the beneficiary counties, in the O&C lands and in the valuable timber resources they contain. Clearly, these lands have special status which sets them separate and apart from the public lands of the United States. In other words, the O&C lands have been "appropriated" by the Congress.

Since such lands are appropriated for special designated purposes the Associate Solicitor concluded that they were not available as Indian Allotments under 25 U.S.C. § 334.

The care which the Congress has continued to assert concerning the preservation of the O&C lands as a special category of appropriate land has already been alluded to with respect to the Recreation and Public Purpose Act (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)) which provides for the lease but not the sale of O&C lands. More recently with the passage of the Fededal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA) the Congress has provided at 43 U.S.C. § 701(b) that any provisions of FLPMA which are inconsistent with timber management or revenue disposal provisions of the O&C Act must give way.

Given the historical and legal background of the O&C land, the question remains as to how these lands are to be classified and managed with respect to the Federal Property and Administrative Service Act of 1949, as amended, 40 U.S.C. §471 et. seq. This statute provides for the disposal of certain surplus property of the United States by the General Services Administration. The property subject to such disposal is defined in the statute as follows:

The term "property" means any interest in property except (1) the public domain; lands reserved or dedicated for national forest or national park purposes; minerals in lands or portions of lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain which the Secretary of the Interior determines are suitable for disposition under the public land mining and mineral leasing laws; and lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain except lands or portions of lands so withdrawn or reserved which the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Administrator, determines are not suitable for return to the public domain for disposition under the general public-land laws because such lands are substantially changed in character by improvements or otherwise; (2) naval vessels of the following categories: Battleships, cruisers, aircraft carriers, destroyers, and submarines; and (3) records of the Federal Government. (40 U.S.C. § 472(d))

In order to understand the place of the O&C lands within this definition it is helpful to examine the legislative history of the FPASA. In Senate Report 857 which accompanied the bill which amended the FPASA to its present general form in 1958, the term "public domain" was described as:

Original public domain lands which have never left Federal ownership; also, lands in Federal ownership which were obtained by the Government in exchange for public lands or for timber on such lands; also, original public domain lands which have reverted to Federal ownership through operation of the public-land laws. S. Rep. No. 857, 85th Cong. 2nd Sess. (1957), reprinted in 1958 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2227, 2233.

Lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain are further described in Senate Report 857 as follows:

Two categories of federally owned real property may be said to fall within the term "reservations." Original public domain lands—lands to which title has been in the United States since acquisition—and withdrawn to a greater or lesser degree from the general operation of the public land laws relating to settlement, entry, location, and sale, are "Federal reservations." So, too, are lands acquired or reacquired by the United States by purchase, condemnation, or by exchange for such purchased, condemned, or donated lands or for interests in or on such lands, and held for a specific public purpose. The term "withdraw" is used interchangeably with the term "reserve" to describe the statutory or administrative action which restricts or segregates a designated area of Federal real property from the full operation of the public-land laws relating to settlement, entry, location, and sales, which action holds them for a specific—and usually limited—public purpose.

Examples of reservations include: national forest reserve lands; national parks, monuments, and other units of the national park system; fish and wildlife refuges; petroleum, oil shale, coal, and other mineral reserves; recreation and wilderness areas; reclamation and power withdrawals or reservations; military reservations, and similar areas, all of which are held by some Federal agency for specified public purposes, and all of which may be created wholly from reserved original public domain lands, wholly from acquired or reacquired lands, or from portions of both. Other examples of Federal reservations, frequently created wholly from acquired lands, are post-office sites, weather stations, immigration and customs facilities, lighthouses, Federal courthouse sites, and the like. U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, supra, at 2233.

The recognition which Congress gave to the fact that upon revestment the O&C lands could be disposed of as any other public domain lands unless certain reservations were enacted has already been described with reference to the Foregiveness Act of 1912 and the Revestment Act of June 9, 1916. This taken together with the above description of the terms contained in the FPASA, makes it clear that the O&C lands are reacquired public domain lands which have been reserved for those special purposes described in such statutes as the 1916 Revestment Act and the August 28, 1937 O&C Act (43 U.S.C. § 1181a et seq.) Because of their special reserved status they can only be disposed of in accordance with the mandate of Congress.

Such O&C lands can be sold for their fair market price in accordance with 43 U.S.C. § 203 so long as such sales would not be inconsistent with the timber management or revenue disposal provisions of the O&C Act as required by 43 U.S.C. § 701(b). Such lands can also be exchanged in accordance with 43 U.S.C. § 206. They can be leased but not sold in accordance with the Recreation or Public Purposes Act (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)). As reacquired public domain lands which have been reserved by Congress for a special purpose, the O&C lands do not fall within the definition of "property" as that term is used in the FPASA. While we indicated in our letter to the GSA on October 16, 1981, that lands reserved from the public domain which the Secretary of the Interior determined were not suitable for return to the public domain because of substantial changes in character by improvements could be disposed of under the FPASA, the present analysis of the legislature history of the O&C land makes it clear that since the Secretary has, in any event, no authority to return parcels of O&C land to the public domain, this provision of the FPASA is also inapplicable to the O&C lands. As noted earlier with respect to the attempted withdrawal of O&C lands as an addition to the Oregon Caves National Monument, only Congress can provide for the means by which the O&C lands may be disposed of. Therefore it is our opinion that without new legislation it will not be possible to dispose of the Rogue Community College site under the FPASA nor will it be possible to exchange or sell these lands for less than their fair market value.

The suggestion has also been made that it might be possible for the BLM to dispose of the lands on which the Rogue Community College is located under 42 U.S.C. § 2704. That statute provides that:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity shall establish procedures and make arrangements which are designed to assure that facilities and equipment at Job Corps centers which are being discontinued will, where feasible, be made available for use by State or Federal agencies and other public or private agencies, institutions, and organizations with satisfactory arrangements for utilizing such facilities and equipment for conducting programs, especially those providing opportunities for low-income disadvantaged youth, including, without limitation—

(1) special remedial programs;

(2) summer youth programs;

(3) exemplary vocational preparation and training programs;

(4) cultural enrichment programs, including music, the arts, and the humanities;

(5) training programs designed to improve the qualifications of educational personnel, including instructors in vocational educational programs; and

(6) youth conservation work and other conservation programs.

We do not believe the statute has any application to the present situation for a number of reasons. First, the Act relates to "facilities and equipment" only. There is no indication that Congress intended that it would provide the basis for the disposal of the title to federal land. Further, the statute merely provides that such "facilities and equipment" be made available for use by others, not that title passed. It also directs that such use be for special programs for disadvantaged youth, a purpose which at best may only make up a part of the program of education presently being offered by the Rogue Community College. In any event, in view of the specific Congressional mandate which has been laid down for the management of O&C lands it would be extremely difficult to imply a different and inconsistent use for the land on the basis of such a vaguely worded statute. In addition, the fact that the statute speaks in terms of Job Corps centers which are being discontinued appears to have little bearing upon a conter which was discontinued in 1968, more than fifteen years ago and whose "facilities and equipment" were disposed of to the Community College under other statutory authority in 1971.

If we may be of further assistance in this matter please let us know. Your case file is returned herewith.

A TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH AND EILEEN MIELE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 11, 1989

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I recognize before the House of Representatives the accomplishments of two outstanding Italian-American New Jerseyites: Joseph P. (J.P.) and Eileen Miele.

The Mieles are known throughout New Jersey for their tireless commitment to the cause of public service. The Mieles serve on numerous public and private commissions and boards. J.P. serves as a commissioner of the New Jersey Highway Authority, as vice chairman of New Jersey's Constitutional Bicentennial Commission, and as a member of Governor Tom Kean's Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse. Eileen has also distinguished herself as a commissioner of the State Board of Cosmetology and Hairstyling.

In recognition of their many outstanding contributions to New Jersey's Italian-American community, J.P. and Eileen have been named 1989 "Man and Woman of the Year" by the Italian Tribune News, and will be honored on October 8 at the Columbus Day Parade in Newark, NJ. It is with great pride that I salute the Mieles, who are a credit to New Jersey and to the Italian-Americans everywhere. I also request that this statement honoring the Mieles be entered into the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the date October 11, 1989.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, October 12, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, October 12, 1989

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Increase our appreciation, O gracious God, for Your promises that offer forgiveness and nurture self-respect, that provide a spiritual foundation for every day of our lives. We pray, O loving God, that whatever our need may be or whatever our concern, Your abiding presence will lift our spirits and show us the path of peace. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 297, nays 105, not voting 30, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SKAGGS). The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] will lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MOODY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ADMINISTRATION INDECISION REGARDING PANAMA COUP

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, "sort of" measures do not work well in Congress. The same can be said of coups. What we learned coming from Panama shows what being indecisive and unprepared can do.

The administration "sort of" wanted Noriega out, but had no plans drawn up in case we actually got what we wanted.

The administration "sort of" got involved by blocking two roads, but then declined to take the final steps.

Then the administration "sort of" denied U.S. involvement, only to retreat in retractions before the world's eyes during the past week.

While administration policy was full of indecision and doubt, there are no doubts about the results: a failed coup; Noriega opponents in disarray; coup leaders executed. A taunting Noriega still in power is a message to the world about U.S. commitment.

"Sort of" does not work, Mr. President. When diving into a swimming pool you cannot be "sort of" wet; no one can be "sort of" pregnant; and in power politics, the White House cannot be "sort of" committed.

FICA FIASCO—CONSUMING OUR GRANDCHILDREN'S SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, in 1980 the FICA tax was 6.65 percent and we were confident that Social Security's pay-as-you-go funding mechanism would keep the system solvent into the 21st century.

Three years later, in 1983, the system was almost broke, so we decided to jack up FICA again to build a huge reserve that would pay for the baby boomers' retirement. Starting in 1990 employees and their employers will be paying 7.65 each.

The dirty little secret of this is that the higher FICA taxes are not securing retirement incomes at all. Instead, they are being collected and then used currently to cover a large part of our deficits.

In the 4 years between fiscal year 1990 and fiscal year 1993, growing reserves will allow Congress to spend an additional $325 billion without counting it for Gramm-Rudman purposes. When we need the reserves for retirement purposes in the 21st century, they are not going to be there.

Mr. Speaker, Social Security needs protection from a Congress which is spending its reserves for current consumption in order to avoid the tough decisions on spending and revenue to solve our deficit crisis. Misusing Social Security in this way, Mr. Speaker, is simply intolerable.

CONGRESS MUST ESTABLISH CLEAR SPENDING PRIORITIES

(Mr. BRENNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, the Gramm-Rudman meat cleaver approach to cutting Government spending is hanging above our heads. That cleaver will fall on Monday, the cuts will become effective. Now Congress must reassert its proper role in spending Federal dollars and establish clear spending priorities.

The blind across-the-board cuts will cause harm to many of our constituents. We are sent here to make choices and establish priorities, not to permit unelected bureaucrats to slash programs without regard to merit. A necessary step toward reasserting leadership in meeting our responsibilities would be for President Bush to immediately meet with Congress and agree to a true deficit reduction measure so that we might cut short the period of sequestration and mindless cuts.

On Monday, those individuals most likely to never benefit from the capital gains reduction will begin feeling cuts in programs most helpful to them: Programs such as fighting the drug war, Head Start, housing, education, health care, air safety, food inspection and environmental cleanup. The President must lead and now is the time for him to act. An immediate consultation by the President with Congress on spending priorities can lessen the harm across-the-board cuts will do to many Americans.

TODAY'S DEBATE ON THE FLAG IS ABOUT NATIONAL PRIDE

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, in some towns of America it is against the law to kiss your girlfriend in public or to spit on the street. In other cities it is against the law to ride a skateboard or to sing or to yodel in public.

In nearly all towns it is against the law to burn leaves or to burn trash, but in all of America, guess what, bingo, you can burn Old Glory; you can burn the American flag.

I say today that Congress' debate on the flag is not about Old Glory, it is about national pride, which may be one of the underlying factors of America's problems.

Thomas Jefferson is rolling over in his grave today.

COMPUTER VIRUSES PLAGUE LOOMS

(Mr. HERGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, this is a warning. The virus plague is about to descend upon us again. It is not a repeat of the bubonic or black plague, and no human will be directly infected. Unfortunately, it has the potential to wipe out bank statements, destroy hospital records, or even bring our air traffic control system to a grinding halt. It has been called the AIDS of the computer world.

The Columbus Day computer virus is set to wipe out files across the country tomorrow, Friday the 13th. The House Information System has already warned us that our own offices may be vulnerable to the threat.

While our knowledge of how to create a computer virus is certainly not lacking, our ability to prosecute those who create them is. FBI Director Bill Sessions has pointed out that no statute currently exists dealing with viruses. As a result I have introduced H.R. 55 which will fill this gap, and allow us to put these computer vandals behind bars. Let us deter future computer virus outbreaks by enacting this tough measure against those who would destroy our files.

LEGISLATION TO ENHANCE HISPANIC POSTSECONDARY EDUCATIONAL ACHIEVEMENT

(Mr. BUSTAMANTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, today the Congressional Hispanic Caucus sent a letter to President Bush asking him to support legislation that the caucus has introduced to enhance Hispanic educational achievement at the postsecondary level.

Our letter to the President coincides with the Census Bureau's announcement that the Hispanic population has increased to 20 million, which means only five other countries have larger Hispanic populations than the United States.

Mr. President, on several occasions you have said that you want to reach out to the Hispanic community and that you support minority education because you want to be the Education President.

You can lend credence to both those lofty goals by supporting the Hispanic Caucus' education initiative.

CALIFORNIA DESERT CONSERVATION ACT OF 1989

(Mr. LEWIS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, today I join with a bipartisan coalition of my colleagues in introducing the California Desert Conservation Act of 1989. This is landmark legislation for the protection of the Golden State's crown jewel—the 25-million-acre California desert.

In large part, this legislation reflects both the process and the compromises that took place during the period between 1976 and 1980 when $8 million and over 50 public meetings were devoted to planning for the future of the California desert. That process was mandated by this Congress under the Federal Land Planning and Management Act of 1976.

All of this bill's wilderness recommendations reflect an appropriate review of the acreage involved by a Federal agency operating with considerable public comment and input. Each of the 51 wilderness recommendations gives objective consideration to the multiple uses which governed the lands before they became wilderness study areas.

Unlike other California wilderness bills which have now been before the Congress in each of the last three sessions, this bill has the endorsement and support of the Members of Congress whose legislative districts are actually affected by the sweeping changes in the current patterns of land utilization.

This bill gives real meaning to efforts to expand existing protection of prime wilderness values which occur throughout our wonderful desert. My colleagues, I urge you to give careful consideration to the Members who represent the desert and the folks who live in, work in and love the California desert. This is their legislation. They have always been the desert's primary conservationists.

H.R. 3413, COAL INDUSTRY HEALTH BENEFIT STABILIZATION PROPOSAL

(Mr. POSHARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for the way miners at the Pittston Coal Company have been forced into a corner.

But there is a solution here in Congress that hasn't been found at the bargaining table.

I ask your support for H.R. 3413, the coal industry health benefit stabilization proposal, submitted this week by Congressman BOUCHER, myself, and other members of the coal caucus.

It prevents companies—like Pittston—who were members of the BCOA Health Agreement as of January 1, 1988—from withdrawing from the agreement and jeopardizing the health care of 135,000 retired miners.

The attack by Pittston on workers' jobs and benefits could be halted by this bill.

Its provisions are included in budget reconciliation in the Senate.

I urge those of us in the House who care about the mine workers to support this effort to resolve the Pittston strike and bring peace again to the coal fields.

CALIFORNIA DESERT PLAN

(Mr. McCANDLESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, today my colleagues and I have joined together in introducing legislation to complete a process this body began 13 years ago. It was through the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, known as FLPMA, that Congress first recognized the unique, vast beauty and resources of the California desert and set forth a plan to conserve them.

The FLPMA plan called for the creation of a multiple use management plan for the 12.1 million acres of public desert lands. It established a citizens advisory committee to solicit public input on desert planning, and to evaluate desert needs. After 4 years of gathering public comments and research information, the committee's recommendations were forwarded to the Bureau of Land Management for review and plan preparation. That work has now been completed, and the result is today's bill—legislation which balances the need for wilderness and conservation with access to vital desert resources.

Our bill will designate 51 separate areas containing 2.1 million acres of desert lands as permanent wilderness. It will establish an extensive network of historic desert trails to provide access for the very young, the aged and physically disadvantaged. And it will renew the California military land withdrawals at China Lake and the Chocolate Mountains. In short, it will complete the desert planning process.

Mr. Speaker, as a desert native, one who knows and loves our arid lands, I am proud to be a sponsor of today's legislation. I look forward to the long-awaited completion of the California desert plan, and I commend those who have worked long and hard to see it happen.

THE PRESIDENT BLINKED ON PANAMA

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, President Bush, with all due respect, the administration position on Panama reminds me of the infamous 19th-century mugwump party in America's history.

You may recall the mugwumps, so called because they straddled the issues, they played both sides: There are mugs on one side of the fence and there are wumps on the other side.

Now we have identified President Noriega of Panama as the drug kingpin of Central America. We have condemned him. We are worried that his corruption could endanger the future of the Panama Canal.

But when the opponents of General Noriega staged a coup last week and asked President Bush for help, he blinked.

His mug was on the side of attacking drug gangsters, his wump was on the side of caution to the point of timidity.

Mr. President, it is time to get your act together on Panama. If President Noriega is truly a menace to the United States, the United States cannot straddle the fence in dealing with him.

CAUTION BORDERING ON TIMIDITY?

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker in the well described administration policy as caution bordering on timidity. I think it is hypocritical in the extreme for those individuals who have consistently opposed any administration military involvement in Central America to take to this well and criticize a lack of military involvement in Panama.

□ 1040

It is OK to do it in Panama, I guess, for a number of Members of this House, but it was not OK to do it against Borge and the Ortega brothers, and a country which has received this year $600 million in Soviet bloc arms while we cut off Contra aid.

I think there are some Members on the other side of the aisle who should be very cautious to the point of being timid about this issue. As I said yesterday, it is a kind of new twist on the old proverb, "This is the wolf in sheep's clothing."

NATIONAL RECYCLING COMMITMENT

(Mr. OWENS of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OWENS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing the first in a package of recycling bills that will set precedent for a national commitment for recycling. The solid waste crisis is engulfing our country, our States, and our communities. It is a national atrocity. We can no longer just go with the flow of the garbage.

Americans throw away more than most of the world has an opportunity to consume. We generate 160 million tons of garbage every year, 11 billion disposable diapers. All this trash is glutting our landfills. We are using an obscene percentage of our national resources, and we are drowning in a sea of garbage. It is time not only to clean house in America, but to start cleaning house in the Federal Government.

My bill will literally eliminate waste in Government. It mandates that the Federal Government be the national recycling model by requiring every branch to recycle paper, glass bottles, aluminum cans, and plastics. Furthermore, it orders the Government to purchase recycled goods, thereby promoting a new market for all recyclables.

REMEMBER THE HOSTAGES

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, occasionally I come to this well, far too infrequently, to remind my colleagues, any visitors, and anybody within sight or sound of my voice to pray for our hostages in Lebanon, and to remind Members of the time expansion involved here.

The longest held hostage in Beirut, Lebanon, or the Bekaa Valley or some dungeon cellar in that area is the AP bureau chief and newsman, Terry Anderson. He was taken prisoner March 16, 1985. That means this Monday he will have been there 4 years and 7 months. Keep in mind, from Pearl Harbor until Adolf Hitler's suicide, it was 3 years 4 months and 3 weeks. In less than 3 years and 5 months we had wrapped up World War II in Europe, and in another 99 days it was over in the Pacific. Four and a half years is past the halfway point of our longest held Vietnamese prisoner, an Army major named Floyd Compton, held for a week less than 9 years.

Are we going to see Terry Anderson held for 9 years? It is now 4 years and 7 months he has been held captive.

NATURAL ENERGY SOURCE FROM HIGH-SULFUR COAL

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, the high-sulfur coal industry is hanging by its thumbs. Misguided environmentalists are trying to shut it down, imprudent Northeast politicians, yielding to the pressures of the press from the United States and Canada are trying to close it down, Western politicians, motivated by Western coal interests are trying to close it down.

A high-sulfur coal is America's greatest natural energy source. It is the greatest energy that we have. It is the highest Btu, and it is the cheapest electricity. When Members shut this down, then your rates are going to soar. Make no mistake about it, ignorance of the facts mean more foreign oil and more foreign gas, higher rates, and loss of jobs.

The question is, what do Members want? Let Members clean the air, but keep burning America's greatest natural energy source.

MARKET APPROACH TO HEALTH CARE CRISIS

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that we have been grappling with this entire Congress is catastrophic health care. We all know that in this House we repealed the Catastrophic Care Act, which 72 Members voted against last year, and the Senate has acted not in the exact same way that we have.

We have repealed it now. We have to take what I believe to be a positive approach. Mr. Speaker, there is no way that we are going to be able to address this issue if we do not use a market-oriented approach. Yesterday, I introduced H.R. 3440, which allows for the withdrawal of IRA moneys for the purchase of health care insurance, and allows employers to contribute to employee IRA's, and a number of other market-oriented approaches to deal with the catastrophic health care crisis.

I hope very much, Mr. Speaker, our colleagues will look at this legislation and join me as a cosponsor of H.R. 3440.

PRESIDENTIAL REPUTATION NOT SERIOUS

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, Americans understood when their new President was outmaneuvered on the European stage of public opinion by an experienced and a cunning Soviet leader. Time, we thought, would solve the problem, and judgment was withheld.

However, last week the administration was outwitted by a witless Panamanian despot, humbled by an arrogant clown.

More than a setback for democracy or of the war on drugs, it presented a dangerous sign that something is amiss in the White House. Either talent is lacking, or coordination is needed. Something is seriously wrong.

The best result of the tragic events of a week ago could be simply this: Mr. President, receive the message before your administration is tested and fails again. Find what is wrong. Mr. President, you are receiving the reputation of not being a serious person, and America cannot afford for the President to have that reputation.

PRAISE FOR ADMINISTRATION

(Mr. CALLAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to stand in this well or to sit in this audience and to hear these second-guessing Monday morning quarterbacks criticizing the President of the United States and the Secretary of Defense for his activities in Panama.

Let me tell Members that I am proud to stand here and defend the President of the United States and his actions in Panama. I am glad that he is not in Delaware this morning, receiving the bodies of people we would have lost as a result of some foolish activity in Panama. The President of the United States is in charge of the administrative branch of Government, and our responsibility in Government is to stand here and to run the legislative branch.

To those Members that are so critical of the administrative branch, let me tell those Members that my observation is that those Members are critical of the President because he is a Republican, and in a different party. Let Members stand behind the President of the United States and recognize his constitutional charge, and that is to run the defense of this country and to run the administrative branch. I support the activities of the President, and I include Members in pleading that Members, too, will do the same.

PRESIDENT ACTED WISELY

(Mr. RHODES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to come to the well and speak this morning, but frankly I have become rather irritated, to put it mildly, at what I have been hearing here in the well, and in front of the TV cameras for the past 2 weeks, concerning Panama.

Speaker after speaker has come here to excoriate the President on television for "having an opportunity" and "doing nothing" in Panama. Yet not one, not one of these Members, has suggested any activity which that Member would like to have seen the President do. Not one Member has identified a viable leader of the so-called coup that the President and of the administration could have dealt with.

If the President had acted, and if one American soldier received so much as a scratch, or if one Panamanian citizen had been injured, Members would be lined up all the way to the Speaker's lobby screaming for the President's head.

The fact is, in the situation like the President was facing, the do-nothing option or zero option is often the correct option. The President acted wisely and with courage last week in Panama. I think all Members know it.

U.S. REVERSAL ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS? HOPEFULLY NOT

(Mr. MOODY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, last month President Bush told the United Nations he favored immediate steps to halt and reverse the worldwide threat of chemical weapons. President Bush also called for this in a joint session of Congress on February 9, 1989.

Furthermore, the United States has been supporting treaty language in the Geneva negotiations for calling an immediate ban on production of chemical weapons upon completion of the treaty.

This Monday, news media around the world announced that President Bush now says the United States would continue production of poison gas and nerve gas well beyond the treaty's effect.

This is a serious reversal of U.S. official position. It also would be highly destabilizing since it opens the door for countries like Iraq and Iran to avoid the very discipline the United States is trying to impose.

How can we push treaty that bans production but want to continue producing ourselves. How can we reconcile these two positions. Either: First, we're not planning to sign the treaty we've taken the lead in negotiating; or second, we're planning to push for a change in the treaty text to allow continued production.

The first would torpedo the treaty negotiations. After all, what country would sign on if the United States planned to exempt itself? The second course could codify the right of countries to continue producing chemical weapons indefinitely. That could be worse than no treaty at all.

The timing of this decision is especially unfortunate because there have been so many encouraging developments in recent CW negotiations. Momentum has been growing to move toward a global regime to stop the proliferation of these cruel and deadly weapons to countries throughout the world.

The public and the 40 countries negotiating in Geneva need clarification from President Bush. What is his position on chemical weapons production? Are we planning to sign a multilateral treaty and apply it unilaterally? Are we more concerned with stopping proliferation or continuing production?

President Bush has to speak out clearly and decisively on this issue or he may quickly discover that he has undercut the very treaty he has claimed to want.

LEGISLATION TO REMOVE CERTAIN GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES WOULD CUT EXPENSES

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing a bill which I introduced in the last Congress which provides, first, for a study and a report to Congress on the things that the Constitution requires the U.S. Government to do; second, on the things that are required of the U.S. Government to do but which it probably cannot remove itself from doing because of tradition and the well-established programs we already have; and, third, on the things that the U.S. Government now does which are basically local in nature, such as mass transit, sewers, the arts and humanities, and a great many other things which are a great expense to the Federal Government and are responsible for part of our great problem we have today fiscally.

I think we should do this, because if we are not going to increase taxes, we certainly should eliminate those Government activities which are not really the responsibility of Federal Government.

Moreover, we are passing now expensive bills like the very much needed child care bill, but with little thought as to the multibillion dollar costs in the face of a terrible national deficit. If we are not willing to pay our bills by taxes, we should not be adding to our borrowing; but we should instead place back in local governments the things that the Federal Government can no longer finance without further excessive and expensive borrowing.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced this bill today, and I hope it can pass in this Congress. I believe it can help put our fiscal house in order.

A PROPOSAL TO ALTER TERMS OF THE PANAMA CANAL TREATY

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I, too, have listened over the last several days to Members coming to this well criticizing the President of the United States for what took place in Panama. I have heard that criticism from a number of people who helped weaken our intelligence establishment so that we did not have adequate information available to us at the time this coup attempt took place. I have heard it from people who would not be with the President of the United States if he decided to take any action in Panama.

Let me suggest to some of my colleagues who are concerned about what is going on in Panama that there is something we can do. If we are really as good as our strong words on the House floor, why do we not go back and take a look at what we have committed in terms of Panama and decide to defend that canal in perpetuity? Why do we not go back and take back our ability under the Panama Canal treaty to defend the canal even after the year 1999?

For all those who are concerned about Noriega, they should remember that if Noriega is still in power 10 years from now, we are going to hand over the canal to him lock, stock, and barrel, including the defense of it. We have a chance now to change that. I have legislation in this House—and it is not moving anywhere—to provide defense in perpetuity of the canal. Why do we not do that? That would be an action we could take right now.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 262 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 262

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House a motion to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag, with the Senate amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendments. Debate on the motion shall continue not to exceed one hour, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 262 is a rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2978 as amended by the Senate. This is a bill that would amend section 700 of title 18 of the United States Code to protect the physical integrity of the U.S. flag.

The rule provides that after the adoption of this rule, it will be in order to consider H.R. 2978 as amended by the Senate and to concur in the Senate amendments thereto. The rule restricts debate time on the motion to 1 hour, with the time to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. Finally, the rule provides that, after debate has concluded, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on final adoption without intervening motion.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues are well aware of the tempest stirred up when the Supreme Court overturned the conviction of a man for burning the U.S. flag. The public was outraged by the decision and the Congress was asked to take action.

This bill provides that "whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag of the United States" shall be fined or imprisoned or both. Also, as amended by the Senate, H.R. 2978 provides for expedited review of the statute by the Supreme Court should the constitutionality of this statute be challenged.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill is the least we can do to protect the sanctity of our flag; an object that symbolizes everything American from the founding of Jamestown to President Bush. In particular, this bill will serve as an apology to our country's veterans, who were slapped in the face by a ruling that would allow the malicious destruction of the flag without fear of punishment. Those who fought to create and protect our country truly embody everything that our flag represents, and it is to them that this bill should be dedicated.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 262 is a straightforward rule for a measure that deserves enactment. I urge my colleagues to adopt this rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, the protection of the flag has long been a concern of mine, long before the Supreme Court decision, back in the late 1960's, when the looters and the rioters and those who were desecrating the flag were holding it up in contempt, holding it by its standard and setting it aflame, putting a match to it in open rebellion. Such a scene occurred in New York City in Central Park. Up Pennsylvania Avenue they marched, trampling upon the flag, spitting upon it, and desecrating it in every way. In all parts of the country, as a result of the Vietnam war, they were desecrating the American flag.

I introduced a bill to protect our flag and to make it a Federal law to do so. It passed the House and the Senate overwhelmingly, and the President signed it into law in 1968.

For use on the floor of the House, I got from the New York Daily News a picture of the flag burning in Central Park and a picture of the flag raising at Iwo Jima, and I had them blown up and put into a frame, some 6 feet long and 3 feet deep, and on that I had the words: "If our flag is worth dying for, it is worth protecting."

I believe that today. Under my bill, which is now law—and the Supreme Court has not ruled on the Federal law, only on the State law in Texas—that language is on the books. It provides for a fine and a jail sentence, and I am happy for that. I understand that the publisher of Hustler magazine was tried and convicted under that Federal law for wearing a flag as a diaper.

I think it is time that we make sure without any question that whatever we do is effective, because the flag is more than just a piece of cloth. I feel that the best route to go is a constitutional amendment, and I think in the end that is what will result. But I supported this bill when it was on the floor of the House the last time, and I will support it today because anything that we can do to protect the flag we must do.

Many times the last thing those in battle see is that flag fluttering in the breeze. Soldiers and military men have held it high and have died for it. Yes, I say to the Members of this House, the flag speaks to us.

□ 1100

The other day when this was before the House I was yielded 1 minute. I did not have time to read my full remarks.

And listen, the flag speaks to us today:

LISTEN TO OUR FLAG SPEAK TO US

Today I don't feel as proud as I used to. People are burning me and desecrating me, with the permission of the highest Court in the land. My blood flows from my stars and stripes every time a match flame touches me.

I am not just a piece of cloth, I am the soul of America. I am what you stand for, one nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all.

I am proud to lead your parades, proud to be with you in battle and in peace. I am happy as I flutter in the breeze, but I am saddened when I am lowered at half-mast.

And when they wrap me around the casket of your dead son, father, brother or sister, my red, white and blue become my arms and my stars become my eyes. I hold them close in loving care and my tears are real for they died so that I may continue to wave over the land of the free and home of the brave.

I hope you stop letting me be burned or trampled upon because I am your flag, the flag of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, I support this measure to be sure that we will always protect this flag that we love and cherish so much.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 413, nays 0, not voting 19, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 262, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BROOKS moves to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill, H.R. 2978.

The text of the Senate amendments is as follows:

Senate amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after "burns," insert "maintains on the floor or ground,"

Page 2, strike out all after line 16 over to and including line 11 on page 3, and insert:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, last week the U.S. Senate agreed to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act of 1989, which the House passed by a vote of 380 to 38 on September 12 of this year. In acting on this legislation, the Senate adopted four amendments:

First, the Senate amended the expedited procedure for Supreme Court review to correct a problem which they perceived in that provision. Some Members had expressed concern about the possibility that the language as originally drafted placed original jurisdiction over a case involving this statute in the Supreme Court. The change made by the Senate would clearly establish that the Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction over challenges to the statute.

Second, the Senate deleted a provision in the bill that would give the House and Senate a right to intervene in any appeal to the Supreme Court. This does not mean that the House and Senate cannot intervene, but deletes the legislative provision explicitly granting that right.

Third, the Senate added a provision making it illegal to "maintain" a flag "on the floor or ground" in addition to our language which made it illegal to trample upon the flag.

Fourth, the Senate added to the list of prohibited conduct the phrase, "physically defiles."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Senate amendments to H.R. 2978 are consistent with this House's intent to move expeditiously to conform Federal law to the Supreme Court's holding in Texas versus Johnson. The amendments to the expedited review provision are relatively technical in nature and will enhance this valuable provision, which will ensure that the constitutionality of this measure is tested and verified as quickly as possible.

The two other amendments merely clarify the type of conduct that is to be prohibited by the statute. Let me emphasize once again that it is our intent to make this provision of Federal criminal law "content neutral." It is the act of harming the physical integrity of the flag, rather than any message the actor might be attempting to convey, that is to be punished by 18 U.S.C. 700 as we are amending it. The Senate added two phrases to the list of prohibited conduct: "Maintain on the floor or ground" and "physically defile." These two additions are totally consistent with our intent to protect the flag in all circumstances, in a content-neutral manner, and I support their inclusion in H.R. 2978.

Mr. Speaker, it has been our position throughout consideration of this legislation that the Congress should act quickly to amend the law in order to respond to the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson and protect the physical integrity of the flag. By taking this action today, we will be able to send H.R. 2978 to the President for his signature immediately.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

□ 1130

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the House version of this legislation. I see no reason for changing my mind now.

To those who believe we can overturn a Supreme Court decision of this kind by statute, I can only say, in the immortal words of the farmer who was asked directions:

"You can't get there from here."

Let me therefore speak for a few moments on the need for a constitutional amendment to protect the flag.

There is no doubt that the overwhelming majority of the House want to protect the flag. The vote in the House on this statutory approach demonstrated that.

But you can't do it by statute. I won't go into the arguments that prove that point at this time. But the best expert testimony before the Constitutional and Civil Rights Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee showed that if you want to protect the flag, only a constitutional amendment will do the job.

Some call that tampering with the Constitution. But the drafters of the Constitution provided for the amendment process, a long and careful procedure. Surely this is not tampering.

But you may ask: it may not be tampering, but is it wise and prudent to do so?

My answer is that in a democracy, a process that involves the people of the 50 States is wise. And a process that demands a 50-State debate is prudent.

Will a constitutional amendment "amend the first amendment" and deprive us of first amendment rights?

The answer is "No." No idea is forbidden under our proposal. No expression of any idea is forbidden, so long as it doesn't involve desecration of the flag.

If you have an unpopular or offensive or even despicable idea, you can still print it, say it, put it in artistic form, make a movie about it or in any other way communicate it—so long as you don't desecrate the flag.

To those who felt they had to vote for this statutory approach, to cover political flanks, I understand your dilemma. But now that we've made this gesture—useless as it is to protect the flag—let's get down to business and begin the process that is needed.

If you really want to protect the flag—if you really want to do something more than make a gesture—then, given the Court's decision, you have to support our bipartisan amendment to save the flag.

I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding the time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is not a surprise to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the distinguished minority leader, to understand that a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary strongly disagrees with his view that this statute that we are bringing to the House of Representatives, approved by the House overwhelmingly and approved by the Senate overwhelmingly, is constitutional. Certainly this is a far better track to take to save the flag, to protect the flag by a simple statute than to go through the mammoth and dangerous procedure of weakening for the first time in our history the free speech provisions of the Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, this is virtually the same bill that the House adopted overwhelmingly on September 12, so there should be little need to debate its virtues now. The Senate made three changes. One of them cures a potential problem in the House bill. The others, I believe, are unnecessary, but they do not seriously harm the bill.

First, the Senate improved the expedited review provision. As drafted in the House, the bill could have been read to expand improperly the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction, although it certainly was not our intent to do so. The Senate has corrected any misimpression there and did a fine job.

The Senate, however, dropped the provision that gave this House and the Senate the right to intervene to defend the constitutionality of the bill if it is challenged. This is not a fatal change, since the Congress can still seek to intervene if necessary. It would be a shame if the Justice Department, for some political reason, cynically chose not to defend this law, and I hope they will defend it.

Second, the Senate added a prohibition against maintaining the flag on the floor or ground. I think this was not necessary, but it does not affect the focus or intent of the bill.

Third, the Senate added language against physically defiling the flag. In the Judiciary Committee in the House we defeated an amendment that would have added the word "defiles" to the bill, because "defiles" alone may have an expressive focus and this bill is intended to focus only on conduct. In the Senate, when the question was first raised there as to why "defiles" had been left out of the bill, it was explained that the word "defiles" alone includes meanings like "profane" or "dishonor." So the Senate wisely added the qualifier "physically." This qualifier makes it clear that the amendment covers only physical injury to a flag. The amendment's sponsor said, "What we are trying to regulate is conduct." He was concerned that the terms we had used in the House did not cover actions like throwing mud or grease on a flag. Senator WILSON, the sponsor of the amendment, explained that he wanted to cover damage to the physical integrity of a flag that was not permanent. He was concerned that the bill as passed by the House did not cover acts like intentionally soiling the flag with mud that could be washed off. I think our bill did cover those things under the term "deface." But the Senate amendment makes it clear that all forms of injury to the physical integrity of a flag are prohibited. It makes it clear that one does not have to permanently destroy or damage a flag to violate the statue. That is all this amendment achieves.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] to concur in the Senate amendments.

Let it be clear that this is a procedural vote to send the Senate bill to the President of the United States for his action. If this vote is defeated, then the bill can be sent to conference where the Senate and House can work out the differences between the conflicting versions and hopefully send a bill that is more constitutional to the President of the United States for his consideration.

The conference is a desirable alternative because, in my opinion, the Senate bill is clearly unconstitutional and will be struck down as such by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The constitutional infirmity that was inserted by the Senate was the so-called Wilson amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] has described earlier. It inserted the words "physically defiles" in the text of the House-passed bill.

In my opinion, there is no difference between "physically defiles" and "defiles" because both attempt to prohibit the same kind of conduct and impose criminal penalties on those who do that. It is not just my opinion that inserting the word "defiles" makes this bill unconstitutional. On June 27, 1989, the full Committee on the Judiciary markup on the House version of the bill, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. DOUGLAS] attempted to insert the word "defiles" in the list of those things which were prohibited.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] stated from the transcript of that hearing:

> I have become persuaded that "defiles" suggests expression in speech. We are dealing with conduct, and that's why I became persuaded, after studying it for some period of time, that "defiles" would be better left out of the statute. It adds nothing to it, and it should be limited to just those acts that are purely acts of conduct, as opposed to expression.
> For that reason, I would oppose the addition of the word "defiles." If you're opposed to attempting to make the statute constitutional, I suggest you vote for the gentleman's amendment. If what you're trying to do is craft a statute that will pass constitutional muster, then I think you have to oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Now, that is the question that is posed here today. If Members want to make the statute unconstitutional, then vote yes on the pending motion. If Members want to try to make it constitutional, vote against it.

The gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], my distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, also opposed the insertion of the word "defiles" at the same meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, and he said, quoting from the transcript:

> I agree with the gentleman from New Jersey that this amendment should be defeated. "Defiles" is like desecrate. It involves communication of a message of disrespect. If we add this to the bill, we will run into the same First Amendment problems that were the issue in the Texas vs. Johnson case. I ask for a no vote.

Now, I think it is regrettable that the gentleman from California has changed his position, because I think that inserting the word "physically defiles" will mean that we will be revisiting this issue, following the Supreme Court striking down the statute.

The question presented to the House today is not whether free speech will be restricted. Both supporters of both the statute and the constitutional amendment want to restrict what the Supreme Court has said to be protected free speech, and that is flag burning. While I favor the amendment rather than the statute, that is not the question before the Members. The question is whether the Congress is going to do the job right. Approval of this motion will send a fatally flawed statute, which both the chairman and the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, which had 4 days of hearings on this subject, say is unconstitutional to the President of the United States.

To use the argument that it is not our job to determine whether statutes are constitutional or not, that is the job of the judicial branch. That argument is simply a cop-out on the oath of office that we all took to serve, protect, and to defend our beloved Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this motion should be defeated. We should then send the bill to conference so that Congress can do the job right and so that the Supreme Court will not kick this statute right back to Members for a future fix up.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the full Committee on the Judiciary for yielding time to me.

I rise in strong support of the motion to concur on the Senate amendment to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act.

The flag of the United States is entitled to protection from physical attack and destruction. The Constitution of the United States is also entitled to protection, and for this reason we should not rush to amend it each time there is an unfavorable court decision or other development which can be addressed in a less dramatic manner, such as through statutory law. Frankly, I think that the Supreme Court was wrong in their opinion in Texas versus Johnson. They could have and should have found that we are dealing with conduct, not expression. However, amending the Constitution, as some would advance, should be a last resort, not a first resort.

H.R. 2978, as sent to the Senate, embodied those principles. The Senate amendments retain those principles, and I urge my colleagues to accept them.

The Senate has added the words "physically defiles" to the conduct prohibited. The gentleman from Wisconsin, when he was in the well, indicated that during the committee debate, that I engaged in some colloquy in opposition to advancing the word "defiles." That is true. However, we are dealing with the word "physically defiles," not defiles, as the gentleman well knows, and there is a vast difference between the two. "Physically defiles" is in essence another way of stating conduct already prohibited under the House bill by language referring to mutilating and defacing. It is duplicitous, in my judgment.

The Senate has also added "maintains on the floor or ground," which is in the House language and is retained in the Senate bill. Finally, the Senate would require that a lower Federal court rule on a case before it challenges these amendments before the matter could come before the Supreme Court.

The House bill called upon the district to refer the matter to the Supreme Court without first ruling, and frankly, I think that the Senate is improving the language.

The Senate concluded that under the Constitution, some lower Federal court must rule on the matter such as this before it can come before the Supreme Court, and I believe that the Senate is right on that score. This Senate amendment, therefore, improves the bill without substantially delaying the ultimate review, and I fully expect approval of this legislation by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, it is a good bill. It will, in my judgment, pass constitutional muster. For those that suggest that it will not, I am not sure how they can say that. It was a 5 to 4 decision. We need to pick up one additional vote. We are dealing with conduct, not expression. It is a very carefully crafted and tailored statute, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The gentleman from New Jersey says that there is a vast difference between the words "physically defile," which is what the Senate inserted in this bill, and the word "defile," which he voted against when it was proposed in the House Committee on the Judiciary. I believe the gentleman from New Jersey is splitting hairs. It is the same type of conduct, and the same type of expression, that either "physically defiles" or "defiles" attempts to prohibit. That is part of the problem in drafting a statute that can pass constitutional muster.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments to H.R. 2978, the Flag Protection Act, serve to make a constitutionally suspect bill worse. They should be rejected, not embraced.

When the House first considered H.R. 2978 on September 12, I voted against the bill. Despite vain efforts to characterize the bill as being content-neutral, it was clear that the real purpose and effect of the bill was and would be to prohibit expression of the kind of offensive, minority views that the first amendment is there to guarantee.

The claim that this bill would merely protect the "physical integrity" of the flag has been rendered even more empty by the Senate amendments. The Senate has added "defiling" the flag to the list of actions prohibited. A similar amendment was originally rejected by the House Judiciary Committee.

With this amendment, the Senate has shed any pretense that this bill is not aimed at certain types of opinion. This amendment demonstrates that the bill is designed to punish actions that express judgments against the flag, not just actions that affect the physical condition of a flag. To say you can "defile" something in a "neutral" way, without implying a hostile sentiment, is like saying you can "love" something without caring for it. It perverts both language and logic.

Some supporters of this wording have stopped pretending. During debate on the bill in the Senate, the author of the amendment, Senator PETE WILSON, said:

> . . . What we are doing with the statute, . . . is to proscribe conduct that definitely is offensive . . . we are entitled—indeed most of us think we are obliged—to prohibit that kind of conduct.

The Senate has improved one part of this bill. As presented in the House, section 3 of the bill directed expedited Supreme Court review, without any factual record of the case having been established in a lower court. That approach was as ill-advised as it was unprecedented in any other expedited review statute. I am happy the Senate recognized this threat to sound judicial process and amended it to allow for a U.S. District Court to rule on a challenge to the statute before the Supreme Court takes up the issue.

The fundamental fact remains that this bill is intended to punish a particular type of expression. It is a form of expression that is highly offensive to me and to the vast majority of our people. But it is nonetheless a form of expression covered by the First Amendment. This is, then, a bill to restrict freedom of expression. It is, and should be, unconstitutional.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, may I comment on the comments of the previous speaker and say that there are a lot of things that people love and do not take care of, such as good health.

I rise in support of the bill. I am pleased that both Houses of Congress have acted expeditiously on this legislation in order to protect the physical integrity of the American flag in the wake of the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson.

Of course we already have on the books a law against flag desecration. The Supreme Court has made it clear that that law is unconstitutional as it stands. The obvious, quickest, and easiest response is to try to fix that law to make it constitutional.

I hope and believe that this bill will do that by prohibiting certain concrete, well-defined actions without any reference to the motivations behind those actions. Distinguished constitutional scholars have testified that this approach should do the job. It only makes sense to try it and see. In any case, we ought to have an answer from the Supreme Court well before we could hope to have enacted and ratified a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I think most of the American people want to protect the physical integrity of our flag. But I also think most of them do not want to tamper with the first amendment or any of the other freedoms for which that flag stands. This bill is the most sensible way to try to reconcile those two goals.

I thought it was the most sensible approach to the issue when I first introduced the Biden amendment as a separate bill in the House on June 28. I still thought it was the most sensible approach when I spoke in favor of the bill on September 12. And I still think so today.

I urge all my colleagues to accept the Senate amendments, and send this bill to the President.

□ 1150

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, with most of the Members in this Chamber, I had hoped that after the Supreme Court opinion came down there would be a way to statutorily handle the Johnson case. Unfortunately, after 5 days of hearings that I participated in, it became very clear that it was impossible to draft a statute to overturn a first amendment decision of the U.S. Supreme Court.

I had tried to make that point by offering the word, "defile," during our deliberations in July, and on a party-line vote of 20 Democrats against 13 Republicans, the word, "defile," was not put in the statute. Today the very Members who voted that are now here defending the word, "defile," and I know the only change is the calendar because the word still means the same thing.

If we go back into the Cloakroom, we can pick up a student dictionary. I like to use the student edition because it is real simple. The student edition that we have in the Cloakroom defines "deface," and it also defines "defile."

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that we did not debate in committee the term, "Physically defile." that was never interjected in the debate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If I may continue, I think I can answer the gentleman's point.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that not so?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, let me answer it in this way: If we read the definition of the word "defile" from this dictionary, we find that the first three definitions are clearly physical acts: "1. To make filthy; to foul." That requires physical conduct.

Then it says: "2. To ravish. 3. To make ceremonial unclean; to pollute."

Those are physical acts. "Defile" entails physical conduct. Frankly, to put the word "physical" in front of "defile" is surplusage. We do not need the word "physical," because the very definition of "defile" denotes physical acts themselves.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has not answered the question. Did we debate the term, "physically defile" or the term "defile"?

Mr. DOUGLAS. We debated the term "defile," but it did not matter because "physical" is what "defile" involves.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I disagree. I think "physically" substantially modifies the word "defile." We are talking about physically defiling, which is akin to defacing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the former distinguished prosecutor from New Jersey, what is not physical about "making filthy" and "polluting"? What is a nonphysical defilement of making something filthy? How do we make something filthy without doing it physically?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I think physical defilement is basically akin to defacing. The term "physical" modifies in a substantial fashion the term "defile." We never debated the term, "physical defilement," in the full committee. In fact, I find it duplicious.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest this: Would the gentleman have voted differently on the date we took this up if we had offered "physically defile"?

Mr. HUGHES. I would have argued that it probably was duplicious, because we had covered it by the other terms in talking about the trampling upon, the desecration, and the defacement. I think all those terms are in fact equivalent to physical defilement. I think we are talking about the same thing, and in fact I would have argued, if it had come up, that basically what we would have been doing would be duplicating what we already have in there by way of terms that were trying to denote some type of destruction of the American flag.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, first of all, what this points up is basically that my point is that we cannot make a statute do what the committee, at least on the House side, wanted it to do.

When the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] spoke on the floor of the House on September 12, he tried to explain what the word "deface" meant in the bill, and let me quote him from the RECORD of September 12: "The bill expressly prohibits defacing the flag. Defacing includes soiling."

That is plainly wrong. The same dictionary says that "deface" means "to destroy or mar the face or the looks of; to disfigure."

Actually the disfiguring is what the flag was covered by under the bill, and the soiling was not covered in the bill at the time we took it up, the last time we voted. It is now covered because of the word, "defile." "Defile" says "to make filthy; to foul."

So the bottom line is this, and I think this points up the whole problem. To deface or defile, either one, requires action and conduct, and it is that expressive conduct that the Supreme Court said Gregory Lee Johnson could do under the first amendment. They did not say he was somehow only making a speech about the flag; he was physically desecrating the flag by burning it. And now the very same Members, the 20 Members who voted against that in the committee when I offered it, suddenly find it is a neat idea when it comes back from the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, reading from the definition of "defile"—and the gentleman, I am sure, knows this—it also talks in terms of "to tread underfoot," which points up, as I have suggested, that it would be duplicious, because we have "trampled upon."

But going on in the definition of "defile," it also talks in terms of "to profane" or "to sully," and standing alone, without the term, "physical," I think it would invite some challenge. The way the Senate has corrected that, and I think properly so, does term it a physical defilement, and while it is duplicious, it does not do any harm.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, if I may reclaim my time, I think the bottom line is clear. We cannot do this by statute. That is why I am going to vote against the statute. We will be getting a vote next month under the agreement with the cosponsors of the amendment on a constitutional amendment, and I would suggest that is the correct answer for at least three reasons.

Even if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] were correct and the statute were OK, it does absolutely nothing for the 48 States that have flag statutes on the books. The only way that can be done is if they all come into session and amend their State laws. The argument that I heard that we do not want to have a constitutional amendment because it will require action by the 50 States proves the point. The States will all have to act either on an amendment or to change their own statutes.

This statute is a sham. Unless a U.S. marshal or FBI agent is physically present, no local police officer can make an arrest under this United States Code provision. There is nothing in this law that permits a sheriff, a State police officer, or a local police officer to make an arrest when they see this Federal statute being violated.

Finally, the Justice Department says the statute is unconstitutional. I do not see how, with that very clear expression on their part, they could defend the constitutionality of this thing.

So let us get on with it. Let us vote either for it or against it. I am going to vote against it because it is a mess. But the next time, let us be ready next month to do the job right and stop fiddling around. Let us vote for the constitutional amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Intellectual Property, and the Administration of Justice.

□ 1200

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief.

First of all, I want to make it very clear that I oppose a constitutional amendment. I think that would be a disaster to the first amendment.

Second, we are not, of course, here today debating a constitutional amendment. We are debating the statute. I very much support it, the statute we presented last month in the House of Representatives that went over to the Senate. I think even the Senate version today will be overwhelmingly approved by the House, and I would predict it will be signed into law by the President.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is our responsibility, when a statute is invalidated, to attempt to remedy, to repair, that statute, and that is what we are attempting to do, even when on constitutional grounds that becomes very, very difficult. I concede that point. I do not think we can be sanguine that even the House version would necessarily be accepted by the Supreme Court, but I think that was a course of action we had to take.

Now, having said that, I may differ from some of my colleagues who have spoken in support of the amendment today by saying that I think what the Senate did was certainly a disservice to what we attempted to achieve—the debate, or course, centers around the term "defile" and whether or not the term "physically defile" is sufficient to render it no longer an expression, a point of view, as would be communicated solely by the word "defile" itself.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are left, I think, sending a bill to the President somewhat less sanguine which the Supreme Court will accept, I regret to say, and I think some of the arguments made against the use of the word "defile" or even "physically defile" are well taken. Nonetheless, it is our sole course of action.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCHUETTE].

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I have high regard for the differing views that are held within the committee and in this House of Representatives on the matter of flag burning, and how we best correct it, and how we best outlaw it. However, a statute is a constitutional dead end. This statute will be held unconstitutional.

Mr. Speaker, this is the second time we have dealt with this statute, but the second time around it will not fly. Take two; it will not fly. Round two; it will not fly either.

Why? Today's Supreme Court, and they made a wrong decision in the end of June, today's Supreme Court will approach a Federal statute with the very same type of methodology and approach that they used with the Texas statute when they declared that law to be invalid and up in smoke with the laws in 48 States.

So, let us not kid ourselves or attempt to fool the American public. If we want to outlaw and prevent flag burning, we ought to do it with an amendment.

The President's amendment, the Michel-Montgomery amendment, is narrowly drawn, carefully drafted, and it does not imperil our Bill of Rights guaranteed under the Constitution.

I happen to think we ought to move on an amendment as soon as possible. Veterans across this country, parents across this country, people across this country want to outlaw flag burning, and the only way to do it is with an amendment on the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I am voting no on this proposal.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Flag Protection Act. This bill, with the Senate amendments, is an effort to correct the Supreme Court ruling that allows the physical desecration of our flag. I will vote for this new statute, but I still have big doubts about whether this or any other law can stand up to a constitutional test. I fear this law will be struck down by the courts, using the Texas versus Johnson case as a precedent.

I note that the Senate has added language to prohibit the display of the flag on the floor or ground. Last March, when a Chicago Art Museum allowed the flag to be displayed on the floor, I introduced a bill in the House to add this language to existing law. But that was before the Supreme Court rendered its decision this summer. I think this amendment is an improvement to the original House bill, but I'm afraid this law still may not get the job done.

The only way to guarantee protection of the flag is a constitutional amendment. That is why I joined with Congressman BOB MICHEL in a bipartisan effort to bring the constitutional amendment before the House. Speaker FOLEY has agreed to let us have that vote later this fall. I appreciate his willingness to schedule such a vote.

Approving a constitutional amendment is not easy. It takes a two-thirds vote in both Houses and then three-fourths of the States. But I think the issue is important enough to warrant an amendment to the Constitution and a great majority of my constituents agree.

Some veterans groups support this statute and others want an amendment, but they agree on one thing—we want to protect the American flag from a few nuts out there who are looking for attention.

I hope this new law will work, but I am not optimistic about its chances. I will vote for this bill and continue to push for a constitutional amendment.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, as the former ranking Republican on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I have been very much involved in this issue for a long time. I am going to support this legislation today for the same reason that I supported it several weeks ago; that is because the Speaker, Mr. FOLEY, gave the commitment to this body, to every Member, that there would be a vote in this Chamber before we adjourned on a constitutional amendment protecting the flag.

I would ask at this time, Mr. Speaker, if that commitment could be restated.

I know that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TORRICELLI] the Speaker pro tempore is the Acting Speaker. However I will ask him to restate that commitment to this body.

Certainly I would urge every Member of this body to support this legislation today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] recognizes that the Chair is not in a position to make any commitments on behalf of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, if it is possible before the debate ends to have that information relayed to the body, I am certain that it would get a lot more votes for this legislation.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, first let me express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding time to me. Let me also acknowledge that what the Committee on the Judiciary has been doing is in essence trying to keep this House and the Congress from making a grave mistake by the adoption of a constitutional amendment. I think that its intentions are noble, and worthwhile and even admirable. At the same time I think that the effort to adopt a statute is as wrong ultimately as a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debates, and I have noticed the verbal acrobatics that people have to go through to try to explain away that what clearly is expressive conduct as held by a long line of Supreme Court decisions, is not expressive conduct and that the prohibition of "physical defilement" of the flag in some way escapes being barred by the First Amendment.

Mr. Speaker, there is no rash of flag burning. There has been no epidemic of demonstrated disrespect for the flag since Texas versus Johnson. I think most Americans as all Members of this House, respect and admire the flag as a symbol for all the values for which this Nation stands. We ought to have the courage of our convictions and stand up for those values, for the Bill of Rights and for the Constitution, and by our votes say, "There's no need to improve on the Constitution or the Bill of Rights."

My colleagues, let us not adopt a statute. Let us not adopt a constitutional amendment. Let us adopt a firm resolve to live up to the ideals for which this country has stood for some 200 years. Let us have faith in ourselves and in the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that this legislation be defeated.

□ 1210

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], with whom I am very proud to serve and all the other people on the committee who have worked so hard on this bill.

We have heard a lot of discussion today about the value of a statute versus the value of a constitutional amendment, the difficulty of arriving at a suitable amendment either in a constitutional amendment or in a statute, but I do not think Americans really see the issue framed in those terms. I think Americans see the issue, and maybe I am being a little presumptuous, kind of the way I do. There is a gut instinct that hits you when somebody burns up a flag, when somebody urinates on a flag, when somebody defaces the flag. There is too much in your memory, too much in the Nation's collective memory over the course of the 100 and some odd years that we have used that flag in almost its present state as a significant symbol of what this country stands for.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] before me said this country has great values and we ought to stand for them and be true to them, but they are not all contained in the Constitution. They are not all contained in the Bill of Rights. Some of them are contained in Arlington Cemetery. Some of them are contained on the walls of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Some of them are contained at Gettysburg.

People just do not believe that if you feel so strongly on an issue that you speak out, that your moral conviction is any greater for having defiled the flag. I do not believe that. There are people who can speak out in this country very well for their issues without defiling the memory of millions of Americans who have fought and died for that flag.

We cherish the memories of those people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this additional time.

Mr. Speaker, we cherish those memories. We cherish the Constitution. We cherish the rights in the Bill of Rights. We cherish the balance struck between individual liberties and society's collective ability to rein in certain conduct, but we also cherish the very symbol, the idea that the flag represents for the people who have served and been injured or died, all those who have come before.

Americans do not see this as an issue whether it is constitutionally exactly correct, whether it should be in a statute or whether it should be in the Constitution. We are trying to strike a balance with this statute. I agree with this balance, but all I can say is, no matter what happens that flag is a symbol of something greater than just the rights in this country. It is a symbol for an awful lot of people and we ought to believe in that and make sure that no one can desecrate this flag.

Mr. Speaker, this statute is the way to do that and I would hope we all vote for it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, let me salute the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] for a very moving speech on what the flag means to him and what the flag means to all Americans. I can subscribe to the gentleman's expression and to what the flag means to me. I am sure that every Member of the House of Representatives can also subscribe to the sentiments that he expressed, but that is not the question that is before the House of Representatives.

The question also is not whether you favor a statutory approach or the amendment approach. The question is the concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and the major amendment of the Senate, this bill about which most of the debate on the subject of the motion has been about is the insertion of the words "physically defiles." I believe that there is almost a consensus that the insertion of those two words into the statute of what is prohibited conduct, violation of which is a criminal offense, makes it more likely that this bill will be struck down as unconstitutional when the statute is litigated in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, when the Speaker puts the question in a few minutes, an aye vote will send the statute with those two words and all of its other flaws to the President of the United States for his signature or veto.

A "no" vote will not prohibit the chairman of the Judiciary Committee from making a motion to send this bill to conference, which I would strongly support, because I believe that it is our duty as Members of the House of Representatives who took an oath of office to preserve, protect and defend our beloved Constitution, to make as constitutional as possible any bill that we send to the President for the final step before it is enacted into law.

Voting "aye" today means that the chances are greater that the court is going to strike this down as an unconstitutional congressional attempt to restrict free spreech.

A "no" vote will mean that we can go to conference to try to fix this thing up. I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). Pursuant to the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 371, nays 43, not voting 18, as follows:

Mr. ROYBAL and Mr. CONYERS changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. DELAY changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate amendments to the bill, H.R. 2978, just concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I missed the last recorded vote, rollcall No. 286, having been detained in conversation with staff following a committee meeting. Had I been here, I would have voted "aye."

PERMISSION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO HAVE UNTIL 6 P.M. FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1989, TO FILE LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 6 o'clock Friday, October 13, 1989, to file eight legislative reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1495, ARMS CONTROL AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 255 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 255

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1495) to amend the Arms Control and Disarmament Act to authorize appropriations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, with thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and with thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections and each title shall be considered as having been read. All points of order against the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. It shall be in order to consider en bloc as amendments to title II the amendments recommended by the Committee on Armed Services now printed in the bill. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 255 provides for the consideration of H.R. 1495, the Arms Control Authorization Act of 1989. The rule is open and provides for 1 hour of general debate, with 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services.

The rule further provides that the bill is to be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule by titles instead of by sections, and that each title shall be considered as having been read.

The rule waives all points of order against H.R. 1495 for failure to comply with provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI (21). This clause would prohibit the consideration of bills that contain appropriations but were not reported from an Appropriations Committee.

House Resolution 255 also makes it in order to consider en bloc as amendments to title II of the bill the amendments recommended by the Committee on Armed Services now printed in the bill. This title includes provisions concerning funding and responsibility for the onsite inspection agency.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for one motion to recommit H.R. 1495.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1495 would amend the Arms Control and Disarmament Act to authorize appropriations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and the onsite inspection agency. As originally reported, the bill provides $36 million and $50 million in fiscal year 1990 for ACDA and OSIA respectively.

House Resolution 255 is an open rule allowing for the complete consideration of the Arms Control Authorization Act of 1989. In particular, the rule will allow the House to do what it will concerning the onsite inspection agency. I urge my colleagues to support this rule.

□ 1240

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule and the bill it provides for. This is an open rule which will permit the House to consider H.R. 1495, making fiscal year 1990 and 1991 authorizations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill that came before the House under suspension of the rules on September 19. Although a majority of Members, 247 to 170, voted in favor of the bill at that time, it failed to receive the required two-thirds majority required for passage under suspension.

The primary reason why H.R. 1495 did not receive the necessary two-thirds vote last time was due to the administration's opposition. The administration's arguments proved convincing to a majority of Members on my side of the aisle. Accordingly, the Foreign Affairs Committee took the bill back for some further work.

I am pleased to report to the House that the administration's concerns have been satisfied in some law language that has been incorporated into a clean bill, H.R. 3361.

Under the terms of this open rule, the Foreign Affairs Committee will be offering the text of H.R. 3361 as an amendment in the form of a substitute to the original bill. If that amendment passes, as I expect it will, the administration will strongly support passage of this ACDA authorization.

Mr. Speaker, legislation involving the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is always important. This autumn, we have been observing the 50th anniversary of the start of World War II—a war which began after every arms control treaty signed over the previous generation had been systematically violated.

Mr. Speaker, history teaches us that good intentions and treaties are not enough—there has to be appropriate follow-up and verification of compliance. This bill is an important step in the right direction. This bill provides the necessary funding for increased research and analysis concerning the verification of existing treaties; provides the necessary computer resources for the ongoing negotiations at present, as well as for the preparation of arms control scenarios in the future; and, finally, calls for the creation of a compliance bureau at ACDA.

So, we have before us a good bill—a bill which addresses the specific weakness that ACDA itself has identified in the present system. I supported this bill the last time, and I shall support it again today because it strengthens compliance and on-site inspection and so I strongly urge a "yes" vote on this open rule so that this bill can be considered.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I am going to support the rule. It is an open rule. I will have a "buy American" amendment for this particular bill that would cover whatever procurement is necessary.

I appreciate the fact that my amendments have been now accepted in general by most chairmen.

Mr. Speaker, I have pretty much of a pretty bad announcement to make here today, something that maybe America should be looking at very carefully as far as trade and other dynamics. My area lost 55,000 jobs in the last 10 years. This morning it was announced that General Motors will consolidate its van plant manufacturing operations into Flint, MI. That means the Youngstown, OH, area will lose 3,000 decent manufacturing jobs with benefits.

I will tell you what, I am laying it on right here in Congress: We are giving this country away, we are letting people rip us off. Our industries are trying to rob Peter to pay Paul.

It is right here. The day will come when you will see a rice paddy on the East Lawn of the White House and no one is doing a damned thing about it.

This laissez faire has gone too far. I will be damned if my district is going to keep getting the shaft.

I do not like to be pitted against Flint, MI, with its fine Member, DALE KILDEE. They need the jobs too. The bottom line is we have opened up the gates.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAYDOS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, let me stand here and commend my good friend from the adjacent congressional district. What the gentleman says is just bathed in truth. I know the situation, I have a like situation.

I want to commend the gentleman for his persistence and his tenaciousness in following the "buy American" concept.

I, right now, make the statement on behalf of the Steel Caucus and a lot of congressional friends that both the gentleman and I have talked with that we are going to make sure that we are going to bring this to the attention of this group every day from here on out.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2748, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 254 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 254

Resolved, That any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2748) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, for the Intelligence Community Staff, for the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections and each title shall be considered as having been read. All points of order against the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 302(c) and 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended (Public Law 93-344, as amended by Public Law 99-177), and with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. The amendments printed in section 2 of this resolution shall be considered as having been adopted and shall become original text for the purpose of further amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SEC. 2. On page 3, line 8, strike "prepared by the Committee on Conference" and insert in lieu thereof ", as amended on September 27, 1989, by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence".

On page 11, after line 2, insert the following:

"CIA INSPECTOR GENERAL REPORTS

"SEC. 402. Section 17, of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403q) is amended by striking the first period in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof 'and listing the title or subject of each inspection, investigation or audit conducted during the reporting period.', and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

" '(f) Any report of an inspection, investigation, or audit conducted by the Office of Inspector General which has been requested by either committee.' ".

On page 13, line 7, strike "School" and insert in lieu thereof "College"; and on page 13, line 14, strike everything through line 17 and redesignate subsections (c) and (d) accordingly.

On page 18, after line 16, add the following:

"PRESIDENTIAL REPORT ON COORDINATION OF DRUG INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 704. Not later than April 1, 1990, the President shall submit to Congress a report describing how intelligence activities relating to narcotics trafficking can be integrated, including coordinating the collection and analysis of intelligence information, ensuring the dissemination of relevant intelligence information to officials with responsibility for narcotics policy and to agencies to the United States Government responsible for interdiction, eradication, law enforcement, and other counternarcotics activities, and coordinating and controlling all counternarcotics intelligence activities.".

□ 1250

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessese [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. MOAKLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 254 is an open rule providing for the consideration of the bill H.R. 2748, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, to be equally divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Intelligence.

In addition, the rule provides that the bill is to be read for amendment by title, instead of by section, and that each title will be considered as having been read.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 254 waives points of order against two specified sections of the Congressional Budget Act against consideration of the bill. Section 302(c) and section 302(f).

Section 302(f) of the Budget Act prohibits consideration of a committee's legislation providing new budget authority, new spending authority, or new credit authority until that committee has filed its section 302(b) report.

Section 302(f) of the Budget Act prohibits consideration of any measure which, if enacted, would cause a committee to exceed its appropriate allocation of new budget authority made pursuant to section 302(b) of the Budget Act.

Mr. Speaker, section 305 of the bill creates new entitlement authority by adjusting the pension benefits for certain CIA civilian service employee's.

Since the Select Committee on Intelligence has not yet filed its section 302(b) report for fiscal year 1990 and it did not receive allocation of new entitlement authority for fiscal year 1990 the consideration of this bill would violate section 302(c) and section 302(f) of the Budget Act.

The rules also waives points of order against the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule 21, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill. Mr. Speaker, section 401 of the bill authorizes the Central Intelligence Agency to obtain commercial remote sensing data by whatever means they deem appropriate.

Because this section would exempt the CIA from a provision in law that requires all Federal agencies to procure commercial remote sensing data from the defense mapping fund, and allows the CIA to spend previously appropriated funds, a waiver is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the rule further provides that the amendments that are printed in section 2 of this rule shall be considered as having been adopted and shall become original text for the purpose of amendment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2748 authorizes a classified level of funding in fiscal year 1990 for the purpose of intelligence and intelligence related activities. Programs that deal with personnel and funding levels are also classified, the actual amounts for the programs are contained in the classified schedule of authorizations, which has been made available for members since September, 21 in the Intelligence Committee offices.

Mr. Speaker, included in the bill are unclassified provisions dealing with administrative and personnel matters for the intelligence community. For instance section 601 permits all employees of the FBI's New York City field office to receive a cost of living increase of between 20 percent and 25 percent to compensate for the high cost of living in New York City.

Section 704 requires the President to submit a report by April 1, 1990, setting forth his plan to integrate and coordinate intelligence activities on international drug trafficking.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, section 104 of the bill provides that no funds may be obligated to support military or paramilitary operations of the Nicaraguan Contras, the bill also continues the ban on the use of funds from the CIA contingency reserve to aid or support the military or paramilitary activities of the Contras.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which was subject to extensive hearings deals with complicated matters that are vital to our national security. The ability to address these matters in a fair and timely manner requires assistance and cooperation from both sides of the aisle. The chairman, Mr. BEILENSON and the ranking minority member, Mr. HYDE, are to be commended for their efforts in bringing this bill to the floor.

I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 254 and allow the House to proceed to the consideration of this important piece of legislation.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] for yielding time to me. I compliment him for the fine job he does as chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to commend the Chairman and the ranking Republican member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] for their leading role in putting this bill together.

The work of our intelligence agencies is important to this Nation in many ways that most Americans never know. When they do things right, which is most of the time, we hear very little about them. If something goes wrong, then we hear a lot about that. Capable intelligence agencies are important to the welfare of this Nation in a dangerous world.

At the time of the Rules Committee meeting on this bill the administration provided a policy statement stating that they would oppose the bill unless three specified sections are deleted. The open rule reported by the Rules Committee will allow amendments to be offered to remove the problem provisions.

Let me note that at the time of the Rules Committee meeting the ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], notified the Rules Committee that a majority of the Republican members of the Budget Committee did not support the waiver of two sections of the Budget Act. The majority of the Rules Committee, following the recommendation of the majority side of the Budget Committee, however, did include the budget waivers in this rule. The waivers protect new entitlement authority estimated to be less than $1 million in fiscal year 1990.

The details and specific dollar amounts authorized for many programs covered by this bill are included in a classified report on this bill. The classified annex is available to all Members of the House.

I urge adoption of the rule so that the House can get down to the debate on the measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this time yielded to me.

Mr. Speaker, I plan to offer a "Buy American" amendment to the intelligence authorization bill. I was trying to call around and get some more specific information. I was told that all this business is classified, but I can assure the Members that pencils, paper, cars, and other procurement items really should be given some American preference.

I will not take up any more time. I do appreciate this time, and I ask the Members to look carefully and favorably on the "Buy American" amendment. It gives a preference to American firms for those products that are made by Americans in America with some American content.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMS CONTROL AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRICELLI). Pursuant to House Resolution 255 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 1495.

□ 1301

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1495) to amend the Arms Control and Disarmament Act to authorize appropriations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and for other purposes, with Mr. COLEMAN of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill:

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN] will be recognized for 15 minutes; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, as part of the Foreign Affairs Committee's ongoing jurisdiction over U.S. arms control and national security policy, we are bringing before the full House today, H.R. 1495, the authorization of appropriation for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency [ACDA] for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 and for other purposes. This legislation provides the necessary funding for our arms control negotiators and negotiations in Geneva and Vienna and for enhanced arms control verification requirements.

As the members may recall, H.R. 1495 was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs last May. Following sequential referral of H.R. 1495 to the Committee on Armed Services, the House considered the legislation under a suspension of the rules on September 19, 1989. Although receiving a vote of 24 to 170, the legislation did not receive the necessary two-thirds majority to pass under suspension due to administration objections.

On behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I am offering at this time a committee substitute amendment to H.R. 1495. The text of this substitute is identical to H.R. 3361 and has the full support of the administration. In general, the administration sought to change the policy language concerning the On-Site Inspection Agency. The administration now recommends that this substitute be enacted into law. At this time, I would like to place in the RECORD the Office of Management and Budget statement in support of the committee substitute.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

The Administration recommends enactment of H.R. 3361.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Arms Control, International Security and Science held several hearings before marking up the original bill, which was unanimously approved by the committee. The committee heard from then-ACDA Director General William Burns and Brigadier General Roland Lajoie, the Director of the On-Site Inspection Agency.

TITLE I—ACDA

The objective of the Foreign Affairs Committee historically has been to enhance ACDA's ability to carry out its responsibilities under its mandate for formulating and implementing U.S. arms control policy and for implementing and verifying existing and future arms control agreements.

Committee members have worked together in a truly bipartisan fashion to determine how best to meet these objectives. The committee concluded that in order to meet these objectives additional funds would be needed for external research, personnel and computer resources.

Title I of H.R. 1495 authorizes $35,881,000 for FY 1990 and $37,316,000 for FY 1991 for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Title I further states that the Director of ACDA should study and report to the Congress on the advisability of establishing in ACDA an Arms Control Implementation and Compliance Resolution Bureau.

Title I also urges the President to establish a working group to examine verification approaches to a strategic arms reduction agreement and other arms control agreements.

A technical provision is also included in Title I which eliminate the need for duplicitous travel orders by ACDA employees which begins in a fiscal year, but is not completed until the next fiscal year.

TITLE II—OSIA

Title II authorizes the administration's request for $49,830,000 for fiscal year 1990 and $48,831,000 for fiscal year 1991 for the On-Site Inspection Agency (OSIA). It also includes a charter for this verification agency established pursuant to the INF Treaty. This new language has the full support of the administration.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the committee substitute, which enhances and preserves U.S. arms control and national security interests.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support this legislation. I appreciate the comments of my colleague from Florida, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, DANTE FASCELL. I appreciate the constructive and bipartisan spirit with which the gentleman from Florida approached this bill, particularly his support for my efforts to improve ACDA's arms control verification and compliance capabilities.

Given all the recent activity in arms control, this bill is now more important than ever. In many ways it is the heart and soul of our Nation's arms control efforts—it pays the salaries of our negotiators, it provides funds for supporting their efforts in Geneva, Vienna, and it authorizes funding for the invaluable work of the arms control backstoppers who labor in Washington preparing the U.S. position papers for each of these negotiations.

I just returned from an arms control observers trip to Geneva, Vienna, and Brussels led by Majority Leader DICK GEPHARDT. One message came home loud and clear during our discussions with our arms control negotiators—verification was one of the key issues confronting them. The complexity and detail of their negotiations on verification is staggering. Obviously, everyone agrees verification of these agreements will be the key to our arms control future. This bill provides funds for the critical area of arms control.

We now have negotiations on START, CFE, NTT, chemical weapons, and CSBM to name just a few. This legislation pays their bills. I would also like to add that during our trip to Geneva and Vienna we learned that many other countries were not providing adequate support for their arms control negotiating teams. This bill makes certain that U.S. negotiating teams will have everything they need to do their job effectively. President Bush is firmly committed to having our Nation's best people representing America's interests at the negotiating table. This bill supports the President on this critical issue.

The committee has spent a year and a half engaged in extensive committee oversight of ACDA's operations. We have commissioned several GAO reviews of ACDA's operation, as well as an extensive inspector general report on ACDA.

A major finding of the inspector general report was that ACDA's verification capabilities needed to be strengthened. This bill responds directly to that finding. H.R. 1495 increases ACDA's budget in the area of verification research and analysis. In addition Congressman HYDE has included language calling for the establishment of a compliance bureau at ACDA designed to enhance U.S. efforts to effectively resolve future compliance questions. This bill, with its emphasis on verification and compliance, is a responsible effort to prepare our country for the future task of making sure that the Russians live up to their arms control responsibilities.

Finally, in response to earlier administration reservations about the OSIA language in the bill, Chairman FASCELL and I will offer a bipartisan amendment which will resolve these questions. These changes were worked out with the administration, and with their adoption the administration will support the bill.

This is a very good bill which deserves our support. Support our negotiators in Geneva. Support verification of arms control agreements. Vote "yes" on H.R. 1495.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] not only for his cooperation but for his determination in seeing to it that the verification aspects of this legislation were enhanced. We on the majority side all felt that this was a distinct improvement in the legislation and we were delighted to have that input.

I also want to thank the gentleman from Michigan for his help with the administration in getting the administration to work with us on the language concerning the On-Site Inspection Agency, which will be incorporated in the substitute. We thought, as we have so many times around here, that we had that problem solved in the original legislation when we clarified the responsibilities of the ACDA director and the Secretary of Defense in relation to the Onsite Inspection Agency. It turned out that the administration did not want us to legislate that specifically. They wanted more flexibility, and the flexibility, of course, is incorporated in the substitute by providing policy guidance through an interagency committee. So with that interagency coordination and with the flexibility it provides, the administration is entirely satisfied, and we are happy to cooperate in order to get this very important legislation passed by the House.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, this past weekend I had the unique opportunity to participate in an arms control observer delegation trip to Europe.

My colleagues and I were briefed by some of the highest level negotiators for both NATO and the Warsaw Pact—and I was extremely impressed with their professionalism and commitment to the enormous challenges they face every day.

I commend our negotiating team for the work it is doing to bring about meaningful and verifiable arms control agreements—work that is one of the most important elements in the development of future American foreign policy.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1495—the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency authorization bill, as amended in the Foreign Affairs Committee—will help to ensure that we maintain the high level of performance in arms control negotiation that we witnessed this past weekend.

The amended version of the bill is a bipartisan effort with administration support. In addition to providing needed funding, it focuses attention on the crucial points of verification and compliance.

As we all know, without the means to check for compliance, an arms control treaty is without much merit. The bill we consider today takes significant steps toward setting up the means to ensure compliance once treaties have been negotiated and ratified.

As amended, H.R. 1495 includes a study on the possibility for establishing an agency on arms control implementation and compliance resolution bureau, while calling on the President to set up an arms control verification working group.

These are significant steps toward the ultimate goal of readiness. As we underscore President Bush's commitment to arms control, we must not ignore the changing political and social climate in the Soviet Union. The only certainty in the arena of arms control is that things are ever-changing. It is only prudent to be prepared for change.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1495 as amended has several other outstanding features, including additional funding for verification and compliance needs—as well as funding for the on-site inspection agency, which would continue to receive guidance through the interagency mechanism established by the President.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support this bill, as amended, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I also have some strong reservations about the bill and support the remarks by the chairman of the Armed Services Committee. Let me add a few comments regarding the administration's view of this matter. When the INF Treaty was about to go into force, the President gave full consideration to how best to organize for implementation of its on-site inspection provision. He directed that the On-Site Inspection Agency be established and located in the Department of Defense. He further decided that OSIA's Director would be appointed by the Secretary of Defense and that all its administrative and logistics support would be provided by DOD. Also by Presidential directive, all arms control policy guidance for OSIA, formulated in the interagency process, is communicated to OSIA by DOD. These Presidential decisions have not been taken lightly. They have been based primarily on the realization that an On-Site Inspection Agency located in the Department of Defense and relying heavily on ready access to the Department's assets and services would maximize the prospect of efficiency and cost effectiveness. Just to give one example, about 80 percent of OSIA's people are military personnel whose salaries are paid by their services without reimbursement by OSIA.

For the same sound reasons the President made these decisions and because the wisdom of these decisions has been fully borne out by the smooth, efficient, and cost-effective operations of OSIA, the administration has strongly opposed the various attempts by the Foreign Affairs Committee to reverse those decisions. That is why we received letters of opposition to H.R. 1495 from key members of the administration like the Secretary of Defense, the President's National Security Advisor, and the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and why the administration threatened to veto that bill. And that was even before the Foreign Affairs Committee resurrected its attempt to authorize the OSIA budget in the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency bill.

Now we hear from the Foreign Affairs Committee that this same administration fully supports this bill. I, and those of you who have been contacted by administration officials on this question, know that the administration has given its support to one section of the substitute bill—section 62 of title II, which, because of the opposition of this House as well as the administration, no longer subordinates OSIA to the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. The administration continues to oppose, however, any attempt at such subordination, and therefore does not support the authorization of OSIA funds in this bill or the bill's findings that are intended to lay the foundation for such subordination. For these reasons and those explained by the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I am not convinced that this bill should become law in this form.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I have some concerns about both the substance and the process surrounding this bill. First, let me address the procedural considerations. H.R. 1495 was reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee in May and sequentially referred to the Armed Services Committee. Title I of the bill was and remains noncontroversial—it merely authorizes funds for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and deals with other matters internal to that Agency. Title II, however, causes major difficulties. It deals entirely with an agency of the Department of Defense—the On-Site Inspection Agency. For reasons I will expand on later, the Armed Services Committee reported the bill with an amendment to delete all of title II. The chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee then asked if I could support the bill if the authorization of OSIA funds was deleted and I agreed to vote for the bill with that condition. The OSIA authorization was deleted; the bill was considered last month under suspension of the rules; I voted for it as agreed, but it did not pass. Now the Foreign Affairs Committee has resurrected the bill by offering a closely related substitute that reinserts the OSIA budget authorization. Furthermore, the OSIA budget has already been authorized by the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate without controversy as part of DOD authorizations, just as was the case last year.

Now for the substance of the bill. OSIA was established last year, as an agency of the Department of Defense, to implement the on-site inspection provisions of the INF Treaty. The Director of OSIA is a brigadier general appointed by the Secretary of Defense and about 80 percent of its personnel are in the uniformed military services. All of the Agency's administrative and logistic support, transportation, and communications are provided by DOD, and its policy direction, formulated in the interagency process, is communicated to OSIA by DOD. As evidenced by the administration's recent report to the Congress on OSIA, and as agreed even by the Foreign Affairs Committee, OSIA has operated very successfully during its first year and a half of existence. The President's decision to locate OSIA within DOD, with ready access to DOD assets and services, has been clearly borne out in extremely efficient and cost-effective operations that have saved the taxpayer tens of millions of dollars over what would have to be expended were OSIA located elsewhere.

All this being true, the agenda of the Foreign Affairs Committee remains clear in this matter. It was clear last year when an amendment was offered during our floor consideration of Defense authorizations to move OSIA from DOD to the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. It is clear in H.R. 1495, which contains the erroneous finding that the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency formulates and implements all U.S. arms control policy. This is once again part of the attempt to subordinate OSIA to that agency. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a step in the wrong direction with respect to OSIA, and while certain aspects of the bill have been improved, it continues to represent a policy I cannot support regarding OSIA.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule by titles, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Arms Control Authorization Act of 1989".

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FASCELL

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FASCELL: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

That Act may be cited as the "Arms Control Authorization Act of 1989".

TITLE I—ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT AGENCY

SEC. 101. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Subparagraph (A) of section 49(a)(1) of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2589(a)(1)(A) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) $35,881,000 for fiscal year 1990 and $37,316,000 for fiscal year 1991; and".

SEC. 102. ARMS CONTROL IMPLEMENTATION AND COMPLIANCE BUREAU.

The Director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency should study, and report to the Congress on, the advisability of establishing in the Agency an Arms Control Implementation and Compliance Resolution Bureau which would be responsible for—

(1) managing the implementation of existing and future arms control agreements;

(2) coordinating the activities of the Special Verification Commission and the Standing Consultative Commission; and

(3) preparing comprehensive analyses and policy positions regarding the effective resolution of arms control compliance questions.

SEC. 103. ARMS CONTROL VERIFICATION WORKING GROUP.

The President should establish a working group—

(1) to examine verification approaches to a strategic arms reduction agreement and other arms control agreements; and

(2) to assess the relevance for such agreements of the verification provisions of the Treaty between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles (signed at Washington, December 8, 1987).

SEC. 104. EXPENSES OF TRAVEL CONTINUING BEYOND THE END OF THE FISCAL YEAR.

Section 48 of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2588) is amended by inserting after "personal effects" the following: "(including any such travel or transportation any part of which begins in one fiscal year pursuant to travel orders issued in that fiscal year, but which is completed after the end of that fiscal year)".

TITLE II—ON-SITE INSPECTION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 201. ON-SITE INSPECTION AGENCY.

The Arms Control and Disarmament Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

TITLE V—ON-SITE INSPECTION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 61. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) under this Act, the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is charged with the 'formulation and implementation of United States arms control and disarmament policy in a manner which will promote the national security';

"(2) as defined in this Act, the terms 'arms control' and 'disarmament' mean 'the identification, verification, inspection, limitation, control, reduction, or elimination, of armed forces and armaments of all kinds under international agreement to establish an effective system of international control';

"(3) the On-Site Inspection Agency was established in 1988 pursuant to the INF Treaty to implement, on behalf of the United States, the inspection provisions of the INF Treaty;

"(4) on-site inspection activities under the INF Treaty include—

"(A) inspections in the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, and the German Democratic Republic,

"(B) escort duties for Soviet teams visiting the United States and the Basing Countries,

"(C) establishment and operation of the Portal Monitoring Facility in the Soviet Union, and

"(D) support for the Soviet inspectors at the Portal Monitoring Facility in Utah;

"(5) the personnel of the On-Site Inspection Agency include civilian technical experts, civilian support personnel, and members of the Armed Forces; and

"(6) the senior officials of the On-Site Inspection Agency include representatives from the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and the Department of State.

"SEC. 62. POLICY COORDINATION CONCERNING IMPLEMENTATION OF ON-SITE INSPECTION PROVISIONS.

"(a) INTERAGENCY COORDINATION.—OSIA should receive policy guidance which is formulated through an interagency mechanism established by the President.

"(b) ROLE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—The Secretary of Defense should provide to OSIA appropriate policy guidance formulated through the interagency mechanism described in subsection (a) and operational direction, consistent with section 113(b) of title 10, United States Code.

"(c) ROLE OF THE DIRECTOR.—The Director should provide to the interagency mechanism described in subsection (a) appropriate recommendations for policy guidance to OSIA consistent with sections 2(d), 22, and 34(c) of this Act.

"SEC. 63. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR ON-SITE INSPECTION AGENCY.

"There are authorized to be appropriated $49,830,000 for fiscal year 1990 and $48,831,000 for fiscal year 1991 for the expenses of the On-Site Inspection Agency in carrying out on-site inspection activities pursuant to the INF Treaty.

"SEC. 64. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this title—

"(1) the term 'INF Treaty' means the Treaty between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles (signed at Washington, December 8, 1987); and

"(2) The term 'OSIA' means the On-Site Inspection Agency established by the President, or such other agency as may be designated by the President to carry out the on-site inspection provisions of the INF Treaty.".

Mr. FASCELL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this substitute on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The text of this substitute is identical to H.R. 3361, and it has the full support of the administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FASCELL. I just finished, Mr. Chairman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute amendment is very simple. It is the text of H.R. 3361 which the chairman and I introduced on September 28. It is exactly the same language as that included in H.R. 1495 with only one exception. The OSIA charter language in section 62 has been rewritten to meet earlier administration concerns. The administration supports this new language and the President's senior advisers will recommend enactment of this language.

I would like to thank my friend and colleague, Chairman FASCELL, for working with the administration on this issue. As usual this has resulted in solid legislation which our committee can be proud of.

I would hope all my colleagues would support our substitute amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT TO THE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. FASCELL

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. FASCELL: At the end of the amendment, insert the following:

TITLE III—BUY-AMERICAN REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 301. BUY-AMERICAN REQUIREMENT FOR ACDA.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE ADMINISTRATOR.—If the Director, with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce, determines that the public interest so requires, the Director is authorized to award to a domestic firm a contract that, under the use of competitive procedures, would be awarded to a foreign firm, if—

(1) the final product of the domestic firm will be completely assembled in the United States;

(2) when completely assembled, not less than 50 percent of the final product of the domestic firm will be domestically produced; and

(3) the difference between the bids submitted by the foreign and domestic firms is not more than 6 percent.

In determining under this subsection whether the public interest so requires, the Director shall take into account United States international obligations and trade relations.

(b) LIMITED APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply to the extent to which—

(1) such applicability would not be in the public interest;

(2) compelling national security considerations require otherwise; or

(3) the United States Trade Representative determines that such an award would be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(c) LIMITATION.—This section shall apply only to contracts for which—

(1) amounts are authorized by title I of this Act to be made available; and

(2) solicitations for bids are issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Director shall report to the Congress on contracts covered under this section and entered into with foreign entities in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 and shall report to the Congress on the number of contracts that meet the requirements of subsection (a) but which are determined by the United States Trade Representative to be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party. The Director shall also report to the Congress on the number of contracts covered under the amendments made by title I of this Act and awarded based upon the parameters of this section.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) DIRECTOR.—The term "Director" means the Director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

(2) DOMESTIC FIRM.—The term "domestic firm" means a business entity that is incorporated in the United States and that conducts business operations in the United States.

(3) FOREIGN FIRM.—The term "foreign firm" means a business entity not described in paragraph (2).

SEC. 302. BUY-AMERICAN REQUIREMENT FOR OSIA.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE ADMINISTRATOR.—If the Secretary, with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce, determines that the public interest so requires, the Secretary is authorized to award to a domestic firm a contract for procurement for the On-Site Inspection Agency that, under the use of competitive procedures, would be awarded to a foreign firm, if—

(1) the final product of the domestic firm will be completely assembled in the United States;

(2) when completely assembled, not less than 50 percent of the final product of the domestic firm will be domestically produced; and

(3) the difference between the bids submitted by the foreign and domestic firms is not more than 6 percent.

In determining under this subsection whether the public interest so requires, the Secretary shall take into account United States international obligations and trade relations.

(b) LIMITED APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply to the extent to which—

(1) such applicability would not be in the public interest;

(2) compelling national security considerations require otherwise; or

(3) the United States Trade Representative determines that such an award would be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(c) LIMITATION.—This section shall apply only to contracts for which—

(1) amounts are authorized by title II of this Act to be made available; and

(2) solicitations for bids are issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall report to the Congress on contracts covered under this section and entered into with foreign entities in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 and shall report to the Congress on the number of contracts that meet the requirements of subsection (a) but which are determined by the United States Trade Representative to be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party. The Secretary shall also report to the Congress on the number of contracts covered under the amendments made by title II of this Act and awarded based upon the parameters of this section.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Defense.

(2) DOMESTIC FIRM.—The term "domestic firm" means a business entity that is incorporated in the United States and that conducts business operations in the United States.

(3) FOREIGN FIRM.—The term "foreign firm" means a business entity not described in paragraph (2).

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, this is the buy-American amendment that has been added to much authorization language here. It provides a preference for American goods, if it is made in America with some of the contents being American.

Mr. Chairman, the language is solid. It gives an opportunity for national security concerns for this provision to be waived, and I would hope that the Committee would find favor.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to this amendment. We think it is an improvement. We are happy to accept it on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

The amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL]?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point about arms control, specifically about the control of chemical weapons.

The President is to be commended for taking a strong stand on chemical weapons, both in the joint session of Congress when he addressed us and in numerous points along his way, and indeed in his full career. President Bush has spoken out forcefully in favor of preventing an arms race in chemical weapons and in favor of total elimination of chemical weapons.

All of us, I think, were deeply shocked by what happened in the Iran-Iraq war where chemical weapons were clearly used, something we thought we would not see again in this century, and yet it was there.

In 1984 as Vice President, George Bush proposed a draft treaty to the Geneva talks which would totally ban the production of chemical weapons, and he is to be commended on that, as I said.

Mr. Chairman, a key feature of that text the President called for was the immediate cessation of all activity at each chemical weapon production facility in the United States and in the world, recognizing that if we are going to get other countries to stop their production, we have to be bound by the same discipline. He called for immediate cessation of all parties signatured to such an agreement knowing that if we are going to prevent chemical weapon proliferation, it has to be mutual. And in the knowledge that to forego multilateral discipline would open the door for speedup of certain developing countries that want to get in under the wire and begin to produce chemical weapons.

When President Bush spoke to Congress and the Nation in the joint session he repeated the point about immediate cessation of chemical weapon production.

Finally, the President presumably has agreed with the official U.S. position of support for the rolling text of the draft treaty being negotiated in Geneva. I am an observer to the arms control talks in Geneva, and can assure his colleagues that the working treaty text, which the United States is supporting calls for immediate cessation of production. Let me quote that text:

Each state party shall cease immediately all activity of each chemical weapons production facility except required for closure.

Now, Mr. Chairman and Members, I want to say that I am somewhat puzzled and in fact dismayed to find out—to find out in fact, when our House arms talks observer group was in Geneva under the direction of the majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] and the distinguished ranking member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] that the administration is now saying that the new U.S. policy is to continue production even after the treaty takes effect.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is a very serious reversal in George Bush's historic position. It is a very serious reversal in our national position. Clearly, it opens the door to other countries that want to get in under the wire and commence production. It also means considerable problem in verifying whatever treaty is concluded because zero production is always much easier to verify than some limited number. It will also be destabilizing because of these two effects.

The United States has always stressed the need for tight verification of a chemical weapons ban. And we have always stressed the need for mutual multilateral discipline. Both of these positions have been sound, and have fostered stabilizing chemical weapons regimens.

Are we going to continue with the traditional American position and with George Bush's own Presidential and historic position, or are we now going to adopt this position now being enunciated. To say that the United States is going to continue production even after the treaty has been signed and brought into effect would seriously erode our leadership role on chemical arms control and reverse the current moves to safety and stability.

I would hope the administration, which I understand is actively reviewing this, would not take this new course. All of us realize that if we are going to stop proliferation of chemical weapons, we have to have a mutually verifiable commitment which binds all parties, including ourselves.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, the last speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY], has raised a very troubling issue related to chemical weapons and what seems to be a new administration position to continue binary production after signing a treaty. This is a policy change which we will have to pursue very carefully.

I personally have felt that the President has been extremely forthcoming on the issue of chemical weapons control and has been working on a bilateral and multilateral basis to ban the use and the production, of chemical weapons and to stop the proliferation of chemical weaponry.

Mr. Chairman, chemical weapons risk becoming the poor man's bomb. It takes the leadership of both the United States and the Soviet Union, the two superpowers, if we are going to try to bring about some kind of common sense on the issue of chemical weaponry.

The Congress has debated the issue of development and production of new chemical weapons for the last 8 years. While the issue of new production has been debated, Congress and the administration agree to proceed in good faith with discussions both with the Soviet Union and with all other countries who are part of the Committee on Disarmament in trying to eliminate chemical weapons and the production of them.

□ 1320

Now, the thing that is disturbing is the conflicting statements that are coming out from the administration concerning continued chemical weapons production and a treaty. We are happy to have entered into negotiations with the Soviets with regard to eliminating these weapons and working on the multilateral side. But, on the other hand, saying that we are going to continue the research, development, production, and deployment of binary weapons means that we create a whole new chemical system. If the change in policy is true, it means that the President has done a complete about-face. I hope that is not true, and I hope it is not too late for us in the Congress to have some discussion with the administration and the executive branch about what appears to be a major change in policy.

The policy of continuing binary production after signing a treaty would, in fact, violate the draft treaty then Vice President Bush presented in Geneva in 1984. The 1984 draft treaty reads: "Each party shall . . . cease immediately all activity at each of its chemical weapons facilities." That is article 6 of the 1984 draft treaty.

In addition, such a policy would also violate the current rolling text treaty in Geneva which reads: "Each state party with any chemical weapons production facility shall cease immediately all activity at each chemical weapons production facility except that required for closure." That is article 5 in the rolling text.

My deep fear is that in pursuing this contradictory policy the administration is unwittingly legitimizing the very thing President Bush and the Congress want to halt—chemical weapons proliferation.

It is most important for the President to review and change this policy before it has an adverse impact on the chemical weapons negotiations and on the proliferation of chemical weapons.

I think that is what the gentleman from Wisconsin was talking about. I agree with him. It is something that our Subcommittee on Arms Control and the Committee on Foreign Affairs and I am sure others will be vitally interested in. I thank the gentleman for raising that issue.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to strongly support H.R. 3361. It is important that this body support the arms control process in the strongest of all possible terms. The hostility and mistrust which has characterized United States-Soviet relations for the past 45 years is giving way to a climate of cautious cooperation. Continued improvement will require that we devote all possible efforts to achieving steady progress in mutual, and verifiable, arms control.

H.R. 3361 not only provides for the necessary funding for our negotiators in Geneva and Vienna, but it also authorizes an additional $2 million to further research in the all important area of verification. Public confidence in future United States-Soviet arms control accords will be enhanced by this legislation's earmarking of funds to support research into developing reliable methods of verification.

Of additional note is the authorization of appropriations for the On-Site Inspection Agency for fiscal years 1990 and 1991. With the entering into force of the INF Treaty on June 1, 1988, this country embarked upon a significant political development in our arms control efforts—on site verification. This process of mutual, intrusive, verification has proven to be one of the most successful examples of security cooperation between our country and the Soviet Union to date. It reaffirms that arms reduction agreements have become a legitimate component of this country's national security policy. H.R. 3361 properly reaffirms the mandate of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in formulating and implementing our arms control and verification efforts, while maintaining the current operational configuration of the On-Site Inspection Agency.

As this country enters into the more challenging arena of conventional arms control, political as well as technical issues will be of ever greater importance. H.R. 3361 seeks to address the need for more effective interagency coordination by calling upon ACDA to study the advisability of establishing an Arms Control Implementation and Compliance Resolution Bureau. It is important that this body reaffirm the role of ACDA as this country's central continuing body for arms control policy formulation and implementation.

I call upon all my fellow Members to join me in support of H.R. 3361, without amendment. This bill has the full bipartisan support of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and has received the endorsement of the executive branch. It represents our continued commitment to a process vital to the security and welfare of all Americans.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as a senior member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and a congressional observer to the Geneva arms control talks, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the chairman and vice chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Messrs. FASCELL and BROOMFIELD. This amendment in essence replaces H.R. 1495, the ACDA/OSIA authorization bill with the text of H.R. 3361, a more balanced and reasonable ACDA/OSIA authorization.

As you know, the President's advisers strongly recommend a veto of H.R. 1495 because of title II of the bill which statutorily changes the structure and policymaking mechanisms for OSIA. This Fascell-Broomfield amendment revises title II so that the present management structure of OSIA continues to be maintained according to administration guidelines. I believe that would enhance, not degrade, OSIA's management and effectiveness.

This authorization provides the necessary funding for arms control negotiations and negotiators in Geneva and Vienna as well as for enhanced arms control verification requirements. Having just returned from Geneva, Vienna, and Brussels where I observed, first hand, our delicate arms control negotiations, I can verify that strong effective support for our negotiating teams is a must. They are doing a very good job. It is absolutely necessary for us to provide them with the resources and wherewithal to continue their very positive work.

With two exceptions, this substitute amendment is identical to H.R. 1495 which this House passed under suspension by a vote of 247 to 170 on September 19—just 3 weeks ago.

At that time and continuing into today, the administration has expressed concerns about the way the bill is written, especially the policy language pertaining to the role of the director of ACDA and the Secretary of Defense. This amendment modifies the language to reflect the administration's concerns. The administration supports this amendment.

H.R. 1495 itself and this substitute amendment both authorize $2 million more than the administration originally requested. Clearly the recent progress we have made on real, serious arms control warrants this additional funding for verification research, personnel and computer resources. It makes no sense to cut back at this key time when positive developments continue to unfold.

We should recognize the real progress made by the Bush administration toward equitable and fair arms control agreements. President Bush's recent chemical weapons ban proposal shows that we are bold, yet prudent. Our serious posture has, I strongly believe, led the Soviets to remove two obstacles to progress on strategic weapons reductions—their linking of the SDI with the "START" agreement and the existence of their illegal Krasnoyarsk radar in violation of the ABM Treaty. These concessions did not come through unilateral congressional give-aways, but through standing strong and negotiating seriously. The INF Treaty, of course, also proves that. My recent visit further solidifies my beliefs.

In addition, the amendment recommends the serious consideration of establishing an Arms Control Implementation and Compliance Resolution Bureau. Really, our only successful arms control accords are those that can be satisfactorily verified and are continuously complied with. I believe this bureau would enhance our capabilities in these fields making future arms control and reduction agreements more possible and feasible.

The Broomfield/Fascell also maintains the structure and inter-agency coordination system of the On-Site Inspection Agency [OSIA] as originally established by the President. While the Department of Defense is a key player in arms control, it has other critical partners, like the CIA, State Department, and ACDA. The OSIA is not performing a purely military function, but an arms control function directly related to the INF Treaty—an arms control agreement. This legislation reflects that special status. I do not support the total elimination of OSIA language, as the Aspin amendment seeks to do, because of this situation. Title II of H.R. 1495 is flawed. This Fascell-Broomfield amendment corrects those flaws and addresses the relationship between OSIA and ACDA. The Aspin amendment does not adequately focus on the latter issue.

I support the Fascell-Broomfield amendment and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to second what the gentleman said. The gentleman from California was, of course, an important member of the team, along with the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] and a number of other Members, all of whom I think would agree with every statement that the gentleman has just made that we have an extraordinarily capable team representing us in Geneva. We have an extraordinarily capable team representing us in Vienna, as well as, of course, our people at Brussels at the NATO headquarters.

I was enormously impressed, I think we all were, with Ambassador Byrd's presentations as well as the gentleman handling the Space bill, Bill Courtney, who also has done an excellent job.

In the testing area, I think we were all enormously impressed by Paul Robinson, who gave us a full explanation of testing issues and that will be coming before the Congress at some point as those two treaties may be ratified.

In the conventional area in Vienna, we met with Steve Ledegar, who is our Ambassador to the CFE reduction talks, and he was enormously impressive, and John Maresca, who was handling the confidence building talks in more of a Helsinki nature rather than bilateral, therefore they are multilateral, and those are under the Helsinki process, and therefore also important in a different way. He was very informative for all of us.

Finally at NATO headquarters we met with Ambassador Taft and his team, who did an excellent job in briefing us.

We also met, of course, with Maynard Glitman, our Ambassador in Brussels.

So I think all of us, regardless of party, regardless of philosophy, came away with a tremendous sense of confidence that we have an excellent team representing us over there.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I would just like to add, Mr. Chairman, that I am confident, as I said, that we will reach an agreement, but more important than that, a good agreement, one that is verifiable and one that will preserve and enhance our security and that of our allies.

I think the one thing that is very important for us to do as a Congress, especially if we can speak with one voice, is to reassure and guarantee to our allies in NATO that we are in strong support of NATO, and even if we reach agreement on these very important treaties that are pending, that we are not going to turn our back and walk away from NATO.

The easy way to put it, I guess, is that you do not quit when you are ahead. Our policy has worked. We have won, if you will, and let us stay with it.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we are entering an important new era in arms control, one which builds on the experiences of the past, and expands the scope of arms control agreements to include on-site inspection of weapons production facilities and missile destruction.

Negotiations with the Soviets are proceeding in the areas of nuclear and conventional arms control. These agreements are expected to be broad in scope, and we can expect that they will include the full spectrum of verification methods. A combination of national technical means—satellites—and on-site inspection can provide the most comprehensive data on compliance with future arms control treaties. The more ways we have to observe compliance, the more certain we can be that a treaty's provisions are being observed.

Future arms control agreements are likely to grow in complexity, requiring complementary verification procedures to assess a broad range of data. We can gain a better understanding of compliance data generated by future treaties if we have a big picture of all aspects of arms control and verification. The importance of arms control verification is underscored by this bill's $2 million increase for verification research, additional personnel, and enhanced computer support.

The substitute bill, H.R. 3361, also makes an important contribution to the process of arms control oversight. The bill seeks to coordinate the roles of the Federal commissions and agencies involved in arms control: The Special Verification Commission, Standing Consultative Commission, Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and the On-Site Inspection Agency.

It is also important for Congress to coordinate its oversight of the arms control process. The Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Arms Control, International Security and Science has done a thorough and excellent job of monitoring the development and implementation of arms control policy and its accompanying verification provisions. This subcommittee possesses a valuable institutional memory from which Congress can benefit in its authorizing process. I think it is important to preserve a comprehensive approach to arms control verification, and to include review of on-site inspection provisions in the work of this subcommittee.

I urge my colleagues to support the substitute H.R. 3361 and to oppose any amendments.

□ 1330

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, this Member rises in strong support of the Fascell-Broomfield substitute, H.R. 1495. It is an excellent substitute, one that addresses major concerns regarding treaty ratification and compliance.

Mr. Chairman, this Member strongly supports the Fascell/Broomfield substitute to H.R. 1495. It is an excellent substitute, one that addresses major concerns regarding treaty verification and compliance.

The importance of the added verification provisions cannot be overstated. The arms control agreements that are now negotiated—on START, on conventional forces in Europe, and on chemical weapons—are extremely complicated and technical agreements. They can serve the U.S. national interest, but only if we can be sure that all parties comply follow the spirit and the letter of the agreements.

If the Soviet Union does, if fact, violates its arms control commitments, we need to know about it as soon as possible. The Fascell/Broomfield substitute includes added funds to help ensure that verification techniques are adequate. The $2 million in added funds will permit additional personnel, computer resources, and external research to be devoted to arms control verification.

In addition, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has worked to include language advocating the creation of a compliance bureau at ACDA. This is an important provision, and he is to be commended. It provides for a much stronger and coherent approach to arms control. It ensures that treaty compliance is addressed at senior levels in the U.S. Government—something that has not been the case heretofore.

Mr. Chairman, because the Fascell/Broomfield substitute provides added attention to verification and compliance, it deserves this body's support.

This Member would also note that the Foreign Affairs Committee, on a bipartisan basis, has worked closely with the administration to craft this substitute. It has the support of the administration. Let me repeat that, because that has been some confusion on this matter—Fascell/Broomfield substitute has the support of the administration.

This Member would urge support of the Fascell/Broomfield substitute to the ACDA authorization resolution.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my strong support for H.R. 1495, a bill authorizing appropriations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency for fiscal years 1990, and 1991 and I commend our distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], and the gentleman from Michigan, our ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BROOMFIELD, for bringing this measure to the floor at this time.

This bill reflects over a year and a half of Foreign Affairs Committee oversight over the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. The bill is our response to three surveys requested by the Committee on Foreign Affairs by the GAO, as well as one committee mandated inspector general report. And provides the necessary funding for arms control negotiations, for enhanced arms control verification, and for our negotiators in Geneva, Vienna, and Stockholm.

In this age of rapid change and developments in the field of arms control, as well as the necessity for the United States to respond to new Soviet initiatives, this bill sends the right message to the Soviets and demonstrates, unequivocally, that the Congress is profoundly committed to the critical function of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

This is a measure that our colleagues on both sides of the aisle can fully support. As well as the administration. Moreover, this legislation is critically important because it clearly assets the right of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to share joint jurisdiction over arms control issues, especially on-site inspection programs, to verify compliance with the INF Treaty.

Accordingly, I urge all of our colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend my good friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], for having once again persevered to bring this to the floor, even though it came previously and got a majority of the votes on suspension but did not receive enough. I hope the membership will today, in the regular order of business, vote to approve this bill.

It is extremely important for us to have an Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, a place where hopefully significant, legitimate, well-thought-out, rational, and reasoned policy will be employed as to how best to accomplish the goals that most of us in this Chamber and most of the American people really believe in. Arms control is an issue whose time has come, but it is not an issue which has not been important for the previous many years.

There are many of us in this Chamber and in this country who have been working very hard and diligently over the years to bring about some rational common sense in our policy of engaging the Soviets and others in arms control and hoping to bring a policy of reduction in weapons, both nuclear and nonnuclear. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, although from time to time taking positions or effecting policy in a way that this Congress has not approved, overall has been a very helpful part of the possible limitation on the profusion of weapons. When it is not used as a political tool, but when it is used as it was originally intended by the Congress, we believe it turns out to be a very effective tool in being able to make rational and capable judgments on how best to effectuate arms control and the overall disarming of many of the weapons of war around the world.

Mr. Chairman, we are going through a significant stage now where things which none of us ever dreamed could take place are taking place, not only taking place but going faster than we ever imagined, and in many instances we are having to run to catch up to events which are moving faster than we are.

Some of our Members just came back from being in Brussels and Geneva and report on the movement. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], the ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, himself is so impressed by the vigor and the dedication which both sides in Geneva and the other people involved are taking on arms control.

I can tell the Members that in just 3 short years the difference between the negotiators for the Soviet Union on arms control issues and on human rights issues and on other issues has changed so dramatically that one would think they were dealing with a totally different country, not even the same country. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency has been a place where policy on these issues could be effected, and we need to have a place like this in our Government for the purpose of carrying out rapid decisions which have to be made in this rapidly changing world.

I would hope that the Members will vote for this. I believe that it is the appropriate thing to do. We have worked very hard on this issue on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I hope that the Members will do the right thing in this instance and vote a majority to pass this bill and hopefully get it to the President so he can sign it and have a place where he can have policy made into reality and hopefully get a safer world.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in reference to some of our colleagues and their comments on chemical weapons, I thought I had better take this time to make at least a couple of clarifying points.

First of all, I appreciate, as I think all other Americans do, the efforts of our President in his remarks before the United Nations and seeking a treaty to rid the world of this menace. The fact of the matter is that the Soviets did not even admit to having much less producing chemical weapons until we started with our binary structuring of chemical weapons. That is a fact. We now have a problem here, and this treaty is sometime off, in my view, from being signed.

Here is one of the basic problems: I have just returned from the Soviet Union a few days ago along with a number of my colleagues, myself and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP], who were permitted to see the chemical demil operation by the Soviets in Chapayevsk. We were, in fact, the first Americans, as a matter of fact the first two people from the Western world, to be permitted in there. The Soviets have made a commitment of $152 million in that facility, but the fact of the matter is, after we left there and pointed out some of the flaws that they have as far as technology is concerned, that we were shocked to learn, Mr. Chairman, that they have now announced that they are not going to open that facility to demil chemical weapons.

What does that mean? It simply means that the Soviets right now are at least 3 years away from even having a chemical weapons plant to demil their admitted 50,000 tons of chemical weapons.

It seems to me that one of the things that our administration should be doing, and I proposed this to them, is to recapture the initiative on this issue by offering to the Soviets and their scientists to share our technology with them that we have at Johnson Island. I think this would be a very, very good step forward.

I hope that members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs might consider helping me with that effort in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

If not, the question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts) having assumed the chair, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1495) to amend the Arms Control and Disarmament Act to authorize appropriations for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 255, he reported the bill back to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 400, nays 11, not voting 21, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Murphy for, with Mr. Quillen against.

Messrs. KYL, BATEMAN, ASPIN, and KOLBE changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1989, TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2883, RURAL DEVELOPMENT, AGRICULTURE, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tomorrow, October 13, 1989, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 2883) making appropriations for Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 254 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2748.

□ 1407

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2748) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, with Mr. MOODY in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2748, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990. The principal purpose of this bill is to authorize appropriations for all of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government during fiscal year 1990. As in the past, the actual amounts authorized are contained in a classified schedule of authorization, which is incorporated by reference into H.R. 2748, and which is available to all members in the Committee offices, along with a classified annex to the Committee's report.

The administration requested a small percentage of real growth for fiscal year 1990 over the amount Congress appropriated for intelligence in fiscal year 1989. The Committee recommends a slightly lower level of funding than that requested by the President. Some proposals have been recommended for deferral or deletion, while a few have been increased. The Committee believes that the recommended authorization is a reasonable balance between needed capabilities and prudent cost.

Members should understand that the Intelligence budget is largely a subset of the Defense budget. Almost all of the Intelligence budget is contained within the Defense budget, both for reasons of security, and because the majority of intelligence activities are conducted by elements of the Department of Defense. Thus, increases and decreases for Intelligence are largely changes within the Defense budget, and are not direct changes to the Federal budget as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, as it does every year, the Committee has worked very closely with the Committee on Armed Services to produce recommendations for the authorization of appropriations for intelligence-related activities over which the two committees share jurisdiction. The amounts authorized for intelligence-related activities by H.R. 2748 are, therefore, fully consistent with those authorized by H.R. 2461, the fiscal year 1990 Defense authorization bill, which passed the House on July 27. Both committees agreed on these amounts, I want to say that I, and other members of Intelligence Committee, appreciate the advice and cooperation of the members and staff of the Committee on Armed Services in this effort.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the authorization of appropriations, H.R. 2748, contains a number of legislative provisions.

Of greatest interest to the Members, perhaps, will be provisions relating to Nicaragua.

Section 104 is a provision similar to that enacted in the fiscal year 1987, 1988, and 1989 Intelligence Authorization Acts. It provides that any assistance to the military or paramilitary activities of the Contras by any department or agency of the United States must be explicitly authorized by law for that purpose. No such assistance has been authorized by H.R. 2748.

Of more topical importance is H.R. 2748's restriction on funding connected with the Nicaraguan election to be held in February.

As you know, the administration has said that it will not seek covert aid for the opposition in the Nicaraguan election. H.R. 2748 authorizes no funds whatsoever for covert support to opposition parties or candidates in that election. Furthermore, the classified schedule of authorizations prohibits use of the CIA's reserve for contingencies, for such purpose. The only mechanism left to the administration, should it change its mind, is a reprogramming—that is, an official administration request to take funds appropriated for another purpose and reprogram them for this purpose. However, such a reprogramming would require the approval of four separate congressional committees—the House and Senate Intelligence Committees and the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

Mr. Chairman, there are several other legislative provisions in H.R. 2748.

Title III contains provisions which make conforming and corrective changes in legislation affording retirement, survivor and death-in-service benefits to former spouses of CIA employees and which establish special retirement annuity computation and portability rules regarding overseas service for certain CIA employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System.

Title IV contains provisions relating to the CIA, including section 401, which exempts the CIA from a provision of law requiring that all Federal agencies procure commercial remote sensing data from the Defense Mapping Agency.

Section 402, which requires the CIA to provide the House and Senate Intelligence Committees with a list of each audit, inspection, or investigation conducted by the CIA inspector general, and to provide the committees with a copy of any report of such audit, inspection, or investigation which the committees request.

Title V contains several provisions relating to intelligence components of the Department of Defense, among others.

Section 501, which authorizes the Secretary of Defense to provide foreign language proficiency pay to civilian employees of the Department of Defense who are proficient in a foreign language the Secretary determines is important for the effective collection, production, and dissemination of foreign intelligence and who are serving in an intelligence or intelligence-related position.

Section 502, which authorizes the Secretary of Defense to accept, use and maintain gifts made to further the educational activities of the Defense Intelligence College.

Section 601 makes change to the OPM/FBI demonstration project applicable to the New York FBI office, authorized in the fiscal year 1989 Intelligence Authorization Act, in order to permit the project's cost of living allowance to be provided to all support employees in the FBI's New York office.

Section 703 directs the President to issue financial reporting and disclosure regulations applicable to the members of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board.

Officially, section 704 requires the President to submit a report to Congress by April 1, 1990, setting forth a plan to integrate counternarcotics intelligence activities.

All of these legislative provisions were approved by the Committee without objection from either side of the aisle.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2748 enjoys strong bipartisan support within the Committee. It is the product of an excellent working relationship among Members and staff who have carefully assessed the needs of intelligence and bring before the House recommendations that, we believe, are consistent with both our national security needs and with the state of the Nation's finances.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], the ranking Republican member of the Committee, for his wise counsel, his help, and his very collegial and cooperative approach to the Committee's business has been enormously helpful.

I also would like to pay tribute to the hard work, dedication, and professionalism of all of the Committee's staff members, and particularly note the contributions of three staff members who have served the committee exceptionally well since its inception in July 1977 and who now go on to other endeavors: Marty Faga, who is now Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Space; Duane Andrews, who has been nominated for the post of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence; and Michael O'Neil, who now serves as an assistant to the Speaker of the House. Each has made a major contribution to the successful conducting of this Nation's intelligence activities.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to support H.R. 2748. It provides what is needed of America's intelligence agencies, and it strengthens the ability of the House, through its Intelligence Committee, to exercise meaningful oversight of intelligence activities.

□ 1410

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support this bill. My good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee, has ably summarized the provisions of this legislation. I wish to assure the House that your intelligence committee has comprehensively reviewed the administration's authorization request for the various U.S. intelligence programs, and under the auspices of our program and Budget Authorization Subcommittee, members of the Intelligence Committee heard, during a series of 11 hearings, more than 30 hours of testimony on the programs covered by this authorization bill. After thorough consideration of these programs and further discussions between members of the committee and administration officials on some matters, I believe we have been able to bring a bill to the floor which is basically acceptable to all or nearly all of our committee. In no small part this achievement has been due to the exceptional leadership of Chairman BEILENSON. The gentleman from California's conscientious, scrupulously fair and thoughtful approach to our committee's serious responsibilities continues to be a model of professional legislative conduct for all of us who have had the privilege of serving with him. These qualities and his lively good humor have earned him the admiration and respect of every member of the committee, and mine in particular.

Perhaps at this point, it would be appropriate to note also that the work of the committee on the often complex and difficult issues addressed by this bill could not have been so effectively accomplished without the long hours of excellent supporting work by our exceptionally talented staff. Therefore, I would like to specifically recognize the efforts of Tom Latimer, Mike O'Neil, Tom Smeeton, Marty Faga, Duane Andrews, Bob Fitch, Ken Kodama, Virginia Callas, Bernie Raimo, Diane Dornan, Louis Dupart, Steve Nelson, Jeannie McNally, Sharon Curcio, Dee Jackson, Cathy Eberwein, Karen Schindler, Jack Keliher, Bernie Toon, Calvin Humphrey, Dick Giza, Merritt Clark, and Angel Torres. In particular, however, I want to extend my sincere gratitude and warmest wishes to Marty Faga and Duane Andrews, the two most senior members of our Program and Budget Authorization Subcommittee staff. After more than 12 years of exemplary service to our committee, this is the last intelligence authorization bill on which we will have the benefit of their unparalleled expertise and sage advice. Both of these dedicated gentlemen have provided us with scrupulously nonpartisan professional staff support. Regrettably for our committee, their talents and achievements have been widely recognized beyond the attic confines of our committee offices, and both will be assuming senior positions of responsibility in the executive branch. Marty will shortly be sworn in as Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Space Programs. Duane has been nominated for the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence. We are profoundly sorry to be losing them, but we wish them the best good fortune in their new duties.

In addition, I congratulate Mike O'Neil, the committee's chief counsel from its creation and a guiding light in our legislative actions over all of those years. Mike has assumed a new position of responsibility on the Speaker's staff.

Let me now return to the substance of this bill and mention two important aspects of it. First of all, the administration's policy decision, after its lengthy consultations with the congressional leadership, has been not to seek covert aid to the internal political opposition in the forthcoming Nicaraguan elections, but to rely just on the package of overt aid to the election process through the National Endowment for Democracy [NED]. I have the highest respect for NED's capabilities and efforts, and I am a strong supporter of NED programs, which are designed to assist the democratic process rather than provide direct aid to any candidate.

Second, H.R. 2748 calls for the President to submit a report to the Congress by April 1 next year, describing how counternarcotics intelligence activities can be integrated, including coordinating the collection and analysis of intelligence information, ensuring the dissemination of relevant information to the various officials responsible for narcotics policies and activities, and coordinating and controlling all counternarcotics intelligence activities. This report should help to focus our attention better on the degree of progress we are making on this important aspect of our war on drugs and on problem areas where more intensive or imaginative efforts are required. At this point, our committee has concluded that there is no focal point for counternarcotics intelligence. Nevertheless, we believe the Director of Central Intelligence has taken the first step in that direction through the creation of a Counternarcotics Center. Hopefully, such steps will help us develop a better integrated system for assessing the value of counternarcotics intelligence information available, pinpointing the necessary requirements for further collection and analysis, and coordinating the collection, analysis, and dissemination of intelligence information needed to support U.S. counternarcotics activities.

In conclusion, I urge the House to pass H.R. 2748.

□ 1420

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], our distinguished former chairman.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak to section 504 of the bill which directs the Secretary of Defense to establish an undergraduate training program at the Defense Intelligence Agency aimed at facilitating the recruitment of women and minorities.

During my tenure on the Intelligence Committee, I became concerned about the minimal representation of women and minorities throughout the intelligence community. I found that they were vastly underrepresented throughout the professional grade structure. Several reasons were offered in explaining this problem. Generally, it was that the intelligence agencies could not compete with the private sector in attracting women and minorities with skills critical to the performances of their mission.

Consequently, in an effort to level the recruitment playing field between the private sector and the intelligence agencies, the fiscal year 1987 Intelligence Authorization Act directed the Director of Central Intelligence and the Secretary of Defense to establish an undergraduate training program at the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency. To date, this program is viewed with wide approval by both CIA and NSA, and presently has over 80 students participating. While overall success of the program will be judged in future years, both CIA and NSA acknowledge that they expect this program to have a positive effect in eliminating the problem of underrepresentation in the professional grades of women and minorities.

Section 504 establishes a similar program at the Defense Intelligence Agency which is also experiencing difficulty in attracting women and minorities with skills critical to its mission. Not only is DIA not able to compete with the private sector, but they are presently faced with a situation whereby they cannot compete with their colleagues in the intelligence community. This unfortunate circumstance is a result of the undergraduate training program, not being extended to the DIA. Section 504 rectifies this situation, not only as it relates to the private sector, but also within the intelligence community itself. It is expected that the same success experienced by NSA and CIA will occur with the initiation of the undergraduate training program at DIA.

I would like to commend the chairman, Mr. BEILENSON, for his leadership in fashioning section 504 of this bill. I think it is going to make a significant difference at DIA.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHUSTER], one of the more valuable members of our committee.

Strike "Ohio," and make it "Pennsylvania."

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, Pennsylvania intends to annex Ohio, but, as a matter of intelligence, that is still classified.

Mr. Chairman, I wish we lived in a world where it was not necessary to have intelligence agencies. I wish we lived in a world where we could trust the other governments with which we deal, where we had no need for gathering intelligence and where we had no need, especially, for covert operations against terrorists and dictatorships around the world, but that unfortunately is a world of make-believe.

Mr. Chairman, if we, as Americans and as Members of this body, do not see the world as it is rather than as we wish it were, then we in our country stand to suffer at the hands of tyrants. From the code breakers of World War II, to the Berlin tunnel, to saving Italy from communism, to more recent intelligence successes of which we cannot speak, intelligence has helped secure our country. Intelligence has helped make not only America a better land, but the world a freer and safer place, and yet we see our intelligence agencies denigrated. We see their hands tied. We see them attacked.

What we need, Mr. Chairman, is not only this authorization for funds for intelligence. What we need is a new authorization which embraces our commitment to intelligence necessary to secure and defend our country and the free world. What we need, Mr. Chairman, is a reconfirmation, a recommitment, to the importance of sound, strong intelligence to help secure America.

A very, very immediate case in point is the Panamanian situation. We criticize what happend last week in Panama, and Mr. Chairman, I was prepared as I went into briefings on the Panama situation, I was prepared to be very critical of this administration. Yet I must say that after hearing the facts I came almost reluctantly to the conclusion that the administration made reasonable judgments, perhaps not gutsy judgments, but reasonable judgments based on the facts available to them at the time. Yet who could expect, who could expect this administration or any administration, who could expect the intelligence agencies of our Government to make gutsy decisions when we have lashed them, put them under the whip, tethered them, told them they best not do anything or we will have them in front of a grand jury; we will have them, as a distinguished career CIA agent now is, under indictment. Who could expect them to do anything but become cautious, if indeed not timid?

Yes, there are those on this Hill who recently have said that they have given this President everything he wanted with regard to Panama, and yet we know there are those who have gone to the White House and threatened them, threatened them with exposure for classified information, have said, "You dare not engage in covert operations."

We cannot have it both ways, Mr. Chairman. We cannot talk out of both sides of our mouth. We had either better decide that we are going to support intelligence necessary for the security of our country, or we should decide that we are simply going to let the bad guys of the world have their way.

So, let us hope that the Panama situation of the last week might be a turning point, that it might be a catharsis, an educational experience for some of us on this Hill. Let us hope that it might make us say that it is time that we recognize that a President, duly elected President, is indeed responsible for foreign policy and that the intelligence agencies of this Government have duly constituted responsibilities. And let us support the effort of our intelligence agencies and of our administration, be they Republican or Democrat. Let us support them as they do the patriotic, yet sometimes dirty, job of securing this country.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], our distinguished ranking member.

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2748, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990. Section 402 of the bill requires the Director of Central Intelligence to provide the Congressional intelligence oversight committees, at their request, any inspection, investigation, or audit report prepared by the Central Intelligence Agency Inspector General. I would like to briefly explain this provision to my colleagues.

This provision was arrived at in bipartisan fashion and is the result of an inquiry by the Oversight and Evaluation Subcommittee into the effectiveness of the Agency's Inspector General Office. As chairman of this subcommittee, I worked closely with Congressman BUD SHUSTER and the members of the subcommittee in drafting this requirement.

During the subcommittee's inquiry, we requested full access to the inspection, investigation, and audit reports prepared by the CIA Inspector General. We did so not to conduct a "fishing expedition," but to assess the overall quality of these reports and the responsiveness of the Agency in implementing any corrective actions identified in them. After some negotiation, we were granted access to audit and investigation reports. Committee access to investigation reports, however, became a matter of some sensitivity to Director Webster. After a long protracted period of some 4 months of negotiations, we were unable to obtain assurances that full access would be granted.

Director Webster initially ruled that we would have no direct access to these reports. Later, he indicated that committee staff could review selected reports but would not be allowed to take substantive handwritten notes on their content. Finding this situation unacceptable, I met with the Director personally to see if something could be worked out. While staff access to one report was eventually granted, we were unable to obtain assurances that any subsequent access to additional reports would be forthcoming.

Just before marking up the Intelligence authorization bill, I again attempted to reach agreement with CIA Director Webster on full access to these reports and was unable to do so. Mr. SHUSTER and myself therefore felt it necessary to draft section 402, so that committee access to these important reports would be assured in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for all the members of the Oversight and Evaluation Subcommittee when I say that we on the Intelligence Committee have a clear responsibility to the Members of the House in assuring that CIA programs are effectively managed and that the resources we authorize are well spent. The CIA Inspector General is supposed to be on the front line in this area, and we have a legitimate and clear mission to see that he is performing his job. We simply cannot make such an assessment without full access to the product that he produces.

I would stress to my colleagues, as I have to Director Webster, that it is in the best interest of the CIA and his inspector general [IG] to keep the intelligence oversight committees fully informed on specific improvements made as a result of IG inspections. It is his responsibility to ensure that appropriate controls are in place to see that managers entrusted to operate programs and activities at the CIA are accountable—and that the intelligence oversight committees can attest to that accountability. Section 402 of H.R. 2748 takes a solid step in this direction, and I urge its passage.

□ 1430

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCURDY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would point out to my friend that I not only concur with what he says, but I would emphasize that the Intelligence Committee on a unanimous bipartisan vote adopted the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I certainly thank the gentleman for his sincerity and for his support throughout this process. As one who is a strong supporter of the intelligence community, I believe he agrees with all of us that this is an important addition to the Intelligence Authorization Act.

I thank the chairman again for his leadership and support and urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBEST], one of the most able and productive members of our committee.

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this authorization bill and urge its adoption.

This committee has a keen interest in counterintelligence, an interest first sparked by the wave of espionage cases in 1985. Most recently, the Hall, Conrad, and Bloch cases show that we continue to suffer losses that are devastating in every way, including financially.

Some progress is visible, but it has been all too difficult to achieve and sustain movement. In its report this year, for instance, the committee notes continued disarray in Embassy security policy and organization, a full 5 years after massive problems were discovered. We have also requested that DOD focus on apparent security lapses during weapons acquisition, which compromise our technology and allow the Soviets to develop countermeasures well before new U.S. systems are deployed.

Especially with today's budget problems, we cannot tolerate these compromises and the financial burdens they impose. The Moscow Embassy fiasco likely will cost us several hundred million dollars. Recovery from the Walker case probably would cost us billions in premature submarine, antisubmarine, and communications investments. Even if we do not or cannot recover our previous relative security in a case like the Walkers', large prior investments are wasted.

While consciousness and even action has been heightened in some areas, one sometimes despairs over the likelihood of fundamental attitudinal changes. The Director of Central Intelligence has publicly warned that Soviet intelligence activities actually have increased during this period of glasnost, however forthcoming the U.S.S.R. might be in other areas. Yet we are instituting new policies and relations with little or no thought to their long-term counterintelligence implications. This is true in areas such as visas, emigration, cultural and business exchanges, arms control verification policies, numbers of diplomatic officials, and diplomatic travel. Sometimes the bad effects could be tempered with only a little forethought, but these policies often are rushed through with virtually no thought at all, and usually with no organized or detailed input from the counterintelligence community.

There are not enough agents in the whole FBI, much less in the Intelligence Division, to even attempt to cope with the resulting threat. I'd be willing to bet a great deal that we'll soon be asked to pony up large additional funds for partial countermeasures. But as we all know, the well is drying up. It is time for the counterintelligence agencies to unite and become more aggressive in highlighting dangers to the national interest. And, for their part, top policymakers throw on the table new and seemingly innocuous "symbols" adding "momentum" to the United States-Soviet relationship.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], who has been a long-time distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I want to congratulate the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], for his leadership and, indeed, specifically for his management of the annual authorization bill for the Intelligence agencies. This is the committee's highest priority and this bill is the product of very thoughtful deliberations and an excellent working relationship certainly by Members on both sides of the aisle, including and I should commend as well the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], and certainly the staff, in carefully judging the needs of the Intelligence agencies.

I am somewhat saddened by either the immediate loss or prospective loss of several key staff members who have been with the committee for many years and upon whom we have been very dependent, as they go on presumably to better and higher responsibilities.

I would also like to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] and his counterpart, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER], for their work in bringing some accountability as far as the Central Intelligence Agency is concerned, particularly with reference to audit and review activities of the inspector general's office.

I think that is extremely important work on their part. I would, however, comment that while this year, for various reasons I think this bill is less controversial in terms of its implications, perhaps because it is not concerned with Iran or Central America or something else which has been controversial over the years, that I think that is an excellent development.

At the same time I think it should be observed that the Intelligence budget is still too overclassified. Granted, we have come a long way from the days when we did not acknowledge the existence of the CIA or its location or even in what Department budget most of the accounts were authorized. However, a lot more information relating to the Intelligence budget should be made available to Members and the public without running the risk of national security.

For example, although the bill authorizes a classified level of expenditures for the Intelligence agencies, there are estimates in the press as to the size of the Intelligence budget. Certainly, Members and the public have a right to know the amount of money being spent by the Intelligence agencies, and I am hopeful we are reaching a time, a level of maturity, which will enable us to provide more information and a lot less classification with respect to this budget.

Mr. Chairman, in any event, I am pleased to support the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BEREUTER], one of the more thoughtful and productive Members—Nebraska. My geography is very poor today.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, we were authorized by the same act.

Mr. Chairman, this Member rises in support of H.R. 2748 as a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, also, this Member wishes to join with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBEST] in addressing the importance of counterintelligence, and the need to consider counterintelligence improvements.

The Reagan administration focused on counterintelligence much more than did its predecessors. It now appears that the Bush administration may carry the work further. This certainly is desirable, because progress addressing counterintelligence deficiencies requires high-level attention, initiative, and followthrough.

It is this Member's understanding that the Bush administration will be considering counterintelligence program improvements as a part of a major National Security Review policy paper. This policy initiative is expected to reach the President in the next month or two.

Mr. Chairman, this Member served as a military counterintelligence officer, so I have a particular interest and appreciation for this important and often neglected area of national security. This Member has a special interest in methods to improve training for counterintelligence specialists and is committed to that end.

Presently, counterintelligence responsibilities currently are widely scattered throughout the Government. For instance, in addition to FBI intelligence specialists, there are various counterintelligence contingents within the CIA, the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, and the State Department. Not surprisingly, coordination among the various contingents in their training methods is not as good as it could or should be.

It seems unlikely that each of these agencies will individually have the best possible and effective training program covering security countermeasures and the many types of foreign intelligence threats. Those threats range from human agents to very sophisticated signals intelligence collection techniques.

Cooperative or joint training programs should lift the quality of U.S. counterintelligence and reduce overall training costs. Resulting personal contacts could also help wear down the barriers between agencies, which have hindered information exchanges as well as operations.

Therefore, this Member hopes and requests that training improvements will be among the actions covered by the forthcoming National Security Review. The House Intelligence Committee awaits these executive decisions and recommendations with considerable interest. Our involvement often will be necessary to implement these decisions successfully, particularly if significant budgetary implications are involved, as some anticipate.

In closing, I urge my colleagues to support the passage of H.R. 2748.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN], a valued and hard-working member of our committee.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2748, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990, and commend Chairman BEILENSON and the ranking Republican member, Mr. HYDE, for forging a nonpartisan consensus in support of the bill's budget and legislative provisions. There are, I believe, no significant differences among the Intelligence Committee's 19 members on the bill's money provisions. To a large extent, this is due to the integrity and intellectual capability of the chairman, Mr. BEILENSON.

The Intelligence Committee's Subcommittee on Program and Budget Authorization, on which I serve, spent many hours conducting thorough hearings on this Nation's many and diverse intelligence activities.

In these hearings and in other deliberations at both the subcommittee and full committee level, we examined the intelligence needs of the United States, analyzed the President's budget request, and kept in mind the fiscal constraints under which the Congress is laboring. The result, contained in the bill before us, is a carefully crafted and well-measured intelligence program that is both protective of the Nation's security interests and fiscally prudent.

The funds authorized in H.R. 2748 support a necessary array of intelligence programs in support of our many national security concerns. None in my opinion is more important to our national security than those programs aimed at the collection, production, and dissemination of economic intelligence.

In the ever-changing and challenging world we live in, the intelligence community must take the lead in collecting accurate information on international banking, financial, manufacturing, trading, and related activities by whatever legitimate means it can employ, and in providing expert and timely analyses of such information to the executive branch and to the Congress. The relevant intelligence agencies have taken some strides in this direction, and I commend them. But they must do more. The quantity of Soviet weapons in the Urals is important but so is the quality of wheat in the Ukraine.

Furthermore, it is imperative that our Government have competent, up to date accurate information on the role of foreign governments, foreign banks and their affiliates in asserting their influence and control in the world economy, and more specifically in the American economy. America's economic security is being challenged and threatened by new forces in the world. A revitalized and unified Europe, a strengthened Japan and Pacific Rim specifically come to mind. These forces will dramatically affect U.S. jobs and economic power. They represent a direct competitive threat to the United States, in a similar sense that the Soviet Union has been a threat to United States as the world changes, our intelligence community must recognize that our national security will be influenced by these economic forces as much as they will be by the Soviet threat and perhaps it is time to reallocate some of our limited intelligence resources to accomplish these objectives.

Our intelligence activities must be based on our foreign policy objectives. My point is that in this changing world, economic issues will dominate our foreign policy agenda, beginning to crowd out the historic East-West agenda of the past 40 years. It's time that our intelligence operations have this modern agenda as well, in order to properly serve American foreign policy.

I look forward to discussing these issues with Director Webster and others during the fiscal year 1991 budget cycle and urge all Members to support this year's bill, H.R. 2748.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman on his statement and tell him I agree with him. I think that our intelligence community really does need to pay attention to the economic circumstances abroad and to do everything in their power to advance the United States' interests. I would just also add to the gentleman's comments that the intelligence community has to be made free to do its job, and I guess that is a certain degree of self-criticism, because I think that sometimes Members of Congress tend to impede the intelligence community in their ability to do that job.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not exactly sure what the gentleman is referring to. We usually are on the same wavelength on most issues.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield further, the comment was enlarging on the gentleman's comments and not at all intended or directed at what he said but to imply that perhaps in the last couple of weeks there have been events in which the intelligence community has been restricted, and we have suffered because of it.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak to that. My point is in this statement that as the world changes, as we face the threat of Japan and Western Europe and the whole slew of forces in the world which challenge American economic superiority and affect the jobs of our people and their living standards, the intelligence community has to be keenly aware and be interested in economic intelligence in the world and not just be focused on the historic East-West relationships which have dominated us for the last 40 years. Those are clearly important and critical, but these other objectives are as important as well.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman's statement is well taken.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the identity of the States of the different Members is no longer classified, so I need not indulge in disinformation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking member for his cartographical exactitude.

Mr. Chairman, this bill creates, among other things, a new entitlement authority by increasing the retirement accrual rate for employees who have served overseas in the line of duty. It applies to retirees covered by CIA retirement and disability systems as well as NSA and DIE retirees covered in their respective CSRS plans.

None of the agencies, nor the House Select Committee on Intelligence, nor the CBO seem to know the exact number of employees or retirees who will eventually be affected by this legislation.

□ 1450

I am glad to know in one instance the committee has not leaked this important security information. However, the entitlement will only apply to employees covered by the closed Civil Service Retirement System available to employees hired before January 1, 1984.

Initial outlays are expected to be small. However, they will rise as the number of retiring employees increases. A formal CBO cost estimate has not been made available to me and I believe none is available at all. Analysts are reluctant to render any estimate at this time, and I do not blame them, other than to say it will probably cost less than $1 million in fiscal year 1990.

That, however, puts the bill in violation of section 302 (f)(1) of the budget act which prohibits the creation of new entitlement authority in excess of the respective subcommittees' 302 allocation. Neither of the committees handling this bill had any 302 allocations.

It is, I am told, a wonderful bill. I am not anxious to impede its progress. However, to flaunt the budget act and ignore it in small amounts means that we will eventually do it in larger amounts.

Mr. Chairman, we are indulging in a dangerous precedent by ignoring the budget act on this very small and perhaps insignificant item, and for that reason I am compelled to oppose the bill.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] is recognized for up to 8 minutes.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, today's floor debate on the intelligence authorization bill is an appropriate moment to focus on a foreign policy issue that has long been neglected by Congress but which is of increasing importance to United States national interests, namely, United States policy toward Angola.

Let me begin by saying: It is an open secret that the United States provides assistance to the UNITA insurgency in Angola.

President Bush, in a letter sent in early January to the UNITA leader Mr. Jonas Savimbi, before President Bush had even taken office, pledged continued U.S. assistance to UNITA. That followed several similarly open statements by President Reagan. On many subsequent occasions, high ranking officials of the administration have publicly referred to U.S. material support of UNITA. Moreover, Mr. Savimbi himself has spoken openly about the levels and nature of U.S. assistance that UNITA receives, most recently in the July 5 issue of Jeune Afrique and in a press conference he held July 5 in Abidjan, Ivory Coast.

These facts speak for themselves: In practice the U.S. support of UNITA remains covert in name only. It is a reality known to any and all persons concerned with this issue.

Yet astonishingly, Congress currently engages in no open public debate on this most central fact of United States policy toward Angola.

In the almost 4 years that this program has been in existence, Congress has voted only once, 3 years ago, on the Hamilton amendment to the intelligence authorization bill, on anything that concerned U.S. assistance to UNITA. The intelligence authorization bill before us today contains not a single overt statement on Angola. All congressional business in this area has been handled in a closed and secretive manner; the administration faces no significant reporting requirements to Congress on its Angola policy, and all major decisions are reached behind closed doors.

This is an approach that Congress refused to tolerate with respect to United States assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras; it can hardly be tolerated in Angola. So long as it is tolerated, U.S. policy will remain hostage to Jonas Savimbi's personal agenda.

It is especially important to open debate today, given important new developments in southern Africa that pose new challenges to American policy.

The United States-brokered Angola-Namibia accord of 1988 laid the basis for the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola and the transition to independence in Namibia. That has been followed by the Gbadolite summit of last June, when President Mobutu and 17 other African heads of state brought President Dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi into agreement on a cease-fire and negotiations aimed at a national reconciliation.

If current U.S. policy is in fact sound, it will certainly be capable of withstanding public scrutiny and debate in Congress: The proponents of aid to UNITA should join me today in appealing to Congress to reopen debate on United States policy toward Angola.

In the 3 years since Congress last took any stand on this issue, a multitude of things have happened which make it absolutely imperative that Congress systematically reappraise U.S. policy:

First, Cuban forces are on their way out of Angola. Under the term of the United States-brokered Angola-Namibia accord, 50 percent of the Cuban forces will be gone by November 1, two-thirds by April of next year. Further, Soviet military assistance to Angola is dropping significantly

The Cuban presence in Angola, it should be recalled, was the original rationale for United States support of UNITA; that is now a rapidly receding factor.

Second, current U.S. policy is failing.

Rising, unconditional assistance to UNITA has only encouraged Mr. Savimbi to become even more hardline, and to place new obstacles in the way of peace talks.

Following the Gbadolite summit in June, Savimbi rejected proposals for cease-fire protocols, denied that he had agreed to "integration" of UNITA into existing structures in Angola, in direct contradiction of the African heads of state, attacked President Mobutu's mediation efforts, abandoned the peace process, and failed to attend the round of talks scheduled for September 18 in Kinshasa, despite direct urgent appeals from President Bush and Assistant Secretary of State Cohen.

Against the backdrop of these events, the question has to be asked: Is U.S. patience with Savimbi inexhaustible? Does United States assistance to UNITA undercut other diplomatic efforts to encourage both UNITA and the Angolan Government to moderate their demands and reach fair compromises that lay the basis for an enduring, negotiated settlement?

In fact, the harsh truth is that America's Angola policy is now in disarray. Hardline, pro-UNITA forces have pushd the administration to embrace Savimbi's self-serving interpretation of the understandings reached at Gbadolite and to endorse many of Savimbi's maximum bargaining demands. In the meantime, administration officials must scramble to convince Mr. Savimbi and President Mobutu to get the negotiating process back on track. Not surprisingly, the African heads of state involved in the peace process show less and less confidence in U.S. intentions and evenhandedness.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I am pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, let me say I support the thrust of the remarks of my colleague. I have been concerned about the breakdown of negotiations. I think the President acted a little unexpectedly and not in the best interests of the peace process when he spurned President Mobutu and negotiations broke down. He was here in Washington recently and met with a number of Members. I believe he has told President Bush he will resume negotiations with the Angolan Government shortly, I think that is critically important.

I do support the gentleman's thrust that we should have a much closer look at developments there, especially if there is a barrier toward the peaceful settlement in that part of the world. The Cubans are leaving. South Africa is reducing their presence. I think there has got to be pressure to bring both sides to the negotiating table.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve 1 minute of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCURDY. I just want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan, that it is my understanding that Dr. Sivimbi is going to not only meet with President Mobutu, but also has agreed to renewed negotiations. Unfortunately, and I was not there, there was not a clear written statement of agreement in that the Angolan Government did not want to even shake hands in front of the cameras.

It would certainly be easier if there were direct negotiations between UNITA and the Angolan Government and there were not mediators and we had front line states making one statement and other African leaders making others.

But the bottom line is, those Members who would like to see national reconciliation in Angola support negotiations, would like to see negotiations without preconditions, would like to see direct negotiations if possible. We would like to see those negotiations lead to multiparty states and elections. Certainly those Members who believe that bringing democracy to Angola would be a tremendous goal would like to meet with President Santos and others on a basis to further these discussions with Congress as well.

□ 1500

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for his observations. Let me say I certainly hope that the cease-fire will be resumed and the negotiation process will again get under way. The point of what I am trying to raise today, however, is there are elements of American policy, not only in my judgment but in the judgment of most of the African heads of states who are involved in trying to facilitate national reconciliation in Angola, that are counterproductive to that end, to the end of national reconciliation.

The administration has not followed through on its expressed desire to demonstrate a degree of balance and impartiality through steps which would begin to normalize relationships with the Government of Angola. We do not have time to expand upon that. Hopefully we can as we move into discussion under the 5-minute rule.

The administration has not followed through on its expressed desire to demonstrate a degree of balance and impartiality through steps which would begin to normalize relations with the Government of Angola. Instead, there is continued, strained communication with the Government of Angola and no evidence whatsoever of a commitment by the Administration to reward the Government for the withdrawal of Cuban forces under the Angola-Namibia accord, for its extensive macroeconomic reforms, and for its decision to negotiate with UNITA. There is still no United States liaison office in Luanda. Nor has the administration supported Angola's full participation in the IMF and World Bank. This implicitly denies us any serious leverage in our dealings with the Angolan Government.

Fortunately, an important and varied segment of Congress has endorsed the call for a more moderate and balanced approach to Angola. House Concurrent Resolution 203 has 74 cosponsors—15 Republicans, 59 Democrats. This signals a growing dissatisfaction with a U.S. policy held hostage of UNITA.

I would make one final observation: There is a deepening awareness, I think, in this country among some of the strong supporters of Jonas Savimbi, of systematic human rights abuses which ought to give us serious pause about the degree of our commitment there.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. ROWLAND], one of the more thoughtful members of our committee.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise to join my colleagues on the Intelligence Committee in strong support of this year's intelligence authorization bill. Mr. Chairman, we have held extensive hearings on a number of aspects of funding for the numerous intelligence programs that are funded by this authorization bill. I am pleased to report that it represents an excellent utilization of scarce resources, both financial and personnel. Our Nation's security depends on good intelligence, and this bill assures that the intelligence community remains solid and able to meet the many challenges that it faces in the coming decade.

I would also like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the very successful meeting that we in the intelligence community had with Dr. Savimbi during his visit to Washington just last week.

One issue that we have looked at in depth is the allegation of human rights abuses by UNITA. Without revealing any classified information, we have found no information that substantiated the allegations that have surfaced both in Europe and the United States that Dr. Savimbi has tortured or killed close associates.

Allegations first surfaced that Savimbi had killed a number of colleagues, one of whom was Gen. Anthony Fernandez. Ironically, Fernandez appeared with Dr. Savimbi last week. Another, Tito Chinjungi, the former Washington UNITA representative, categorically denied allegations that he had been tortured by Savimbi. Indeed, Congressmen DRIER, MCEWEN, BURTON, and SHUMWAY met with Tito shortly after the allegations surfaced. They found him to be in good health and very indignant that anyone would insinuate that he had been tortured. Finally, there is an often repeated allegation that Dr. Savimbi had several individuals burned at the stake in 1983. This story also has not been substantiated. While many Africans still believe in witches, and burning at the stake has been a punishment accorded suspected witches, UNITA has discouraged such activity and, in fact, has established a village where individuals thought to be witches are protected from being burned or stoned to death.

Among all of these alleagations an important issue has been lost, MPLA human rights violations. The April 1989 African Watch Report on human rights entitled "Angola, Violations of the Laws of War by Both Sides" listed violations committed by the MPLA such as indiscriminate mining of civilian areas, forced conscription and unwarranted attacks on civilians. Perhaps the most damaging accusation is the mining issue. We have already seen in El Salvador and Afghanistan the damage and lost limbs that carelessly, or even worse, knowingly have been caused by mines. The MPLA, following classic Soviet military theory, has placed mines all over the countryside. Their legacy will be untold numbers of lives lost and innocent civilians maimed.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that I think the intelligence community and agencies that have been coming before our committee over the past year have done an excellent job in their testimony. I would also like to indicate that as a new member of the committtee, I am greatly impressed with the quality and professionalism and commitment of the staff.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], does the gentleman not think that with the Cubans on a timetable leaving Angola, with the Soviets decreasing their aid to the Communist Government of Angola, if indeed that is true, that our policy is working and that a reexamination of our policy really is unwarranted? We are on a roll, would you not say, if the statements of the gentleman from Michigan are true.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. The gentleman is absolutely correct. We have had success, things are changing. There may be stipulations at times where people on different sides of a political issue disagree upon what is happening exactly. Indeed, the results have shown that.

Mr. HYDE. Does the gentleman not think that our policy should be determined in this country rather than by the heads of state of African nations, as the gentleman seemed to suggest, that our policy did not meet with their approval? Does the gentleman not think it should stay in the domestic realm?

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the ranking member is exactly right.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO].

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding me this time.

Today the House considers the intelligence authorization for fiscal 1990.

In this bill, there is a provision to expand a demonstration project so that all FBI employees in New York City will receive a cost-of-living increase between 20 and 25 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I fully support the committee's efforts to increase the pay of FBI personnel who serve our country so diligently. I applaud the committee for recognizing the important role that clerical and support personnel play in Government service.

I support a cost-of-living increase for FBI agents in New York City. At the same time, I believe that New Jersey's Federal workers must receive equal treatment.

There are roughly 400 FBI agents and support personnel in northern New Jersey who face the same high housing costs, high property taxes, skyrocketing car insurance premiums, and transportation expenses.

In fact, we are losing many of our agents to New York City for the very reason that they will receive a substantial pay increase.

This concern is not limited to northern New Jersey. Federal workers from the suburbs of Washington, DC, Los Angeles, Boston, and Chicago are all in need of a locality pay increase to make ends meet in high cost areas.

Clearly, the current situation demonstrates that the time has come for Congress and the White House to carefully consider revising the general Federal pay schedule so it takes into account differences in local costs of living.

That is why I introduced a bill to provide locality pay for all Federal workers in high cost urban and suburban areas.

The fact that my bill has cosponsors from coast to coast demonstrates that the problem has reached crisis proportions throughout the country.

Mr. Chairman, I support today's action, but I urge my colleagues to support a more comprehensive solution, such as my bill H.R. 3319.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation. Over the last 9 months the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence has worked very hard to scrub the proposed budget for the intelligence community.

We have made a number of changes, and I believe the legislation we have before us today will provide for a strong intelligence program that will address the areas of critical importance to our Nation.

With respect to my remarks earlier in response to Mr. GLICKMAN, I was simply referring to the Panamanian situation last week, and I have to tell this body that I believe very strongly that we in Congress have to free up the intelligence community to do its job and to do so without congressional over-micromanagement. Or else we cannot be very comfortable when we get up and blame them for not doing their jobs.

I also point out that last week our committee had an opportunity to meet with Dr. Jonas Savimbi, president of UNITA. During that meeting we heard of his explanation of the failure of the peace talks progress in Angola and genuine talks on national reconciliation to begin.

Dr. Savimbi assured us of his desire to meet with President Mobutu of Zaire, and I understand that he will be meeting with President Mobutu very shortly in Europe.

Of course, Mr. Mobutu is the mediator of talks between UNITA and the Marxist-Leninist MPLA.

In addition to that meeting that is going to come about between Dr. Savimbi and President Mobutu, to get the peace talks back on track, hopefully they are going to agree on terms to establish a comprehensive lasting ceasefire.

□ 1510

Peace talks, however, cannot be successful if the MPLA clings to the past and continues to insist on integration of UNITA into the ranks of MPLA. That is unreasonable, but the MPLA refuses to rewrite the constitution which provides for a one-party state, governed by the MPLA. That is unreasonable. They, likewise, refuse to talk directly to UNITA in these peace negotiations. Of course, that is unreasonable.

Finally, and most importantly, the MPLA refused to hold free internationally supervised elections, in which every Angolan will have the right to cast his vote for the party of his choice. Certainly, that is unreasonable.

In one month, Namibians will vote for the first time in free elections that will lead to their country's independence. The agreements that led to resolution of this problem were achieved through long and patient, but also direct, face-to-face negotiations between arch rivals, South Africa on one side and Cuba and Angola on the other. If the MPLA is sincere about ending its civil war, which led to the deaths of countless innocent civilians, it should sit down and talk with Dr. Savimbi and UNITA in direct negotiations and talk seriously about ending the war.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I neglected, when I introduced the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to mention that he is one of the most productive and creative members of our committee.

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I stand in strong opposition to the provisions included in the Intelligence Authorization Act proposing to fund the Angolan rebel movement, commonly referred to as "UNITA".

Although the provision specifying the exact amount of funding is classified, we are all aware that this reauthorization would either maintain covert aid funding at current levels or significantly increase their assistance. Notwithstanding, I believe that any additional funding to Mr. Savimbi and UNITA is inappropriate at this time.

In recent months, the world has witnessed Mr. Savimbi consistently undermine the Brazzaville accords bartered by the United States. By refusing to comply with promises he made in Gbadolite, not appearing in Harare for continued peace talks, and by his insistence to abrogate the negotiated cease fire, Mr. Savimbi's irresponsible actions has embarrassed the United States Government.

Today Angola has the infant mortality rate of 148 out of every 1,000 live births, the highest in Africa. The life expectancy of its citizens averages only 42 years, more than 200,000 persons, most of them children, have lost limbs, and untold thousands have lost their lives during this war. But despite the suffering, UNITA continues to escalate the conflict.

Most recently, Mr. Savimbi has expressed a desire to reenter into negotiations, but, in light of his unstable past, I remain a skeptic.

Therefore, I would urge my colleagues to summarily reject additional funding for UNITA. Thank you.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my support of the Intelligence Authorization bill before us, and particularly to support of the provisions that relate to the February elections next year in Nicaragua. This bill H.R. 2748 clearly states that no covert funds in this act may be used to influence the upcoming Nicaraguan elections.

I want to applaud the consistent and determined efforts of Chairman BEILENSON, and the other members of the Intelligence Committee, to work out this agreement with the administration. This is a very important agreement.

I appreciate that they agreed with the urgings I and other Representatives have made to the committee.

In passing this bill today, the entire House is sending a very clear signal that we do not support any covert CIA involvement in the Nicaraguan elections.

Thus we are reinforcing a critical principle that we hold so dear in our country: democracy must be arrived at by democratic means. That means above-board procedures and above-board funding of the electoral process. As we seek to facilitate the growth of democracy, we must not ourselves be guilty of using any techniques of support or encouragement that could be deemed undemocratic.

Representative LEE HAMILTON distilled a key lesson from the Iran-Contra affair which is directly relevant to this issue. He said:

A democratic government, as I understand it, is not a solution, but a way of seeking solutions. It is not a government devoted to a particular policy objective, but a form of government which specifies the means and methods of achieving objectives . . . If we subvert that process to bring about a desired end—no matter how strongly we may believe in that end—we have weakened our country, not strengthened it.

This is a magnificent statement.

We cannot legitimately bring democracy to Nicaragua by any covert means. Whatever support we provide must be overt and above board.

H.R. 2748 ensures that principle, and for that reason, this measure has my strong support.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule by titles and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The amendments printed in section 2 of House Resolution 254 are considered as having been adopted and shall be considered as original text for purposes of further amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1990".

TITLE I—INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 101. Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1990 for the conduct of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the following elements of the United States Government:

(1) The Central Intelligence Agency.
(2) The Department of Defense.
(3) The Defense Intelligence Agency.
(4) The National Security Agency.
(5) The Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force.
(6) The Department of State.
(7) The Department of the Treasury.
(8) The Department of Energy.
(9) The Federal Bureau of Investigation.
(10) The Drug Enforcement Administration.

CLASSIFIED SCHEDULE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 102. The amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 101, and the authorized personnel ceilings as of September 30, 1990, for the conduct of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the elements listed in such section, are those specified in the classified Schedule of Authorizations as amended on September 27, 1989, by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence to accompany H.R. 2748 of the One Hundred First Congress. That Schedule of Authorizations shall be made available to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the President. The President shall provide for suitable distribution of the schedule, or of appropriate portions of the schedule, within the executive branch.

PERSONNEL CEILING ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 103. The Director of Central Intelligence may authorize employment of civilian personnel in excess of the numbers authorized for fiscal year 1990 under sections 102 and 202 of this Act when he determines that such action is necessary to the performance of important intelligence functions, except that such number may not, for any element of the intelligence community, exceed 2 percent of the number of civilian personnel authorized under such sections for such element. The Director of Central Intelligence shall promptly notify the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate whenever he exercises the authority granted by this section.

RESTRICTION ON SUPPORT FOR MILITARY OR PARAMILITARY OPERATIONS IN NICARAGUA

SEC. 104. Funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States may be obligated and expended during fiscal year 1990 to provide funds, materiel, or other assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance to support military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua only as authorized in section 101 and as specified in the classified Schedule of Authorizations referred to in section 102, or pursuant to section 502 of the National Security Act of 1947, or pursuant to any provision of law specifically providing such funds, materiel, or assistance.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title I?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

TITLE II—INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY STAFF

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 201. There is authorized to be appropriated for the Intelligence Community Staff for fiscal year 1990 the sum of $28,400,000.

AUTHORIZATION OF PERSONNEL END STRENGTH

SEC. 202. (a) The Intelligence Community Staff is authorized 250 full-time personnel as of September 30, 1990. Such personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff may be permanent employees of the Intelligence Community Staff or personnel detailed from other elements of the United States Government.

(b) During fiscal year 1990, personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff shall be selected so as to provide appropriate representation from elements of the United States Government engaged in intelligence and intelligence-related activities.

(c) During fiscal year 1990, any officer or employee of the United States or a member of the Armed Forces who is detailed to the Intelligence Community Staff from another element of the United States Government shall be detailed on a reimbursable basis, except that any such officer, employee, or member may be detailed on a nonreimbursable basis for a period of less than one year for the performance of temporary functions as required by the Director of Central Intelligence.

INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY STAFF ADMINISTERED IN SAME MANNER AS CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

SEC. 203. During fiscal year 1990, activities and personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff shall be subject to the provisions of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) and the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 403a et seq.) in the same manner as activities and personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency.

TITLE III—CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM AND RELATED PROVISIONS

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 301. There is authorized to be appropriated for the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Fund for fiscal year 1990 the sum of $154,900,000.

ELIGIBILITY FOR ANNUITY

SEC. 302. The Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 236 as section 237; and

(2) by inserting after section 235 the following new section:

"ELIGIBILITY FOR ANNUITY

"SEC. 236. A participant must complete, within the last two years before any separation from service, except a separation because of death or disability, at least one year of creditable civilian service during which he or she is subject to this title before he or she or his or her survivors are eligible for an annuity under this title based on the separation. If a participant, except a participant separated from the service because of death or disability, fails to meet the service requirement of the preceding sentence, the amounts deducted from his or her pay during the period for which no eligibility is established based on the separation shall be returned to him or her on the separation. Failure to meet this service requirement does not deprive the individual or his or her survivors of annuity rights which attached on a previous separation.".

PRECEDENCE OF SECTION 224 SURVIVOR BENEFITS OVER SECTION 232 DEATH IN SERVICE BENEFITS

SEC. 303. Section 232(b) of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) thereof the following new sentence; "Payment of death in service benefits for former spouses is also subject to paragraph (4) of this subsection."; and

(2) by adding after paragraph (3) thereof the following:

"(4) If a former spouse eligible for death in service benefits under provisions of this section is or becomes eligible for survivor benefits under section 224, the benefits provided under this section will not be payable and will be superseded by the benefits provided in section 224.".

COMPUTATION OF SURVIVOR BENEFIT FOR FORMER SPOUSES

SEC. 304. Section 224(a)(2) of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees is amended by striking out "and also by an amount" and all that follows through "by the United States".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective as of October 1, 1986.

SPECIAL ANNUITY COMPUTATION RULES FOR CERTAIN CIA EMPLOYEES' SERVICE ABROAD

SEC. 305. The Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403a et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SPECIAL ANNUITY COMPUTATION RULES FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES' SERVICE ABROAD

"SEC. 18. (a) Notwithstanding any provision of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, the annuity under subchapter III of such chapter of an officer or employee of the Central Intelligence Agency who retires on or after October 1, 1989, is not designated under section 203 of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees, and has served abroad as an officer or employee of the Agency on or after January 1, 1987, shall be computed as provided in subsection (b).

"(b)(1) The portion of the annuity relating to such service abroad that is actually performed at any time during the officer's or employees' first ten years of total service shall be computed at the rate and using the percent of average pay specified in section 8339(a)(3) of title 5, United States Code, that is normally applicable only to so much of an employee's total service as exceeds ten years.

"(2) The portion of the annuity relating to service abroad as described in subsection (a) but that is actually performed at any time after the officer's or employee's first ten years of total service shall be computed as provided in section 8339(a)(3) of title 5, United States Code; but, in addition, the officer or employee shall be deemed for annuity computation purposes to have actually performed an equivalent period of service abroad during his or her first ten years of total service, and in calculating the portion of the officer's or employee's annuity for his or her first ten years of total service, the computation rate and percent of average pay specified in paragraph (1) shall also be applied to the period of such deemed or equivalent service abroad.

"(3) The portion of the annuity relating to other service by an officer or employee as described in subsection (a) shall be computed as provided in the provisions of section 8339(a) of title 5, United States Code, that would otherwise be applicable to such service.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'total service' has the meaning given such term under chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) For purposes of subsections (f) through (m) of section 8339 of title 5, United States Code, an annuity computed under this section shall be deemed to be an annuity computed under subsections (a) and (o) of section 8339 of title 5, United States Code.

"(d) The provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to an officer or employee of the Central Intelligence Agency who would otherwise be entitled to a greater annuity computed under an otherwise applicable subsection of section 8339 of title 5, United States Code.".

PORTABILITY OF OVERSEAS SERVICE RETIREMENT BENEFIT

SEC. 306. The special accrual rates provided by section 303 of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees and by section 18 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 for computation of the annuity of an individual who has served abroad as an officer or employee of the Central Intelligence Agency shall be used to compute that portion of the annuity of such individual relating to such service abroad whether or not the individual is employed by the Central Intelligence Agency at the time of retirement from Federal service.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

INCREASE IN EMPLOYEE COMPENSATION AND BENEFITS AUTHORIZED BY LAW

SEC. 701. Appropriations authorized by this Act for salary, pay, retirement, and other benefits for Federal employees may be increased by such additional or supplemental amounts as may be necessary for increases in such compensation or benefits authorized by law.

RESTRICTION ON CONDUCT OF INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 702. The authorization of appropriations by this Act shall not be deemed to constitute authority for the conduct of any intelligence activity which is not otherwise authorized by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST DISCLOSURE REGULATIONS FOR MEMBERS OF THE PRESIDENT'S FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE ADVISORY BOARD

SEC. 703. (a) The President shall ensure that the provision of classified information to a member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, or to a member of any successor board performing the same or similar function, is consistent with the goal of avoiding any conflict of interest involving the use of such information in connection with a business or financial transaction of the member.

(b) In furtherance of the President's responsibilities under subsection (a), the President shall issue regulations regarding—

(1) periodic disclosure of information on the business and financial interests of each member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, including any business or financial relationship of a member with a foreign government, or any entity directed and controlled by a foreign government, or with any corporation or other commercial entity doing business outside the United States; and

(2) the circumstances in which, based on such business or financial interests, a member shall not be provided classified information.

(c) The regulations required by subsection (b) shall take effect not later than March 1, 1990, and shall be provided to the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives at least 30 days prior to such effective date.

PRESIDENTIAL REPORT ON COORDINATION OF DRUG INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 704. Not later than April 1, 1990, the President shall submit to Congress a report describing how intelligence activities relating to narcotics trafficking can be integrated, including coordinating the collection and analysis of intelligence information, ensuring the dissemination of relevant intelligence information to officials with responsibility for narcotics policy and to agencies of the United States Government responsible for interdiction, eradication, law enforcement, and other counternarcotics activities, and coordinating and controlling all counternarcotics intelligence activities.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RICHARDSON

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICHARDSON: at the end of the bill, add the following:

"RESTRICTION ON SUPPORT FOR MILITARY OR PARAMILITARY OPERATIONS IN CAMBODIA

"SEC. 705. None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended to support military or paramilitary operations by the Noncommunist Cambodian Resistance if, after the date of enactment of this Act, quantities of arms, ammunition or other military equipment are provided by the Noncommunist Cambodian Resistance to the military forces of Democratic Kampuchea (known as the Khmer Rouge) or if the Noncommunist Cambodian Resistance engages in joint military operations with military forces of Democratic Kampuchea."

Mr. RICHARDSON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the reason that I have this concern is that in this legislation that we are debating today we are authorizing contingencies for the agency. Funds are not restricted. They are used at the discretion of the President, and basically, does not require congressional approval. Therefore, I am offering this amendment, or considering offering this amendment for the possibility that such funds may be used for this purpose. The amendment that I have is directed at the Khmer Rouge, and basically we have had, recently, a breakdown of the peace negotiations between the non-Communist forces, the Khmer Rouge, the various parties involved in the Cambodia dispute.

However, most importantly, the telling cruelty of the Khmer Rouge has been manifested once again. The failure of the peace conference, the Khmer Rouge proved to be once again, the bloc that, once again, disrupted negotiations. They refused to accept language that condemned their past genocide. They refused to be linked to a process of peace.

I am concerned about our policy in that region, and the reason I am raising this matter is to, once again, hope that American policy somehow directly or indirectly does not link up with the Khmer Rouge.

Now, it is my understanding that in the Foreign Affairs authorization bill of last year, there is a provision that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] offered which reads as follows:

Prohibition on certain assistance to the Khmer Rouge—notwithstanding any other provision of law, none of the funds made available to carry out this section may be obligated or expended for the purpose or with the effect of promoting, sustaining, or augmenting, directly or indirectly, the capacity of the Khmer Rouge or any of its members to conduct military or paramilitary operations in Cambodia or elsewhere in Indochina.

My amendment, basically, says that should there be this eventuality, there would be no military or paramilitary assistance that would go to the Khmer Rouge, through an error of joint military operation by the non-Communist forces or through other factors by which American assistance might in some way be used by the Khmer Rouge, and in that event, link up the United States and those that we are backing with this dreaded community of not just traitors, but killers, that right now are threatening any kind of peace in Cambodia.

I would like, if I could, to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], if in his judgment, the foreign assistance legislation that passed in 1987 covers the intelligence concern that I have raised in this amendment.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman, my good friend and our valued colleague on the committee, this gentleman is not the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], but he was originally from New York.

However, I appreciate and concur in the gentleman's concerns, as I am sure all Members, both on and off the committee do.

I would say to the gentleman, it is my understanding as well, that the gentleman's amendment is not necessary, that section 908 of the International Security and Development Act of 1985, I believe, already provides that no funds can be used to directly or indirectly promote, sustain, or augment the military or paramilitary capacity of the Khmer Rouge, a broader prohibition than the gentleman's amendment would impose, and accordingly, the amendment of the gentleman, it seems to this gentleman, is not necessary and need not be offered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman is saying in this amendment that he just read does cover intelligence activities?

Mr. BEILENSON. If the gentleman will continue yielding, that is this gentleman's understanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we get the States confused and this gentleman gets the names confused, so now that all Members are thoroughly confused, I agree with the gentleman from California that the concern of the gentleman from New Mexico is covered by existing law.

No Member supports the Khmer Rouge directly or indirectly, and it is a matter of considerable concern for our committee and other relevant committees, to see that the Khmer Rouge does not receive any benefit from any programs whatsoever, in view of their record.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, let me add that the reason I spoke of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is that the gentleman very much wanted to speak on this provision, and regrettably I do not see him.

Mr. Chairman, in the wake of the failure of the Paris Conference on Cambodia, all parties involved in the Cambodian conflict appear increasingly entrenched. The possibility of civil war is greater than ever. The United States must assure that, should United States military assistance be made available to the non-Communist Cambodian resistance, none of this assistance would fall into the hands of the Khmer Rouge.

During its bloody 7-year reign, the Khmer Rouge presided over the murder of over 1 million Cambodians. This was genocide on the greatest scale.

Throughout the Paris conference the Khmer Rouge refused to accept language in the accord condemning their murderous rule. To this day, the Khmer Rouge continues to defend its actions in Cambodia. Moreover, there is no evidence to suggest that the Khmer Rouge's genocidal agenda has been altered in the least.

In the Foreign Assistance Authorization Act, passed on June 29 of this year, there was a recognition of the need to preclude any U.S. assistance from reaching the Khmer Rouge or from assisting its activities.

U.S. policy in the region must be clear. In the wake of the Vietnamese withdrawal, the United States should do all it can to support the Democratic aspirations of the Cambodian people and to prevent the return of the Khmer Rouge—a return to the killing fields.

By precluding any assistance to the non-Communist resistance should the Khmer Rouge benefit the United States is stating firmly that the Khmer Rouge's return to power is unacceptable.

H.R. 2655, FOREIGN AID AUTHORIZATION, PASSED BY THE HOUSE JUNE 29, 1989

(b) PROHIBITION ON CERTAIN ASSISTANCE TO THE KHMER ROUGE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, none of the funds made available to carry out this section may be obligated or expended for the purpose or with the effect of promoting, sustaining, or augmenting, directly or indirectly, the capacity of the Khmer Rouge or any of its members to conduct military or paramilitary operations in Cambodia or elsewhere in Indochina.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, in light of the assurances of the Chairman and the ranking member.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SOLOMON

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SOLOMON: Page 19. after line 2. insert the following new section:

SEC. 705. RANDOM DRUG TESTING.

The Director of the Central Intelligence Agency shall require random drug testing of officers and employees of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, let me say I will not read those prepared remarks, but I would like to say this amendment is one in a series that I am offering to all department authorization bills which does require random drug testing of all Federal employees. I do so, without passing anything on the CIA, because the CIA most certainly has an excellent program whereby they can identify illegal drug users, and that program does work very effectively. However, to be fair to all the other Federal employees, if we are going to include some, we must include all. That is what my amendment would do.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has produced a very good amendment. It is consistent with the amendment he has offered to other agencies, and the Republican side is prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his support.

To finalize my remarks, Mr. Chairman, we all know interdiction is important, if we are to stop the terrible drug war.

□ 1520

We know that education of the American people is terribly important. We know that rehabilitation of drug addicts is terribly important. But all these things that we can do will not help unless we stop the demand of the 20 million-plus Americans using illegal drugs. Therefore, I think the American Government has the obligation to set the example.

We already have in the military the fact that 8 years ago 27 percent of the All-Volunteer military admitted to using illegal drugs. Today, because of a random testing program extensively used throughout the military, that figure has dropped to 4.5 percent. That is an 82 percent drop. Think what we could do to the demand for drugs in this country if we could reduce the demand to 82 percent of all the American people. We could win the war on drugs, and the Members can be of help today by agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am once again offering an amendment which is designed to change the emphasis in the war on drugs. I believe, and so does a majority of the American people, that to turn the tide in the drug war, we need to address the problem of the drug user as well as the drug supplier.

Let us face the facts, we could eliminate every drug lord in the world today and new ones would pop up tomorrow because of the enormous profits involved in this deathly trade. What we have to do is eliminate the market—eliminate the demand.

As the largest employer in the Nation, the Federal Government has a compelling interest in establishing reasonable conditions of employment. It also has the responsibility to set the standard for the private sector. How can we expect the public to be drug free, if we are not? That is why I will be offering this same amendment to all authorizing bills for our Federal agencies and departments.

I am asking that we require the Central Intelligence Agency to randomly test its officers and employees for illegal substance use. Because of the nature of their business, clearly, the CIA should have a random drug testing policy in effect.

The CIA does have an excellent program in place that effectively identifies illegal drug users, but they should be included in our effort to randomly test all Federal employees out of fairness and to set an example.

Mr. Chairman, if you want proof that random drug testing works, just look what happened in our military when it was put into effect. In 1982, by their own admission, 27 percent of our entire U.S. Armed Forces were on drugs. Yet, by 1988, after the implementation of random drug testing programs, the percentage of drug use in the military dropped to 4.5 percent. That is an 82-percent reduction.

The test results are in. And we know that random drug testing works. Now it should be implemented Government-wide and then we could begin to urge the private sector to join in the fight. As far as we know illegal drug use is seriously impairing America's work force. We know the majority of the American public supports penalties for drug users. We know that something must be done. If you support my amendment, something will be done. Support a drug-free Federal Government.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, let me respond breifly to the gentleman's remarks and to the amendment which he has proffered to the Committee of the Whole. I feel it is incumbent upon those of us who oversee the CIA to respond at least briefly before we accede, as we shall, to the gentleman's amendment.

Let me say that I was a little disturbed by the gentleman's amendment—not a lot, but a little. On the one hand, it does deal with what I am sure we all consider to be the most immediate threat to national security these days, which is the drug problem. On the other hand, by mandating what may be an unnecessary and redundant program, it probably does not make as much sense as it might when applied to other agencies of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, this is basically why this gentleman has asked to be recognized: Members should know that the CIA already maintains an active drug awareness and prevention program, and is actively committed to preventing and detecting drug use among CIA employees.

The CIA's drug detection program includes background investigations of all applicants, specifically focussing on whether applicants may use or abuse drugs or alcohol. Applicants are also given medical examinations that screen urine and blood samples. Pyschological assessments are made of applicants to determine behavior that could indicate abuse of drugs or alcohol. Finally, every applicant is given a polygraph examination to determine whether the applicant has abused drugs or alcohol.

The CIA's program for a drug-free workplace does not end with the acceptance of an applicant for employment. The agency continues to be vigilant against drug abuse among its employees. Current agency policy requires that new employees be subject to reinvestigation after 3 years. This reinvestigation includes another medical examination and another polygraph examination that specifically covers substance abuse during the time of employment at the agency. Agency employees are also subject to periodic routine reinvestigations. A specific issue polygraph examination and/or a fitness-for-duty medical examination may be conducted at any time if there are any indications of drug abuse.

So the gentleman suggests that there may be a point of diminishing returns. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has concluded presumably that that point has not been reached at the CIA, and I will not quarrel with his conclusion at this time. With some ambivalence, therefore, and with the understanding that the Director of Central Intelligence would be free to fashion a reasonable program to meet what he determines may be the scope of the problem, I will not oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for offering the amendment, but I did want to take this opportunity to make clear to the membership that the agency already takes this problem very seriously, and it has had in effect for some time, I think, quite a substantial program directed toward those ends.

Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the forbearance of the Members. I was in another meeting, and as a member of the Intelligence Committee, I was not able to get here for general debate on the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990. I am just here now to say that having been a part of the considerations and having been a part of the committee, I want to put on record my thanks and my regard for our chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], and our ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

We have had a difficult year in this first session of the 101st Congress. However, I believe, and I think others believe, that within the Select Committee on Intelligence of the House we have had a very good year. We have had some rather difficult times previously, especially due to the Iran-Contra affair. I think every Member has made every effort on both sides of the aisle to put these things behind us. We have seen a coming together, and we have seen an attitude of responsibility and attempts definitely to work together.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say to our committee chairman that I support the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990, and I look forward to carrying out the pieces of this act, knowing in fact that this is the type of committee where we do have bipartisanship and where we leave our difficulties at the door whenever possible.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT: Page 19, after line 2, insert the following new section:

SEC. 705. BUY-AMERICAN REQUIREMENT.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE DIRECTOR.—If the Director, with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce, determines that the public interest so requires, the Director is authorized to award to a domestic firm a contract that, under the use of competitive procedures, would be awarded to a foreign firm, if—

(1) the final product of the domestic firm will be completely assembled in the United States;

(2) when completely assembled, not less than 50 percent of the final product of the domestic firm will be domestically produced; and

(3) the difference between the bids submitted by the foreign and domestic firms is not more than 6 percent.

In determining under this subsection whether the public interest so requires, the Director shall take into account United States international obligations and trade relations.

(b) LIMITED APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply to the extent to which—

(1) such applicability would not be in the public interest;

(2) compelling national security considerations require otherwise; or

(3) the United States Trade Representative determines that such an award would be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(c) LIMITATION.—This section shall apply only to contracts for which—

(1) amounts are authorized by this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) to be made available; and

(2) solicitations for bids are issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Director shall report to the Congress on contracts covered under this section and entered into with foreign entities in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 and shall report to the Congress on the number of contracts that meet the requirements of subsection (a) but which are determined by the United States Trade Representative to be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party. The Director shall also report to the Congress on the number of contracts covered under this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) and awarded based upon the parameters of this section.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) DIRECTOR.—The term "Director" means the Director of Central Intelligence.

(2) DOMESTIC FIRM.—The term "domestic firm" means a business entity that is incorporated in the United States and that conducts business operations in the United States.

(3) FOREIGN FIRM.—The term "foreign firm" means a business entity not described in paragraph (2).

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I will start this out by commending the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] of Xelienople, PA.

I want to take off before I explain my amendment and pick up on the words of the gentleman form Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] in the House earlier. I would hope that our intelligence network would begin to focus on what the American people consider to be our greatest threat. In a national poll, the American people rated Japan a greater threat to our national security than either the Soviet Union or communism. They fear the economic intrusion, the investments of a great foreign power. They are very concerned about what Congress's efforts would be to not only analyze but abate that tremendous invasion. So I would say, before I explain my amendment, that when we keep shouting about "the big bad bear" down here, I think we had better start looking at the big Rising Sun and the shadow that is beginning to be cast all over this country.

I lost another 3,000 jobs just today when the van plants in Ohio closed. I would like to ask some Member of the House what the exact cost of a General Motors van is inside Korea or what tariffs and duties and taxes, there are on a General Motors van in Japan.

So, Mr. Chairman, I will not belabor the debate further. I have offered a standard "buy America" amendment. It has been approved to most authorization bills, and I would hope that the Committee would find favor with it and approve it.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, the committee has had an opportunity, I would say to the gentleman and to other Members, to examine the gentleman's amendment. We note among other things that the amendment includes an exemption for compelling national security considerations, which I take it will resolve any serious problems the agency or others might have with it.

With that understanding, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the aisle at least have no serious objections to the amendment and can accept it.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON]. We think the gentleman has produced a good amendment, and we are happy to accept it on this side.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's acceptance of the amendment, and let me say that my comments earlier about Pennsylvania were made just to try to get the gentleman's attention. I say to the gentleman this: "We wish you were in our region, Mr. HYDE. We know where you are from."

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In reading the gentleman's amendment, in subparagraph (A), may I interpret that to mean that the Director must have the approval of the USTR and the Secretary of Commerce to go forward under the amendment with his "buy America" award?

Mr. TRAFICANT. No; I do not particularly feel it is compelling unless it would be an issue that might require another section of the amendment, that national security section, to be on consideration.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask, will the gentleman take a look at the language? It says, "If the Director, with the concurrence of the U.S. Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce determines * * *."

My interpretation of that language would be that if he does not have the concurrence, then he is not authorized to award that contract under the special conditions.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, as the amendment is drafted, it would appear that, but would not be the intent of the amendment to limit the hands of the Director, and I would like to make that clarification here, and I ask unanimous consent to have that placed into the amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] state the language that he wishes to have inserted in the amendment?

Mr. TRAFICANT. "If the director with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and Secretary of Commerce determines that the public interest to requires"; that the language I would like to have changed where the director can make that determination and without such concurrence.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] wish to strike "with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce"?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Only if, in fact, that section is being considered and opposed by the gentleman. If the language in its current form would be acceptable.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I tell the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] that the language, as it is written, is acceptable to me, because it requires the concurrence.

If the gentleman seeks unanimous consent, I will certainly object to a change.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I certainly withdraw my unanimous-consent request to make such change.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to make a few concluding remarks about the subject of American policy toward Angola, and to respond to some of the commentary that occurred in the course of general debate with respect to the human rights dimension of American policy.

The issue of human rights, as it relates to our Angolan policy, is an important one, not because the Angolan Government has not itself been engaged in very serious violations of fundamental human rights, but because the entire case that has been painted in support of our policy of giving assistance to Mr. Savimbi has been based upon the characterization of him as an individual who shared and embraced American democratic values and basic human rights commitments. It is my concern that much of that characterization has been based upon myth and upon very substantial public relations efforts in this country that bears little relationship to the reality, and I do not think it makes sense for American policy to continue to be guided on the basis of myth.

I have spoken for a number of years to my colleagues about authoritarianism in Angola, as well as authoritarianism in other African states. The point that I have tried to make with respect to Angola is that the authoritarianism of the MPLA government is not a unique fact; authoritarianism is alive and well also in Jonas Savimbi's UNITA. In fact, until almost the moment he began to receive American assistance in 1986, Mr. Savimbi was publicly on record as favoring the Chinese socialist model and believing that, and I quote, "there was no fundamental ideological conflict between the two parties," MPLA and UNITA.

It is most significant that, in the past several months, independent human rights organizations and some prominent former supporters of UNITA, groups that have no brief whatsoever for the MPLA government in Angola, have made detailed revelations of the lack of democracy and respect for human rights in UNITA.

Among these revelations, the most recent is an article that appeared in the National Review of August 18, hardly an apologist for the Angolan Government. It was written by the journal's roving correspondent, Radek Sikorski. Sikorski, who perceives UNITA as representing a major political constituency in Angola and a movement with significant military and organizational achievements, nevertheless concluded after a lengthy personal visit to Jamba, and I quote:

Let us have no illusions. Savimbi cannot bear men of independent thought around him, and, instead of sharing our wariness of autocratic power, his officers accord him the reverence due to a traditional despotic African chief. "UNITA, c'est moi," Savimbi can say with more reason than Louis XIV could ever have dreamt of for France * * * The last UNITA Congress in 1986 was a farce.

Mr. Sikorski continues:

Allegations of human rights abuses within UNITA are too persistent and come from sources too well placed to ignore.

Finally, in passages which I would strongly commend to some of my colleagues who have been approached by UNITA's $2 million per year lobby, the author says:

To begin with, UNITA officers, including top leaders, are compulsive liars. Lying is so pervasive one comes to think that many UNITA officers have not assimilated the concept of integrity or understood the dangers of forefeiting trust.

In the end, Radeski portrays both MPLA and UNITA as "two ramshackle totalitarianisms" while expressing hope that a compromise between them "might create some space in which the Angolan people would have room to breathe."

There is other recent evidence of human rights violations by UNITA.

Mr. Chairman, I would refer, first of all, to the Human Rights Watch investigation of "Violations of the Laws of War by Both Sides" in Angola, and again I make the point in full acknowledgment that there have been human rights violations on both sides, and I would also note that we do not use American tax dollars to support that side. We do send American tax dollars to Mr. Savimbi, and that Human Rights Watch contains several highly disturbing conclusions:

(a) That UNITA indiscriminately deploys land mines against civilians;

(b) That UNITA has taken hundreds of foreigners hostage;

(c) That UNITA has captured thousands of civilians and conscripted them as combatants or unpaid agricultural labor;

(d) That UNITA has indiscriminately and deliberately attacked and killed civilians in government-controlled areas, and attacked and killed civilians in government-controlled areas, and attacked medical facilities and burned civilian homes; and

(e) That UNITA has deliberately attempted to starve civilians;

(2) British journalist Fred Bridgland wrote a very supportive biography of Jonas Savimbi whose cover featured statements by Ronald Reagan, Senator Robert Dole and Jeanne Kirkpatrick. He and his book were presented to Congress two years ago by the UNITA lobby. No Western journalist has followed UNITA as long or is thought to have had such good access to UNITA as Bridgland. Yet on March 12, 1989 Bridgland wrote in the London Daily Telegraph that his own argument "that UNITA Offered Angola some sort of democratic future * * * began to look pretty thin". The day before he told British TV, that he believed 80 to 90 percent of what UNITA dissidents Sousa Jamba and Chingunji have been saying about extensive UNITA political repression. Even the State Department characterizes UNITA "as it exists in the bush today as a basically authoritarian movement".

(3) The main allegations that have been made by Fred Bridgland, the UNITA dissidents in London and Lisbon, as well as other journalists and professors, follow:

(a) Bridgland writes that "Numerous UNITA officials have 'disappeared'," and that "According to sources, few Western governments doubt that the men are dead, probably executed". Among the most prominent mentioned by Bridgeland and others are (1) Jorge Sangumba, former Foreign Secretary of UNITA, (2) Antonio Vakulukuta, an ethnic leader who has been reported to have been beated to death, (3) Waldemar Pires Chindondo, former Chief of Staff, and (4) Jonatao Chingunji, former UNITA leader said by his grandson Dino Chingunji and by "reliable sources" who have spoken to Amnesty International to have been beaten to death along with his wife. In most cases these disappearances followed reports of Savimbi perceiving these individuals as a political threat. According to the State Department, "Jorge Sangumba dropped out of sight in 1982, Antonio Vakulukuta in 1986; evidence about their fate is inconclusive. We have no independent information on the fate of Janatao Chingunji".

(b) Other prominent UNITA officials are also reported to have been demoted, detained and even tortured under orders from Savimbi. The most recent case is that of Tito Chingunji, a close friend of Bridgland's who was dismissed as Foreign Secretary last November. According to Bridgland, who visited Jamba in late December, Chingunji looked "extremely nervous" and "From sources I do trust very much, I've heard that there was a kind of trial, and that four very senior members of the UNITA Politburo demanded of Tito that he confess to crimes of witchcraft and plotting to overthrow Savimbi. People who were there have told me privately that they heard screams. And I think one can only draw one's own conclusions from that kind of description". In addition, former members of the UNITA youth organization and office in Lisbon have said that Wilson dos Santos, a prominent leader who accompanied Savimbi to the U.S. in 1986 has been demoted and cannot interact freely with others in Jamba.

(c) According to Bridgland, "The theme of witchcraft runs through the whole UNITA tragedy, unspoken to outsiders but a reality in the lives of people. Allegations of witchcraft can easily be made against people who are politically "difficult"—just as they were in medieval Europe." Specifically, he writes that "Amnesty International has the names of at least 12 people burned to death on public bonfires at Jamba, the UNITA headquarters, in September 1983 * * *. One woman, Aurora Katalayo, was thrown into the flames carrying her child; she was the widow of former UNITA interior minister Mr. Mateus Katalayo, executed the previous year. According to Amnesty, one entire family was consumed on the bonfires—Mr. Joao Kalitanui, his wife Isabel, their three children aged seven to sixteen, and a twelve year old niece". This account is supported by Ermelindo Kanjungu, a UNITA dissident in Lisbon whose father is said to be Savimbi's office manager, who told Portugal's press last year that he personally witnessed the burning and that it was directed by Savimi. Amnesty International included the case in its Annnual Report last year.

(d) UNITA dissidents in Lisbon last year revealed a secret "Practical Guide to the Cadre", a set of lessons taught to a small number of leading UNITA cadres at the Command Kapessi Kafundanga Study Center in Jamba. A leading academic authority on Africa recently wrote that the guide's authenticity had been confirmed by a high UNITA representative. This guide emphasizes a Soviet-style "democratic centralism" for Angola, and stresses the preeminent role of the political police and the secret goal of overthrowing the MPLA Government rather than sharing power with it. The followng quotes give the flavor of this Marxist-Leninist style document.

"Democratic centralism means that the top decides and the base carries out the orders through the cadres", "The grand bourgeoisie is the class that oppresses the other classes in society. It is the class that is involved with international imperialism", "The idea of reconciliation is part of our tactical position. But it does not form part of our strategy, because it is not possible".

At this point, I would like to insert into the RECORD a House Subcommittee on Africa staff analysis of UNITA's response to some of these allegations:

REBUTTALS TO UNITA RESPONSES TO ALLEGATIONS OF SERIOUS HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES

UNITA: Bridgland has written a letter to the N.Y. Times saying that its reporting on the alleged abuses by UNITA attributes opinions to him that he does not share.

Response: Bridgland's letter covers minor inaccuracies and do not touch the major areas of political executions, witchburning and lack of democracy that he raised in both his own March 12th London Telegraph article and his appearance on British TV the previous evening.

UNITA: Tito Chingunji is alive and well as Deputy Secretary-General of the Party. He has met privately with Western politicians, carried a pistol, and publicly denied allegations about his status.

Response: Concern about Chingungi voiced by Bridgland who recently saw him at Jamba as well as his nephew must be taken seriously. Under Savimbi's control in the isolated Jamba headquarters, he cannot be expected to speak freely. In Government circles it is generally recognized that he has been demoted and is believed to be a threat by Savimbi.

UNITA: With regard to charges of political executions, Dinho Chingunji's grandfather and his wife died of natural causes, and the dates of their deaths are being established. Vakulukuta died of an uncontrolled hemhorrage from his nose en route to a hospital. Jorge Sangumba is alive and working somewhere in the north. General Vinama, known as Chendo, died in a freak accident falling under the wheels of his truck after climbing back into it. Col. Waldemar (Chindondo) is alive and commanding the northern forces.

Response: UNITA has not produced any of the people alleged to have been killed. Assertions that four died of natural causes cannot simply be accepted given the range of testimony to the contrary. Certainly the causes of death mentioned by UNITA seem extremely unusual.

UNITA: The alleged witch burnings never took place. We have never heard of Joao Kalitangue and his family. Aurora Katalaio and her husband had died in an MPLA attack before their alleged "burning".

Response: Amnesty International states the case of Aurora Katalyo, one of at least 12 people who were burned to death at a public bonfire in Jamba in September 1983 was considered sure enough for inclusion in the organization's annual report last October. This is based on eyewitness testimony.

UNITA: Wilson dos Santos is currently director of the National Press and head of the Television and Video Department, and a member of the Central Committee and Political Bureau.

Response: This is a clear demotion from his previous leadership role as a key UNITA diplomat. Until he can leave Jamba and speak freely—and without fears for his family—UNITA's explanation cannot simply be accepted. In this respect the case is like Tito Chingunji's.

UNITA: All of these charges are part of an MPLA disinformation campaign.

Response: The charges are coming from UNITA supporters, members, and Amnesty International. UNITA supporters critical of the organization have made clear they are also opposed to similar practices by the MPLA Government.

UNITA: Bridgland received an unauthorized $4,000 from Tito Chingunji. This taints his case.

Response: Bridgland has, through his literary agent, denied that he received any unauthorized funds.

I am also inserting some very relevant articles by Fred Bridgland and Radek Sikorski, including the latter's exchanging letters with a UNITA representative.

SAVIMBI: FALLEN IDOL OF ANGOLA

(By Fred Bridgland)

Feted in the White House by President Reagan, honoured by black American churches, on dining terms with South Africa's President Botha and allowed access to Britain by Mrs. Thatcher's Government, Dr. Jonas Savimbi, leader of the Angolan rebel group, UNITA, has been the darling of the Right.

But now the West's game-plan for Southern Africa is threatened by new allegations of serious human rights abuses against Dr. Savimbi.

He has been seen as a heroic figure, fighting Angola's Soviet and Cuban imposed Marxist dictatorship which threatened the whole of the region. Savimbi may now have become a fallen idol.

The charges, including the burning to death of women as witches and the beating to death of a former UNITA foreign secretary, have alarmed Washington and Pretoria where Dr. Savimbi has been treated as a key ally.

Others, including this correspondent in a biography of the 54-year-old guerrilla leader, argued that UNITA offered Angolans some sort of democratic future that begins to look pretty thin unless he can prove the allegations are lies.

The main charges were made last night on Channel 4's The World This Week by UNITA defectors seeking political asylum in Britain. Their move followed the alleged detention and torture by UNITA last year of Mr. Pedro "Tito" Chingunji, the movement's Washington-based foreign secretary.

One defector, Mr. Sousa Jamba, a writer who last year won the Shiva Naipaul prize for literature, told The Sunday Telegraph "I am one of many UNITA members who have kept quiet until now about killings inside the movement in the interests of the wider struggle against Cuban and Soviet domination.

"There are others who would like us to say nothing until the MPLA [Angola's Marxist government] and UNITA are around the table in Luanda with Cubans sailing in shiploads to Havana each day. But Tito's arrest has stretched our loyalty beyond the breaking point: if we wait others may die."

The story of another defector, Mr. Dinho Chingunji, Tito's nephew, is perhaps the most nightmarish. He argues that Tito's life is in grave danger because seven Chingunji family members have already been murdered over the years as Dr. Savimbi began to see them as a threat.

Dinho alleged that his grandparents (Tito's parents) were beaten to death on Dr. Savimbi's orders. Amnesty International said it has evidence from three reliable sources that Jonatao, 69 and Violeta, 60, were clubbed by rifle butts, kicked and then run over by a truck.

In the mid-sixties when UNITA began fighting the colonial Portuguese, Dr. Savimbi led the guerrillas in the bush while Jonatao organised the clandestine movement in the towns.

Four of Jonatao's sons died between 1970 and 1976 while fighting with Dr. Savimbi. Two, David "Samwimbila" Chingunji and Samuel "Kafundanga" Chingunji, are now outshone only by Dr. Savimbi in the homage paid in UNITA song and poem.

But Dinho Chingunji alleges that at least three of the four brothers and possibly all of them were killed on Dr. Savimbi's orders. He says his own father, Kafundanga, UNITA's first military chief-of-staff, was poisoned in 1974.

After moving to the bush in 1976, as the MPLA established itself as the civil power in Angola, Jonatao began to have suspicions about his sons' deaths. When he challenged the UNITA leader on this matter and on his cavalier attitude toward women, Dr. Savimbi accused Violeta of practising witchcraft and ordered the old couple's deaths.

The theme of witchcraft runs through the whole UNITA tragedy, unspoken to outsiders but a reality in the lives of the people. Allegations of witchcraft can easily be made against people who are politically "difficult"—just as they were in medieval Europe. And when another Chingunji sibling, this time a daughter, Shika, was executed in 1983 she was first accused of being a witch, according to Dinho.

Amnesty International has the names of at least 12 people burned to death on public bonfires at Jamba, the UNITA headquarters, in September 1983. Mr. Jamba said his young nieces and nephews were part of the crowd ordered to witness the spectacle.

One woman, Aurora Katalayo, was thrown into the flames carrying her child: she was the widow of former UNITA interior minister, Mr. Mateus Katalayo, executed the previous year. According to Amnesty, one entire family was consumed on the bonfires—Mr. Joao Kalitangui, his wife Isabel, their three children aged seven to 16, and a 12-year old niece.

Numerous UNITA officials have "disappeared". According to sources, few Western governments doubt that the men are dead, probably executed. Among the most prominent was former UNITA foreign secretary, Mr. Jorge Sangumba. He was recalled to Angola from overseas in 1978 and has not been seen since. UNITA has consistently stated that Mr. Sangumba is alive.

"In fact, Sangumba was beaten to death by Savimbi's secret police in 1979," said Mr. Jamba, formerly a UNITA political commissar. "Savimbi has been able to convince journalists and others that he is alive."

Mr. Jamba said that Mr. Sangumba was popular on his return to Jamba, and some people began suggesting that he should be acting president in Dr. Savimbi's absence. That was probably the reason for his downfall.

But he made a slip when he bedded an under-age beauty and a commission convicted him of corrupting a minor. After Mr. Sangumba's subsequent execution, Mr. Jamba says he was thrown into an unmarked grave and all copies of a small book he had written Know Your Party, were confiscated and burnt.

Among other UNITA leaders believed by Western governments—and confirmed by Dinho Chingunji and Mr. Jamba—to have been executed are Mr. Waldemar Pires Chindondo, a former chief-of-staff, and Mr. Antonio Vakulukuta, leader of the once powerful Kwanyama tribal faction in UNITA. According to International Red Cross reports, Mr. Vakulukuta died a lingering "Bikostyle" death after suffering severe beatings.

The UNITA defectors allege that Tito Chingunji too was accused of witchcraft when he flew into Jamba from Washington last November for a conference on the implications of the New York Accords, which provide for the phased withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and South African forces from neighbouring Namibia starting in three weeks.

The "evidence" was a white surplice and two candlesticks found in the luggage of Chingunji, a devout Christian.

"I warned Tito that Savimbi would 'get' him just like the rest of the family," said Dinho. "But Tito believed he had done such a good job in Washington that Savimbi could not move against him.

I met Dr. Savimbi on December 21, immediately after his return from Pretoria where he had been told by President Botha that all South Africian aid to UNITA was being cutoff.

I told Dr. Savimbi I had made the journey because many people were puzzled by Tito's apparent demotion. He exploded and shouted: "You have come here to insult me, and I have never accepted to be insulted by anyone. Do you think you can still come to Africa to patronise us? I am so insulted by what you have said that maybe you should just get out of here. . . ."

During a further two hours of loud admonitions, Dr. Savimbi at one point held his palm outwards and said there was no blood on his hands and said he was not responsible for the killings of Tito's relatives. This struck me as strange, since I had not raised the question.

US weapons supplies now enable UNITA to maintain leverage on the MPLA, but Congress is sensitive about covert arms supplies and human rights abuses. It could therefore turn awkward if the allegations are reinforced. But UNITA is tough and resourceful, and even without American help it could turn Angola without Cuba into a new Beirut.

The United States and the Soviet Union, with their new found understanding on Africa, might therefore decide to hit heads together and allow elements in both the MPLA and UNITA who are sick of war to come together at the negotiating table.

THE MYSTIQUE OF SAVIMBI

(By Radek Sikorski)

"If it were bigger, I would only be attacking the rearguard, but this one we will destroy completely," Colonel Diogenes Implacável told me without taking his binoculars off a convoy coming down the road.

Implacável is UNITA's commander of the Bié front in central Angola. In front of us stretched a channa, a wide clearing overgrown by tall, yellow grass and bisected by the strategic Huambo-Bié highway, the highway that would have to be under firm MPLA control were the Soviet-backed regime ever to launch a new offense against UNITA. Twenty-one trucks loaded with food, ammunition, and soldiers, escorted by two Soviet BTR armored cars, drove along at the pace of two files of infantry walking beside the convoy. Five hundred and fifty UNITA guerrillas armed with American- and South African-supplied assault rifles, mortars, anti-tank rockets, and anti-craft missiles waited in a long line along the southern edge of the road. The assault squad was to open up only when the entire convoy came level with the ambush.

Winter days are short here, so by 3 p.m. the sun was already low, painting the channa in mellow orange. I was stealing toward the brow of a hillock overlooking the clearing when a single burst of automatic fire resounded along the road and a few bullets whined quietly over our heads—enemy bullets. Had we been spotted? Was our plan going awry already?

I made to crawl forward to the top of the hillock but at the same instant several powerful hands closed on my legs like steel clamps. Our UNITA minders were being obsessively overprotective of our safety. Over the cacophony of machine-gun fire, the tinny noise of field radios, and platoon commanders yelling hectic orders, came the shrill curses of my colleague, an American girl-photographer, who lay under a pile of our UNITA commandos protecting her from the hazards of battle with such zest that she emerged with a hand broken in two places, a sprained ankle, and serious bruises. Next she was waving her camera like an overhead slingshot, and they threw her on the ground again.

Our escort eventually mastered their initial panic and we went forward. The grass in the channa was on fire—the smoke so thick as to dim the sun—and we jumped through walls of burning undergrowth, running on the charred ground. The heat was so intense I feared my boots would melt.

The enemy infantry had run to the other edge of the bush and was firing at us with light machine guns. We soon learned what had happened. The soldiers in the convoy had spotted UNITA guerrillas hiding in the grass and opened fire. Both BTRs survived our attack—one escaped on the road to Bié and the other found cover in a stream depression and turned its heavy machine gun at us. Like a pneumatic drill, its thumping silenced the lesser noise.

Another hundred yards toward the highway and I made out in the thick smoke the contours of a truck which had been hit and which the guerrillas were looting with gusto. "The BTR is shooting, let's get out of here," one guerrilla shouted. "Never mind, let's get the sausages," the other yelled, motioning toward the Brazilian IFA truck, from which dozens of big white tins had spilled onto the asphalt. Having eaten only rice and canned bully beef for several weeks, we noted the contents of the truck with the joy of highway robbers. Bent double under fire, the guerrillas ran forward for their supper.

Suddenly, four men emerged through a wall of fire and smoke clutching the corners of a blanket weighted down by a heavy object, which turned out to be our first casualty. Blood spurted forth from the man's chest, and a mask of dust and smoke smeared with sweat gave his face an ashy, deathly pallor. His companions, their dark faces streaming with sweat, their bodies twisted under the load, tried to run, but tripped in lumps of grass. Even so, the rocking of the blanket when his comrades dragged him along the rough ground seemed to give him no more pain.

We inched forward, screaming and jostling with our minders, dodging bursts of bullets, passing groups of guerrillas emerging from the smoke with loot on their heads. When the smoke cleared on the high ground where the asphalt ran, three more dead trucks emerged, bits of their cargo stewn along behind them like guts. One was blazing, and the ammunition inside it exploded with the sound of nails being hammered into a tin. These were small caliber bullets piercing the sideplates of the truck and flying off in all directions. The gas tank burst in an orange fireball. Would the heavy shells go off next?

"Come back, come back, don't die for a picture!" our minders shouted in desperation.

A few corpses lay along the other side of the road—one fat as a Sumo wrestler. They wore Korean-made olive and brown camouflage clothes—enemy uniforms. I don't know how, but they already stank of death. The putrid smell of excrement mingled with that of burning diesel fuel and rubber. UNITA men ran up to them under direct fire and grabbed their guns.

The BTR was invisible in the clouds of smoke on the other side of the road, but its heavy machine gun was sweeping the road with a hail of bullets. Out of the corner of my eye I saw a man flip over onto the asphalt not thirty yards away. Slowly it dawned on me that this was not the way one throws oneself down for cover. Soon his raving and moaning confirmed that he had been hit.

"The MiGs will bomb! The BTR is coming! They're counterattacking!" our minders were running away into the bush. The racket of machine-gun was indeed growing and the bullets flew lower and denser over our heads. The enemy got a couple of mortars going, and soon the bursts of shells around us and the screams of our wounded announced that they had found their range. We retreated, since if the enemy retook the high ground of the road we would have been trapped in the kilometer of open space between the road and the bush, in which they would have had a clear field of fire.

It was getting dark by the time a long train of UNITA guerrillas walked down the bush path carrying their booty on their heads. Merry cries proclaimed that eight Kalashnikovs and four new light machine guns were also captured. An old suitcase grabbed from the burning IFA revealed the personnel files of a local party organization. Implacável's radio reports spoke of nine trucks destroyed in all. (I saw four.) Belatedly, he was sparkling with ideas on what he should have done for a complete victory. Had a minefield been laid down the northern side of the road, the enemy, not we, would have been trapped. Our losses were five wounded and one dead. The man who had lost consciousness from the chest wound, and who I thought had no chance, was to recover, but the medic died.

Suddenly, everybody became merry and spoke of the fight as if it had been a schoolboy prank. As tension eased with each step away from the highway we all became unnaturally hilarious. My story of how I kicked one of my minders in the midst of burning grass was welcomed by a roar of laughter as if this was the best anecdote in the world. We were all glad to be alive and now compensated for any sign of fear we may have shown half an hour before. The festive mood continued into the night, as the smell of spices and the sizzling of sausages roasted over fires hovered above our bush camp.

The ambush was to have been an operation in a larger plan—a lure for the 55th brigade garrisoning the nearby town of Chinguar on the Benguela railway. If the enemy sent a relief force to secure the highway. UNITA was to attack weakened Chinguar itself. I wondered what use Impacável would make of the captured party personnel files. But two days later everything changed. On June 22 UNITA's President Jonas Savimbi shook hands with his MPLA counterpart, Eduardo dos Santos, and the following day the radio announced that UNITA and MPLA delegations were negotiating face to face for the first time in 14 years. A ceasefire was coming into effect at midnight on June 24. We had seen what everybody hoped would be the last battle of the war.

Though it did not go according to plan, the ambush was a success, confirming that UNITA can readily sabotage its enemy's supply routes. The very fact that even in the heart of the country MPLA personnel will travel only in armed convoys which take many days to cover a couple of hundred kilometers testifies to UNITA's stamina. Although the MPLA occupies most cities—including all the provincial capitals—if the fighting resumed UNITA could expect to make gains on the ground once the Cubans withdraw from southern Angola in November. At the very least, UNITA's sixty thousand fighters could, if need be, deny the MPLA a secure grip on the countryside for another 14 years. UNITA cannot be eliminated, and this is surely why the MPLA is negotiating. What an achievement this represents one can appreciate only by looking back to 1975 and 1976 when the Cubans, with Soviet rockets and gunships, pushed Savimbi back into the bush, where he completed his long march with only a few dozen followers.

Today he holds vast stretches of territory in which his troops and trucks can travel in safety. Known to the Portuguese as the "end of the world," Unitaland in southern Angola is perhaps the most impressive guerrilla zone anywhere. Where ten years ago elephants and gazelles roamed virgin bush, today vast logistics bases sprawl, with broad avenues, electricity, and some of the best repair shops in Africa. UNITA doctors and paramedics can successfully perform advanced surgery; UNITA's intelligence service can chart dozens of enemy moves every day; while dozens of UNITA bush schools, though usually with only a blackboard and an enthusiastic teacher for assets, turn out graduates with more determination for self-improvement and greater academic qualifications than most American high schools do.

Moreover, slick press releases from UNITA's PR agents, quoting its leaders' earnest statements, promise that this is only the beginning. UNITA says it aspires to nothing less than making Angola the first democratic, free-market country on the continent. With its vast mineral resources, fertile soil, mild climate, and a leadership apparently committed to civilized values, is Angola about to turn into the success story Africa so badly needs?

To justify its $15-plus million of aid per year, the White House has accepted UNITA's ideals at face value. Though still shunned in European capitals, Savimbi has been feted in Washington as Africa's premier freedom-fighter—the pictures of his meeting with Ronald Reagan, George Bush, and George Shultz in January 1986 adorn every hut in Unitaland. It is largely thanks to U.S. Stingers and TOWs that UNITA is such a formidable force.

However, not all my observations during three months in the bush square with UNITA's high ideals. To begin with, UNITA officers, including top leaders, are compulsive liars—and it's not the innocent bragging one hears in every war zone, but a means of control. Whether it is the whereabouts of Savimbi or of a company commander, instead of pleading honest ignorance or the secrecy of war, UNITA men will lie through their teeth. Traveling with UNITA is like touring a showpiece Soviet collective farm. Everything is perfect, if the guides are to be believed, but if one tries to find out for oneself, going beyond the established program, armed guards will physically stop one "for protection," even when the enemy is five hundred miles away.

Battles and troop movements staged for the camera (on one occasion Colonel Implacável set up an entire artillery position to deceive me: the mortars had only two or three rounds each; real ones would have had at least six); bogus facilities such as the medical center in Jamba where, for the benefit of visitors' cameras, cripples engage in physiotherapy (although according to my companion, a former nurse's aide, the exercises had nothing to do with the injuries for which the men were supposedly being treated); soldiers and officials briefed on how to lie most plausibly—the full list of UNITA Potemkin villages would be too long to quote. Whether concerning the pettiest of details or the weightiest of policy matters, there is a great difference between UNITA's claims of high ideals, openness, and efficiency, and the reality of deceit, manipulation, and sloth. Lying is so pervasive one comes to think that many UNITA officers have not assimilated the concept of integrity or understood the dangers of forefeiting trust.

More seriously still, UNITA's structure and ideology are not as unambiguously democratic and pro-Western as an interview with Savimbi might suggest. Reading Savimbi's articles in the Salisbury Review or the Wall Street Journal with titles such as "Don't Sacrifice Angola on the Altar of Socialism," in which he propounds exemplary promarket ideals, one would think that the vast expanses of Unitaland are an oasis of free enterprise and commercial bustle. Yet in fact Unitaland is—uniquely among war zones I have visited—a currencyless war economy whose extreme centralization would impress a Ligachev or a Honecker. What kind of commercial spirit can have survived in UNITA ranks after 14 years in which the currency of the country has literally been banned (which, among other things, obviously restricts freedom of movement)?

In the beginning, there was Savimbi's word, and the word became UNITA. Savimbi stares from photographs on almost every wall. Savimbi slogans adorn every hut. Judging by the content of dozens of UNITA rallies and entertainment programs, Angola has only one noted poet and one lyricist—Jonas Savimbi. Savimbi salutes, Savimbi handshakes, even Savimbi-prescribed burial rites—through the force of his personality he has created an organization whose members think and act in unanimous imitation of the leader. Every quarter of an hour UNITA's "Voice of the Black Cockerel" radio station comes on with Mendelssohn's Wedding March followed by a triumphant citation: "Long live UNITA's great leader, the staunchest patriot, the inspired commander, the scourge of the Cubans and Russians, our beloved president, Comrade Doctor Jonas Malheiro Savimbi." Even his doctorate is an exaggeration—he completed two years of medical studies in Lisbon and then gained a first degree from the University of Lausanne.

Savimbi enjoys extraordinary powers for a democrat. The Mao caps of UNITA troops are not the only idea Savimbi brought from his training at the Nanking Military Academy. UNITA's structure is overtly Leninist, based on the same concept of democratic centralism—with a Congress, a Central Committee, and a Politburo nominally in charge of the party—but these institutions are mere appendages to Savimbi's personal rule. The last UNITA Congress, in 1986, was a farce in which 15,000 people agreed on everything unanimously and elected Savimbi by delirious acclamation—like the Supreme Soviet in the bad old days. Indeed, Savimbi can hire and fire Central Committee members at will like no Soviet leader since Stalin. Members of tribes other than Savimbi's Ovimbundu do hold high rank in UNITA, but real power rests with Savimbi's own clan within the Ovimbundu, his kinsmen from around Andulo in central Angola. In fact, UNITA is nepo-leninist, to coin a phrase. Savimbi has appointed to positions of real power members of his own family, either by blood or by marriage. General Ben Ben (the deputy chief of staff), General Bock (the chief of operations), and Colonel Pena (the secretary of economic planning)—UNITA's inner circle—are all Savimbi's nephews. "UNITA, c'est moi," Savimbi can say with more reason than Louis XIV could ever have dreamt of for France.

Allegations of human-rights abuses within UNITA are too persistent and come from sources too well placed to ignore. Savimbi's former interpreter, Sousa Jamba, and Dinhu Chingunji, the son of UNITA's first chief of staff, allege that Savimbi has over the years eliminated many of his rivals, most gruesomely in September 1983, when 13 people are said to have been burnt alive in Jamba. Witchcraft rather than accusations of revisionism allegedly provides the excuse, a ploy that is said to do down well with the illiterate and still-superstitious peasants. UNITA by evasion refused my proposal to investigate and refute the accusations. The burnings supposedly took place a hundred yards from the quarters where foreign visitors are lodged. It would have been impossible for them to have happened unnoticed by anyone staying there during the relevant period. I suggested that UNITA give me a list of any such visitors; I would then contact them after I left Angola, and ask them whether they had observed anything. The UNITA Politburo members I talked to didn't say the lists weren't available—they just never produced them.

The man who could provide conclusive evidence of what has happened, Brigadier Tito Chingunji, who was UNITA's representative in Washington and helped to get Savimbi into the White House, is said to have been tortured and held in Jamba against his will. (In a letter to a friend in Britain he inserted the phrase, "Doctor Savimbi protects me day and night.") Chingunji's nephew alleges that almost the entire family has been wiped out in Savimbi's vendetta (as a highly educated member of a traditional chief family in the Ovimbundu tribe, Chingunji was a potential rival to Savimbi), and Tito himself was lured back to Jamba only because UNITA held his wife. Members of the UNITA Politiburo repeatedly evaded my requests to see him. The CIA officer on the spot thought that the allegations were sufficiently grave to confront Savimbi, after which the officer was withdrawn from Jamba, with the United States apparently bowing to Savimbi's ultimatum. The two defectors and a journalist who revealed the allegations in the Western press have received repeated death threats.

Savimbi has ended up by believing his own propaganda and accepting the cult he has nurtured as a confirmation of his messianic mission. He cannot bear men of independent thought around him, and, instead of sharing our wariness of autocratic power, his officers accord him the reverence due to a traditional despotic African chief.

In short, ideology is something Savimbi can choose like the fashion of his soldiers' uniforms—patterned to please whoever provides the cloth. As one of his wittier slogans proclaims, "Weapons for the liberation of our country don't smell." I use Communist parallels in writing about him with reason: Savimbi was a Communist agitator in his early years in Lisbon, the Communist Party spirited him out of Portugal, he was trained in China, and, UNITA defectors assert, he remains an unrepentant Maoist.

Has he deceived us all these years? Perhaps, perhaps not. He may have undergone a genuine conversion. But what is real is not whatever ideology Savimbi may choose to embrace but his autocratic grip on the people within his domain, a power which he has for a long time used for good, but which he has an unlimited license to use for evil.

It is hard to criticize people who have resisted colonial and Communist oppression for so long, especially for one who set off for Angola as their sympathizer. It is just that after Lenin, Khomeini, and Ortega, we know that not every opponent of oppression is a freedom-fighter.

By right, Savimbi should have been independent Angola's first president, and had he not been cheated in 1975 he might have become one of Africa's most remarkable statesmen. He had the potential of rising above the common run of presidents-for-life, excellencies, and operatic emperors. If fair elections were held in Angola today Savimbi would almost certainly win. Somehow, though, one wonders whether Savimbi, with his despotic instincts, would have the patience for constitutional niceties. Would he ever relinquish power thereafter?

None of the above goes to say that we have no good geostrategic grounds to back UNITA, or even that UNITA is not by far the lesser evil for Angola. The MPLA is in a league of its own when it comes to doctrinaire policies, collectivist mismanagement, and mindless propaganda. Though under the Portuguese Angola exported coffee, fish, and other food, under the MPLA it spends scarce hard currency on imports—Moroccan sardines, for example, while Soviet trawlers ransack Angola's coastal waters. The Angolan economy, which grew at an impressive rate of 7 per cent per annum in the Sixties, has sunk into oblivion, partly because of the war, and partly because blanket nationalization chased away the technicians needed to run the country's industry. The recent interrogation of General Ochoa in Havana has revealed as much about the Angolan economy as about the probity of Castro's officers: blackmarketeering, smuggling, and extortion flourish in MPLA-run Angola. With 150 new cases of cholera every week, Luanda is hardly a paradise. Party hacks are the only thing in oversupply. Luanda National Radio sounds like Tirana on a bad day—during the ceasefire negotiations, the lying was so thick it was hard to believe Luanda was speaking of the same events as the BBC and VOA. MPLA officers tell their soldiers, in all seriousness, that if captured by UNITA they may fall into the cluches of its fearsome allies, a vicious white tribe called "Americans," who will cook and eat them.

Now a compromise between UNITA and the MPLA may be in the offing—and indeed a compromise between these two ramshackle totalitarianisms might create some space in which the Angolan people would have room to breathe. That may well be the nearest approach to freedom and democracy that current African social realities permit.

But more is at stake in this conflict than merely the future politics of Angola. Brezhnev began sending Soviet weapons and advisors to Angola with a view to consolidating this mineral-rich country as a bridgehead to the rest of southern Africa. Preventing this was the logic behind the U.S. support for the South African invasion of Angola in 1975 and the resumption of U.S. aid to UNITA under President Reagan. This logic still holds true.

We may keep Savimbi afloat to deny Angola to our enemies. We may work for UNITA to gain a permanent place in the regional balance of power. We can certainly admire Savimbi's energy, charisma, and craftiness. But let us have no illusions.

SAVIMBI: PATH TO DEMOCRACY

Radek Sikorski's article, "The Mystique of Savimbi" [Aug. 18], contradicts all firsthand reports on UNITA by prominent journalists, U.S. congressmen and senators, and European members of parliament. Does one man alone hold the truth? Or is he so motivated by personal biases and prejudice that he reports only what he wants to believe? The answer is obvious.

Sikorski spent several weeks with UNITA in a combat situation. The journey was dangerous and he was not always at liberty to pursue his own course. A professional journalist would have understood the limitations of a war environment and maintained his focus on the real issue: the struggle for democracty and human dignity.

It is true that pictures of President Savimbi are persistent throughout Free Angola, for he is our president; and symbolizes the hope for a free and democratic Angola. It is true that UNITA society operates without money or a market, but we are living in a transitory war situation. UNITA's liberated area is not a recognized state that can have money of its own, and we don't want it to be a second Angola. Of course we would welcome Mr. Sikorski's advice on how to run our economy under those circumstances.

Sikorski says Jamba is a stage; it is not real. Tell that to the hundreds of children who reside in Jamba's orphanage, or the thousands of children who have been educated in Jamba's schools, or the many Angolans who have been treated in the hospital, or have participated in political meetings. Mr. Sikorski makes a number of points that need to be reiterated. If they are understood, his baseless assertions evaporate without a trace. He wrote that since UNITA's near defeat in 1976:

The MPLA, despite sixty thousand Cuban troops, is in negotiation with UNITA because we cannot be eliminated militarily;

The UNITA liberated area, the Freeland of Angola, is the most impressive guerrilla zone in the world;

UNITA schools produce students . . . with more determination for self improvement and greater academic qualifications than most American high schools";

UNITA's minuscule number of doctors and scores of health paraprofessionals, many of whom are trained in the Freeland, "successfully perform advanced surgery";

UNITA technicians, many trained in the Freeland, operate some of the best repair facilities in Africa;

President Savimbi would have been Angola's first president if the Cuban intervention hadn't usurped the scheduled elections, and "if fair elections were held in Angola today, Savimbi would almost certainly win."

Mr. Sikorski has been taken for a ride by a few malcontents with tangential relationships to UNITA or to Dr. Savimbi. Dinko Chingunji is part of an illustrious UNITA family. The center for training political mobilizers is named after his father, Samuel Chingunji. His uncle David Chingunji is a celebrated UNITA martyr. Dinho, in contrast, has spent almost no time in Angola. He was raised in Zambia and spent two months in Free Angola en route to studies in Great Britain.

Tito Chingunji, Dinho's uncle, is the UNITA deputy secretary general and a ranking party member. When wild rumors began to circulate based on allegations linking President Savimbi to witchcraft. Tito held an international press conference to refute changes of his execution. He also met with Republican Representative Dan Burton, who confirmed his well-being. In fact, UNITA is trying hard to eradicate witchcraft through a balanced program of education and protection of those accused by fellow villagers.

Sikorski's linking of Dr. Savimbi to Communism would be laughable if it wasn't so pernicious. President Savimbi distributed Communist-authored anti-colonial leaflets in Portugal during his student days and escaped via the Communist underground for one reason and one reason only; the Communist led the anti-colonial struggle in Portugal and had the only escape route to the outside. Even a thorough democrat like Portuguese Prime Minister Mario Soares cooperated with them at that time.

If Sikorski's point is taken to its illogical conclusion, President Savimbi is a proponent of apartheid because geopolitical considerations led to a pragmatic relationship with South Africa.

Democracy means elections in Angola. Dr. Savimbi and UNITA have fought for elections. Dr. Savimbi is prepared to run on his record against any MPLA leader and let the Angolan people choose without foreign interference.

JARDO MUEKALIA,
UNITA Chief Representative to the U.S.

Mr. Muekalia may accuse me of bids till the cows come home, even while in the same breath he reiterates my praise of UNITA's genuine achievements.

A lie is a lie is a lie. During my ten weeks with UNITA hardly a day passed on which I was not lied to about something—large or small. UNITA has set up elaborate schemes to deceive journalists, both in Jamba and beyond. Fortunately, my companion throughout the journey—a veteran American war photographer—can confirm my account of UNITA's manipulation and deceit. Neither am I the first to air reservations about UNITA. The best authority on the organization, the author of a sympathetic and acclaimed biography of Savimbi, is now being subjected to crude UNITA threats of physical violence—all for voicing concern. For democrats, UNITA's leaders are somewhat graceless in dealing with criticism.

Savimbi learned Communist techniques of organization and control not only in his early days in Lisbon but primarily during his training in guerrilla war at the Nanking Military Academy in China, still under Mao; and anyone who cares to take a look at UNITA's structure and modus operandi will see that he learned his lessons well. It is classic Marxist-Leninist structure with not a vestige of democratic procedures. Unlimited power sooner or later results in abuses.

The point is not whether UNITA can run a repair shop or an orphanage—such things exist in Iran, China, and the Soviet Union, too—but whether its commitment to democracy is genuine or a hoax. The fact that UNITA demands elections proves little; the Ovimbundus—UNITA's main supporters—are Angola's largest tribe. Uncle Ho also demanded elections in the knowledge of assured success, but do we want any more of his kind of democrats?

I find it very interesting to note that Mr. Muekalia does not challenge my assertion that Jonas Savimbi's title of "Doctor" is also bogus.

Since Mr. Muekalia solicits my advice, I'll give it; come clean on the wrongs you have inflicted, punish the guilty, abandon UNITA's Leninist structure, establish checks against misuse of power, embrace Christianity for real if that is what you want, encourage your people to participate in the decisions that affect them, abandon the corrupting personality cult of Savimbi, teach your men to speak the truth; in short, practice what you preach, and I'll be the first to laud UNITA's undoubted achievements, and the first to argue that the West should step up its assistance to it. Meanwhile, don't think you're immune from scrutiny by conservatives just because we have enemies in common.—RS

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has expired.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for additional time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to just say that we know the views of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] on Angola, and I would just like to assert my reasons for objecting, if I may.

I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has a great deal to say on this subject. His views are fairly well known, and I do not want to foreclose the gentleman from talking, but a discussion on Angola could be endless. There are people on our side who radically disagree with the gentleman, and we could go on and on.

Mr. Chairman, it is 20 minutes to 4. People do have planes to catch and have made plans to leave, and I just beg the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] to be brief. I will not object to another extension.

Mr. Chairman, I just hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] does not want to turn this into a special order.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words simply to respond to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], my good friend.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] talks about the myths of human rights, yet we were told that Savimbi was involved in assassination, that he assassinated Tony Fernandez. We met with Tony Fernandez here 2 weeks ago. We were told that under the violation of human rights Savimbi tortured Tito Chingunji. We met with him here a few weeks ago, and he denied it all.

So, Mr. Chairman, if we want to talk about myths, where are the myths?

It seems to me that the bottom line is Dr. Savimbi has said time and time again that he will abide by fair and free elections in Angola, and, if he loses, he will step down.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], Why don't they ask their Marxist friends to embrace the same principle of free and fair elections?

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Angolan matter be concluded at 10 minutes to 4. We could do 10 minutes on this and then hopefully finish our business.

□ 1540

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object on the grounds that probably there is no issue that ought to be discussed more fully than the subject of Angola, since it is the one subject that is not the subject of public debate.

I have no problem, I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] in trying to establish some reasonable time limit.

Mr. HYDE. That is all I want.

Mr. WOLPE. But I would argue that 10 minutes more is too brief a time. This is a subject that does merit some discussion.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it does, but special orders are available and they can go on until midnight.

Mr. WOLPE. That is correct, but what is occurring is occurring within the context of this legislation. I think it is an appropriate point to raise these issues in the context of the Intelligence authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate will now return to normal order.

There is before the Committee, without objection, an agreement to debate this matter until 3:50 p.m.

The time will be divided equally between the managers on each side. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] will control 5 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will control 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. I would like to direct some questions about United States policy toward Angola to Mr. BEILENSON, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee.

It seems to me that Mr. Savimbi, the leader of UNITA, has frequently been at odds with United States support for the African-sponsored peace talks on Angola. On August 26 he announced he was suspending UNITA's participation in the talks for at least a month. He has repeatedly and publicly criticized the performance of the African-appointed mediator, President Mobutu of Zaire, and suggested that further talks would be futile unless Mobutu stepped out of the negotiating process. Most recently, he rejected personal requests by President Bush and Assistant Secretary of State Cohen that he attend the September 18 peace talks in Kinshasa, Zaire.

Is the gentleman as concerned as I am by Mr. Savimbi's actions?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would say to the gentleman in general, yes, this gentleman is.

Mr. WOLPE. Should we continue to tolerate Mr. Savimbi's lack of cooperation with the African peace effort? Should we provide him with a blank check of American support even if he continues to withhold such cooperation, to attack Mobutu, and boycott negotiations?

Mr. BEILENSON. I suppose the gentleman is asking a rhetorical question. This gentleman's personal response is that he agrees with what he believes to be many of the gentleman's own feelings, what the gentleman's own feelings appear to be.

Mr. WOLPE. I think we can all agree with President Bush's statement last week that we would ultimately like to see free and fair elections in Angola—as we would like to see in the rest of Africa and the rest of the world. But administration officials have repeatedly told Congress that our near-term goal is a compromise political solution. At his confirmation hearing in the other body, Secretary of State Baker defined the U.S. objective of "national reconciliation" as "the emergence of a government that reconciles the competing views of the present government and the movement that Dr. Savimbi represents in a manner that is satisfactory to both." And at his confirmation hearing, Assistant Secretary Cohen reinforced this point, declaring, "We do not have the blueprint for ending the civil war between the Angolan people."

Does the gentleman agree with these administration statements of our policy objectives in Angola and their implication that we should not line up behind either the Angolan Government's or UNITA's maximum demands and recipes for how to ultimately achieve democracy, but rather seek to further a genuine national reconciliation of opposing viewpoints?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the answer from this gentleman is yes. This gentleman thinks that is in fact a good summary of what our policy is, or should be.

Now that the Cuban troops are departing from Angola—half we now believe will be gone by November 1 and two-thirds we hope by next April, it seems clear to most of us that our major interest there is in encouraging a peaceful political solution to this tragic conflict. In light of recent developments in Angola and past statements by administration officials, I think it is critical that our policy be strongly supportive of a compromise political solution.

Mr. WOLPE. As the gentleman knows, we are the only Western country that does not recognize Angola and we were the only country in the world that voted against their admission to the International Monetary Fund. I am very pleased that the gentleman has joined with over 70 of our Democratic and Republican colleagues in cosponsoring House Concurrent Resolution 203 which calls upon the administration to reciprocate such constructive Angolan actions as Cuban troops withdrawal, macroeconomic reforms, and entering into negotiations with UNITA by taking steps to begin normalizing relations with Angola through the establishment of a United States liaison office in Luanda, support of Angola's full participation in the IMF and World Bank, and delivery of humanitarian assistance to all Angolans. It is not a logical aspect of an evenhanded United States policy toward Angola and UNITA for the United States to have normal relations with both groups?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, again I say this gentleman agrees. In fact, he feels that by embarking upon a more normal relationship with the Angolan Government it seems likely that we might increase, rather than decrease, our leverage in furtherance of a peaceful political solution that maximizes the chances for future democratization.

Mr. WOLPE. In light of our discussion, I say to the committee chairman, can the gentleman assure our colleagues that the gentleman and his committee will be closely monitoring the situation in Angola in the coming weeks and months, and that the gentleman will revisit the key policy issues in the near future?

Mr. BEILENSON. I can assure the gentleman that this gentleman shares the concerns that he has expressed and that I shall continue to follow and monitor the situation closely.

Mr. WOLPE. Well, let me express my appreciation to the committee chairman for those responses and for the gentleman's continuing concern with respect to our policy.

I do believe that American national interests are going to be compromised if we cannot respond to what is in fact new developments that clearly are being manifested in southern Africa. I think we all want to see reconciliation. We all want to see an end to the terrible conflict that has produced so much bloodshed within that region. I hope that we can collectively work our way through to a reassessment of American policy. In that regard I am inserting in the RECORD some useful background material on recent developments and U.S. policy.

BACKGROUND MATERIAL ON ANGOLA PEACE NEGOTIATIONS AND U.S. POLICY

(Prepared by the House Subcommittee on Africa Staff)

THE GBADOLITE AGREEMENT

African efforts to encourage a compromise political solution to the long and bloody conflict in Angola (100,000 dead, 50,000 amputees, 400,000 refugees, 600,000 internally displaced) culminated in the June 22nd Gbadolite Summit Meeting. There, eighteen African Heads of State and two representatives of Heads of State gathered, under the Chairmanship of President Kaunda of Zambia, and President Mobutu of Zaire mediated between President Dos Santos of Angola and UNITA Leader Jonas Savimbi. According to the September 18 Kinshasa Communique issued by the core group of eight African leaders.

"At the end of the Gbadolite Summit the Heads of State gathered there took note—after the President of the meeting His Excellency Dr. Kenneth David Kaunda, President of Zambia, read before the gathering the main points of the peace plan—of Mr. Savimbi's acceptance of the points contained in the plan, after which President Eduardo dos Santos shook his hand as a symbol of fraternity and reconciliation between sons of the same motherland."

Statements by President Mobutu, President Pereira of Cape Verde, President Bongo of Gabon, and President Chissano of Mozambique also confirmed that Savimbi had accepted in front of the African leaders the Gbadolite peace plan.

The Gbadolite agreement had two parts. First there was a public declaration that, "on the basis of the peace plan presented by the Government of the People's Republic of Angola and the proposals made by the Head of State of the Republic of Zaire in his mediation efforts, the following principles were agreed upon by all the Angolan brothers":

"The desire of all sons and daughters of Angola to end the war and to proclaim national integration before the whole world."

"The cessation of all hostilities as well as the proclamation of a cease-fire to come into force at midnight on 24 June."

"The establishment of a committee charged with drawing up the modalities for implementing this plan, which is aimed at national reconciliation, under the mediation of the President of the Republic of Zaire"

Second, as declarations by the eight African leaders at the subsequent Harare and Kinshasa summits showed, there was also an unpublished accord (presumably to give Dos Santos and Savimbi time to inform their constituencies). This agreement included:

"Respect of the Constitution and the Principal Laws" of Angola;

"Cessation of all foreign interference in the internal affairs" of Angola;

"Integration of UNITA elements in the institutions of the People's Republic of Angola"; and

"Acceptance of Jonas Savimbi's temporary and voluntary retirement."

Within hours of the Gbadolite summit, the major elements of the unpublished accord were mentioned publicly by several of the African leaders. President Mobutu, Savimbi's foremost African supporter, told the press on June 23rd: "As mediator, I have reached the point of integrating UNITA into all the structures of the Angolan State—Government, Army, Administration, and all others". The same day President Bongo commented:

"The main terms of the agreements that we reached were: the cessation of hostilities on Saturday at midnight; and the total integration of all the former assets of the UNITA within the Angolan Government, the Army, and in the Administration. In short, everything that concerns the situation of the country is to be reabsorbed. It was also decided to put an end to foreign interference. Lastly, we worked out the conditions for this reconciliation process."

Similar statements were made by Presidents Kaunda, Chissano and Pereira. However, one point in the agreement remained unclear: the exact nature of the "temporary and voluntary retirement" of Savimbi. Kaunda and Dos Santos indicated that Savimbi would leave Angola and go into exile, but Mobutu denied this and it was not confirmed by anyone else.

The upshot of the African peace effort then was a political compromise in which neither side realized its maximum demands. However, many important details remained to be negotiated and one point—Savimbi's temporary retirement—needed to be ultimately clarified. UNITA gained legitimacy as an organization which had the right to negotiate its members "integration" into the Angolan political structure. This could be achieved in various ways (President Pereira related, "Savimbi proposed the word 'participation' instead of integration but it was understood that it should be the Angolans who would discuss the rest among themselves"). But, together with the principle of respect for the existing Constitution and principal laws, "integration" clearly fell short of UNITA's long-standing demand for the dissolution of the Angolan Government, its replacement by a new Government of National Unity, and subsequent elections for a legislature to write a new Constitution. On the other hand, the Angolan Government gained an immediate cease-fire with the UNITA guerillas, recognition of the integrity of its regime as a starting point for political negotiations, and Savimbi's temporary political withdrawal (already offered by UNITA in the context of it own peace plan). However, it gave up its previous refusal to negotiate a political solution with UNITA by accepting the Mobutu mediation scheme, and sacrificed its previous emphasis upon individual amnesty and as the path to national reconciliation.

RESPONSE OF THE ANGOLAN PARTIES

While neither the Angolan Government nor UNITA has complied fully with the African mediation effort—for example, neither is currently observing the cease-fire—the overwhelming preponderance of attacks upon the Gbadolite agreement and the African mediation effort have come from UNITA. These may be grouped under four categories:

(1) UNITA's Rejection of the Cessation of Hostilities by 24 June.—UNITA carried out a major sabotage of the Luanda electrical power system on June 29th. On July 25th, it reportedly shot down an Angolan military transport plane with a missile, resulting in 40 deaths. (All this during a period when UNITA was accusing Angola of nothing more than moving supplies). At the July 19-22 negotiations in Kinshasa, UNITA did not accept Mobutu's proposal for observation and implementation of the cease-fire though Angola did. On August 10th, Savimbi insisted, against the published Gbadolite agreement, on tying agreement on a cease-fire to political agreements: UNITA negotiators were to "discuss not only the cease-fire but the political schedule * * * what kinds of incentives to give to the guerillas to stop fighting. The insistence of the present mediator, President Mobutu, and the MPLA to discuss only the cease-fire is incomplete." On August 24th, UNITA rejected the eight African leaders' Harare communique spelling out the unpublished part of the Gbadolite agreement and started, "War has resumed." On August 26th, UNITA suspended all peace negotiations, including those on the cease-fire, for a month, but offered a month-long "truce" in which it would not "carry out any offensive" though its "armed forces are ready wherever they are attacked."

(2) UNITA's Rejection of the Key Concept of "Integration." Following an initial interview of Mozambique in which he did not quarrel with a reporter's description of the upcoming process of "reintegration into Angolan society," Savimbi subsequently changed course. On June 25th he told a press conference in Jamba that "The heads of state approved the agenda that we presented 14 years ago on restoring peace and national reconciliation by forming a Government of National Unity". On August 10th he told the Portuguese press, "There was no integration", and emphasized the importance of a "Government of National Unity".

(3) UNITA's Rejection of the African Mediation Effort Led By Mobutu.—On August 9th, Mobutu declared he was "surprised and astonished" by reported press statements by Savimbi disavowing the Gbadolite agreement and questioning Mobutu's role. Savimbi publicly criticized Mobutu's conduct of the negotiations on August 10th. On August 24th, UNITA rejected the Harare communique "violently", "question(ed) the role of Gbadolite and its chairman", and said "It does not accept that Africa should decide on the leadership of African countries, wherever they may be". On September 17th, the New York Times reported Savimbi saying that Mobutu was "not neutral" and suggesting that further talks would be futile unless he stepped out of the negotiating process.

(4) UNITA's Walkout From the Negotiations.—On August 26th, UNITA announced the suspension of its participation in the committee established by the Gbadolite summit to implement national reconciliation until its Congress in late September. (However, the next day he announced he would be attending a peace conference in Kinshasa in September.) On September 17th, he told the New York Times that he would not attend the September 18 Kinshasa meeting with the eight African leaders because the two sides were too far apart to have meaningful talks. At this time, he rejected an urgent request from President Bush and Secretary Baker and direct pleas by Assistant Secretary Herman Cohen, to attend the talks.

THE CHANGE IN U.S. POLICY FROM EVENHANDEDNESS TO INCREASING SUPPORT OF UNITA'S DIPLOMATIC POSITION

At first, the U.S. supported the Gbadolite summit as a "significant breakthrough" in which both sides made major concessions. It also stressed that this was an African, rather than U.S. success. A "senior official" commented publicly, "The most important thing is that you have African leaders talking to their own brethren about how to solve a problem without American aircraft, without a British mediator, without people from the outside".

Asked to project the eventual political outcome in Angola, Assistant Secretary Cohen responded in terms that were not inconsistent with the concepts of "integration" and "temporary and voluntary retirement" (CNN-7/18): themselves. We are not prescribing * * * I think it will be a typical African situation, probably a one party government, with a Parliament. But the two parties, UNITA and the MPLA, will probably merge into something new."

He also noted the prospective temporary retirement (but not exile) of Savimbi:

"What they are talking about is a transitional period of one year or 18 months where Jonas Savimbi will not be part of the Government. He has already volunteered to do that."

At the same time, Cohen made an effort to have the U.S. reverse its previous lone vote against Angola's admission to the IMF at the upcoming July 18 IMF Executive Board Meeting—in order to obtain more influence with Luanda in support of a political settlement.

Subsequently, U.S. policy changed. Following a letter on the IMF issue by Senator DeConcini and four other Senators, the U.S. maintained its negative vote at the IMF Executive Board meeting. On August 23rd, State Department press guidance criticized the Harare communique: "It appears that the summit's reiteration of what had been agreed to at Gbadolite includes some elements to which, in fact, UNITA may not have agreed". (As shown in the earlier discussion of the Gbadolite Agreement and as implied by Cohen's earlier remarks, this statement is not a fair reflection of the facts.) There were indications of private support for Savimbi's effort to link effective implementation of the cease-fire to progress in political negotiations—also contrary to the Gbadolite agreement. Finally, and most importantly, the U.S. issued a press statement on the day of the Kinshasa summit, September 18, strongly supporting Savimbi's perspective on Gbadolite:

"The United States strongly supports UNITA and its goals of national reconciliation followed by free and fair elections. The U.S. does not accept the concepts of "exile", "amnesty", or "intergration". Political issues must be settled at the negotiating table."

Shortly afterward, Mobutu called upon "those who are closely or remotely concerned by the Angola problem * * * to stop any interference likely to hamper the restoration of peace in Angola.

The only remaining U.S. differences with Savimbi are that the U.S. continues to support Mobutu as mediator and attempted in vain to get Savimbi to go to the Kinshasa summit.

THE END OF THE AFFAIR—SAVIMBI IS NO LONGER WASHINGTON'S DARLING

In the eyes of the Reaganite right, Jonas Savimbi was a freedom fighter. His trips to Washington were media-charged whirlwinds of White House visits and cozy sessions with the congressional hard-liners who delivered money—$50 million this year—to aid his guerrillas fighting the Marxist regime in Angola. But as he toured the capital last week, there were signs of fading ardor. Reports of brutal reprisals against rivals and dissidents inside the National Union for the Total Indpendence of Angola (UNITA) have weakened his hand. Some officials blamed him for the breakdown of a cease-fire negotiated in June by Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seko. His liberal critics wondered if underwriting old anticommunist warriors like Savimbi has become dangerously anachronistic in the age of Gorbachev.

Changes in the calculus of the region's politics may make Savimbi expendable. Washington's chief geopolitical concern in the onetime Portuguese colony—the 50,000 Cuban troops stationed there—will soon be history. They are leaving under the terms of the U.S.-brokered Namibian independence accord. There is also a hardening consensus that the country's 14-year civil war has become a bloody stalemate (an estimated more than 200,000 dead) serving no one's interests. The aim now is to get Savimbi and the Marxist government of President José Eduardo dos Santos to end the conflict "on any terms acceptable to both sides," one American official in Johannesburg says.

Savimbi's credibility has been damaged by the collapse of the cease-fire arranged by Mobutu in Gbadolite, Zaire, in June. While dos Santos and Savimbi shook hands on the accord, it was broken by both sides within days. Savimbi claims he never agreed to the terms the Zairian leader announced, which included an 18-month "retirement" for the rebel leader himself and integration of his UNITA guerrillas into the Angolan government. Questions about Savimbi's own conduct have eroded American conservative support. An Aug. 18 piece in William F. Buckley's National Review, for example, describes the alleged torture and killing of UNITA dissidents, some through public burnings. The article asserts that his Maoist training and repressive style make him no friend of the West. "I don't think Jonas Savimbi is a saint," says conservative Republican Congressman John Kasich, who has signed a letter inviting dos Santos to visit the United States.

Savimbi dismisses any notion that his support is slipping. "The people who sent the letter [to dos Santos] never supported UNITA in the past," he said last week. But his detractors may be gaining a foothold. Last month Democratic Congressman Howard Wolpe, chairman of the House Africa subcommittee, introduced a nonbinding resolution calling on President Bush to begin normalizing relations with Angola by opening a U.S. liaison office in Luanda and sending reconstruction aid. The measure's 64 sponsors include 15 Republicans, once a political impossibility. Publicly, the White House remains solidly behind Savimbi. But it wants him back at the bargaining table with Mobutu to reestablish the cease-fire. Both met with Bush separately last week, and Savimbi promised that the problems would be ironed out. If negotiations get back on track, Congress is likely to continue arming Savimbi. If not, he may find a much chillier reception on his next visit to Washington.

SAVIMBI SAYS HE IS HALTING ANGOLAN PEACE TALKS

(By Kenneth B. Noble)

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast, Sept. 15.—The Angolan guerrilla leader, Jonas Savimbi, said tonight that he was suspending negotiations to end his country's long civil war because the two sides remain too far apart to have meaningful talks.

Face-to-face negotiations between Mr. Savimbi and President Eduardo dos Santos of Angola had been scheduled to resume on Sept. 18 in Kinshasa, Zaire.

But the rebel leader said he has decided not to attend the meeting, which would be the second time the two sides have formally help peace talks.

In an interview here, Mr. Savimbi was especially critical of President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, the mediator of the talks, whom he accused of grossly distorting the terms of the cease-fire agreement reached by 18 African heads of Government on June 22 in Gbadolite, Zaire.

"He's not neutral," Mr. Savimbi said of the Zairian President, and suggested that further talks would be futile unless Mr. Mobutu stepped out of the negotiating process.

Mr. Savimbi spoke for 40 minutes at a residence of the Ivory Coast's President, Félix Houphouët-Boigny. African diplomats here said that Mr. Savimbi had hoped that he would replace Mr. Mobutu as mediator.

The rebel leader's comments are significant because for several years Zaire has provided the Angolan guerrillas with substantial assistance, its territory serving as a shipment corridor for some of the equipment sent by the United States to be used against Angola's Marxist Government.

Mr. Savimbi also said he met today with Herman J. Cohen, the Assistant Secretary of State for Africa, who urged him to attend the Kinshasa talks.

The Angolan delegate to the United Nations, Manuel Pacavira, accused Mr. Savimbi of bad faith and said he did not really want to bring the war to an end.

"We are tired of Mr. Savimbi's songs. The Kinshasa meeting will take place, with or without him." Mr. Pacavira said in a telephone interview. He added that Angola had full confidence in Mr. Mobutu as mediator.

DIFFERING VERSIONS EVENT

The impasse here appears to boil down to a complete difference in opinion on what was accomplished at the Gbadoilte meeting. The peace talks have taken on added urgency for both sides because of the coming independent of Namibia, also known as South-West Africa, a territory that has been administered by South Africa and which has been used a supply base for Mr. Savimbi's in southeastern Angola.

A peace accord signed in December by South Africa, Angola, Cuba and the United States includes a pledge by the South Africans to end their support for the rebels. The accord also provides independence for Namibia and a phased withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Western and African diplomats say that if the peace talks between the rebel forces and the Luanda Government collapse, full-scale fighting could resume, jeopardizing the December accord.

Mr. Savimbi said in the interview that fighting had, in fact, intensified. He estimated that in the last two weeks about 1,000 Government troops had been killed and as well as about 300 of his own soldiers. Angolan officials have disputed these figures, and there is no way to verify them.

Angolan officials, skeptical about Mr. Savimbi's vow not to continue negotiating, said they thought that he was stalling in an attempt to replenish his supplies and perhaps prepare for a military push at a later date.

In other matters, the rebel leader reintegrated his contention that he never consented to go into exile or to let his forces be absorbed into the Angolan Army, as Mr. Mobutu and other African leaders contended at a meeting in Harare, Zimbabwe, late last month.

Asked about Mr. dos Santos' contention that he agreed at Gbadolite to accept some form of exile—external or internal, at least for a transitional period of national reconciliation—Mr. Savimbi said: "He's lying, and if anybody told him I said that, they're lying."

ANGOLA TRUCE IS AS DEADLY AS CIVIL WAR

(By Kenneth B. Noble)

HUAMBO, ANGOLA, Aug. 20.—It was shortly past midnight the other night when mortar shell ripped through the roof of Felismina Castiho's adobe hut. Shrapnel from the explosion tore a hole in her right thigh. Her parents sleeping in a room next door, were killed.

The 6-year-old girl is one of dozens of civilians treated for serious wounds since June, when a cease-fire was called in Angola's 14-year civil war, said Dr. Adriana Francisco Goncalves, acting medical director of the regional hospital here.

The cease-fire agreement was reached on June 24 in a meeting between President José Eduardo dos Santos of Angola and the rebel leader, Jonas Savimbi. But judging from the wounded and crippled crowding this hospital and daily Angolan press reports of attacks, the truce never became fully effective.

"Our professionals have not seen a cease-fire" Dr. Goncalves said. "The number of wounded coming in have been continuous before and after the agreement. On some days, it's one, two, or three. On others we see 10 or 15 multiple-trauma cases."

CAMPAIGN OF TERROR DENIED

In a recent interview in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, Tony D. Fernandes, foreign minister of the rebel group, the Union for the Total Independence of Angola, denied that the rebels were waging a campaign of terror. He called such accusations "lies" meant to turn American public opinion against their effort.

The United States has given the guerrilla group, which goes by the name Unita, $15 million a year in aid in the last several years, and Washington has vowed to continue to do so despite the cease-fire.

On the night that Felismina was wounded in what was evidently a rebel attack, the Rev. Benjamin F. Chavis Jr., the New York-based director of the United Church of Christ's Commission on Racial Justice, was asleep about a quarter of a mile away. He was with a group of American physicians and other medical workers here examining conditions in Angola's central plateau.

"It happened about 12:15 in the morning," Mr. Chavis said as he led a tour of the still smoldering hut where Felismina and her parents, José and Lucia, lived.

"A loud explosion shook the building in the room I was sleeping in," he said. "I got up and looked out the window and saw rockets exploding.

"The first rocket and rifle barrage lasted about 20 minutes. After a half hour lull, the shootout continued for another 15 minutes.

"It was a full moon. The night was bright, so whoever was shooting knew they were shooting over a civilian part of Huambo."

Besides Huambo, other towns that have been hit hard by guerrilla attacks include Kuito and Chinguar, towns east of here. "The main objective is Luanda," said Pedro de Castro Van-Dunem, Angola's Foreign Minister. "We've lost a battalion—about 200 military, about 300 civilians and about 600 wounded; about 100 trucks have also been destroyed."

Mr. Van-Dunem also blamed the rebels for shooting down a civilian airplane, reportedly killing 43 passengers. Unita has denied responsibility for the downing.

Mr. Savimbi's guerrillas exert de facto control over much of the countryside around Huambo, a once-thriving agriculture and rail center.

Today, Huambo is a bleak, tattered city, full of shuttered shops and abandoned farms and fields. Many residents, fearing guerrilla ambushes and land mines, rarely venture far outside the city limits.

One of the few who routinely did was Juliana Alcina, a Government information official. On June 26, two days after the cease-fire began, Miss Alcina was traveling with a group of nurses who were giving polio vaccinations in a nearby village.

They arrived without incident, but on the return trip their truck hit a land mine. The six nurses were killed. The explosion fractured Miss Alcina's back and mangled her right leg.

She said she believed that the land mine had recently been installed, buried by guerrilla forces in the brief period that the group spent in the village. "We had been over the same place, over the same road three times," in the weeks preceding the explosion, she said. "And we never had a problem with mines."

"Unita did this to me" she whispered.

Nearly every day the Angola Journal, the state-controlled newspaper, prints on its front page a tally of Unita attacks culled from official Government reports. At 5:00 A.M. on July 18, for example, the paper reported that guerrillas attacked Cingues, a village in Bié Province, killing 60 civilians and kidnapping 29.

On Aug. 12, the Journal reported that "bandits" attacked Cafunfo, a village in the northeastern province of Lunda-Norte, killing nine civilians and wounding four.

U.S. STRATEGY ON ANGOLA PEACE TALKS FALTERS

(By David B. Ottaway)

Three months after a much-heralded start on peace talks for Angola, the Bush administration strategy is failing badly and the process is still not underway.

The administration has relied on Zairian President Mobuto Sese Seko to mediate an "African solution" to the Angolan civil war. But the two warring parties have not yet even sat down together in the same negotiating room.

Jonas Savimbi, the U.S.-backed Angolan rebel leader, has publicly rejected Mobutu as mediator, and U.S. efforts to get Savimbi to the latest proposed round of talks last Monday in Zaire proved fruitless.

Meanwhile, a cease-fire declared June 24 is floundering amid accusations of multiple violations by both sides.

"I don't know what the next step is myself," a senior U.S. official said Wednesday.

"That whole initiative is in trouble," said the director-general of South Africa's Foreign Ministry, Niel Van Heerden, at a press briefing Tuesday, "We are virtually back to square one."

It is unclear what this means for the U.S.-brokered accord of last December that provides for the withdrawal of 50,000 Cuban troops from Angola and independence elections for South African-ruled Namibia.

But both South African and U.S. officials said Cuba is so far adhering strictly to the timetable for phased withdrawal of its troops. In addition, Havana has given no indication that it might renege on its pullout commitment even if the civil war resumes, according to these officials.

Congressional and other American backers of Savimbi are blaming the administration for the failure to achieve any progress in the national reconciliation talks.

"The State Department has remained strangely silent" about the peace process, said 13 senators in a Sept. 12 letter to Secretary of State James A. Baker III. They urged Baker to become personally involved in the process.

The United States has considerable influence with both sides. It is Savimbi's main outside supporter now, with a covert aid program of $40 million to $50 million. It also can offer the Angolan government diplomatic recognition and U.S. technology, both of which it ardently seeks, in return for a compromise.

But the Bush administration, seemingly anxious to avoid high-profile and risky diplomacy, has not shown any interest in mediating the talks. Instead, it has deliberately promoted Mobutu as the Angolan peacemaker.

At first, this strategy seemed possible. The Zairian leader started with a major diplomatic coup on the eve of a visit to Washington, getting Savimbi and Angolan President Eduardo Jose dos Santos to shake hands and agree to a cease-fire at a meeting June 22 in Gbadolite, Zaire.

Mobutu even got 17 other African heads of state to witness and bless the historic meeting between the two adversaries, who have been locked in a devastating civil war since Angola's independence from Portugal in 1975.

But Mobutu never succeeded in getting an Angolan delegation in the same room with one from Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA).

The senior U.S. official said the Angolan delegation "refuses to sit at the same table with these 'bandits,' as they call them [UNITA members]," and Mobutu has never gone beyond "contact talks" carried out indirectly by Zairian officials shuttling between the two parties.

Meanwhile, Mobutu began associating himself in August with the Angolan government's view of what was allegedly agreed to at Gbadolite, which Savimbi has hotly contested.

At an Aug. 22 meeting of eight African leaders in Harare, Zimbabwe, Mobutu signed a declaration that upheld the Angolan government position: Savimbi's followers are simply to be "integrated" into existing Angolan institutions while Savimbi is to go into "temporary and voluntary retirement" in exile.

Savimbi, on the other hand, is demanding elections, a transitional government, the creation of a multiparty system and sweeping changes in Angola's Marxist-Leninist constitution. He also refuses to go into exile.

Mobutu's apparent acceptance of the Angolan government view so infuriated Savimbi that he announced he would not attend the next planned round of talks in Kinshasa Sept. 18.

Assistant Secretary of State Herman J. Cohen rushed to the region last week in a futile effort to convince Savimbi to show up. The State Department issued a statement saying it "strongly supports UNITA and its goal of national reconciliation followed by fair and free elections." It also rejected the Angolan government's "concepts of exile [for Savimbi], amnesty and integration [for his followers]."

The statement did not change Savimbi's mind but it did infuriate the Angolan government. Angola's ambassador to the United Nations, Manuel Pedro Pacavira, said Thursday that the U.S. demands amounted "almost to a declaration of war."

"Our government will not make concessions that would take its people to suicide. It will not accept the demand for the creation of a government of transition. It will not revise its constitution because of foreign pressure and to satisfy the ambitions of a small group [UNITA]," he said in an interview here.

The U.S. position now, as explained by the senior U.S. official, is that both sides should accept a new cease-fire followed by face-to-face "open-ended negotiations with no preconditions and no non-negotiable demands." Mobutu, he said, still has the full backing of the administration to serve as mediator.

But the Zairian leader's current approach seems certain to be rebuffed by Savimbi again. Mobutu is supposed to draw up a declaration—basically along the lines of the Angolan government's approach, which is embraced now by eight African leaders—and then get Savimbi to sign on, according to both Pacavira and the U.S. official.

It is not clear how Mobutu will do this. But Zaire is now the main conduit for U.S. and other arms flowing to Savimbi, giving Mobutu considerable leverage if he decides to use it.

VOA PROBES INTERFERENCE IN ANGOLA—CIA-BACKED REBEL STATION REPORTED TO HAVE BLOCKED BROADCASTS

(By David B. Ottaway)

The Voice of America has begun monitoring its broadcasts to Angola following reports that a secret, CIA-financed radio station operated by U.S.-backed anti-Marxist rebels has been interfering with VOA programs.

According to one report, the rebel station, known as the Voice of the Black Cockerel, used its powerful transmitter to block 12 minutes of an Aug. 18 VOA broadcast that included four minutes of a speech by Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos to the Angolan National Assembly.

Another report said the rebel station, which uses two of the same shortwave frequencies as VOA, also has cut in early on VOA broadcasts to make it appear that its programs are part of those from VOA.

Jardo Muekalia, a spokesman here for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), which runs the station, denied the reports.

"That's not true. Nobody there is trying to override VOA broadcasts," Muekalia said. But there "might have been some kind of coincidence" occasionally between VOA and Black Cockerel broadcasts.

Muekalia said UNITA has complained to the State Department about recent reports carried by VOA from an Angolan, William Tonet, who has been working for the U.S. radio station in Luanda since April.

"The VOA shouldn't be a resounding box of the . . . government in Luanda," Muekalia said. He charged that Tonet had indulged in pro-government commentary that would be taken by Angolan listeners as evidence the United States was favoring the Marxist Luanda government rather than UNITA because the VOA is regarded there as a U.S. government operation.

A State Department spokesman said the UNITA complaint was being investigated but noted that the Angolan government and the rebel group have periodically complained about VOA's alleged bias in favor of the other side.

This is the first instance, however, of allegations that UNITA has been using its powerful radio station to block VOA broadcasts. The CIA reportedly helped set up Black Cockerel in 1986 when the Reagan administration began a covert program of military and other assitance to UNITA.

A spokesman for the United States Information Agency (USIA), which oversees VOA, said the agency is unsure whether there was sustained interference by the UNITA station on Aug. 18 but is investigating.

"We're going to monitor VOA programs closely for the next few weeks to see if anything is happening at all," said Joseph D. O'Connell, deputy director of USIA's office of public liaison.

VOA also has started monitoring Black Cockerel to see whether it is deliberately interfering with VOA broadcasts into Angola, according to VOA sources.

UNITA officials say the Black Cockerel radio station is based in southeastern Angola, but Angolan government officials believe it also has a transmitter in neighboring Zaire's southern Shaba Province.

Muekalia said it has powerful signal, covering all of central and western Africa as far north as Morocco and capable of being heard as far away as the East Coast of the United States.

VOA Deputy Director Robert T. Coonrod said allegations of UNITA interference with VOA broadcasting involved two frequencies: 9700 kilohertz, on which VOA sends Portuguese-language programs, and at 7130 kilohertz, for programs in French. The VOA transmitter is in Greenville N.C.

Black Cockerel also uses the 9700 frequency and one at 7135 kilohertz, which is so close to VOA's 7130 as to be indistinguishable, for its twice-daily programs.

O'Connell said there was no coordination between VOA and Black Cockerel on Black Cockerel's use of those two frequencies and said UNITA's secret station did not fall under the international board that registers stations and assigns times and frequencies.

Black Cockerel broadcast at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. Angolan time. The VOA programs are heard in Angola at 5:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

Luanda government officials and several U.S. sources said Black Cockerel's 7 p.m. program has on several occasions simply blended into the ending of the 6:30 p.m. VOA broadcast.

One VOA official said there were instance where "they come up before we go off" but that it was unclear whether this was deliberate.

MORE U.S. AID FOR SAVIMBI?—IT WILL HEAT UP THE CIVIL WAR

(By Howard Wolpe)

WASHINGTON.—Despite great progress toward peace in southwestern Africa, the Bush Administration is reportedly seeking a substantial increase in covert military aid to Unita insurgents in Angola. Congress should resist.

The Administration has contended that militarily strengthening Unita, or the Union for the Total Independence of Angola, would advance a process of "national reconciliation."

In fact, additional military aid would only slow recent movement toward a compromise in Angola's civil war. Moreover, an escalation in military aid would cast doubt on the Administration's sincerity about defusing regional conflicts with Moscow.

The regional peace accord—under which Cuban troops are withdrawing from Angola, South African forces are departing from Angola and neighboring Namibia, and South Africa is ending its military support for Unita insurgents in Angola—has not threatened Unita's military position. South Africa has extended a golden handshake of up to three years of military supplies to Unita. As a result, the loss of Cuban support may well be more troubling to the Angolan Government than the loss of South African support will be to Unita.

Moreover, both sides are growing more conciliatory as external support declines, following the signing of the accord. The Angolan Government is prepared to talk to Unita (though not to its controversial president, Jonas Savimbi). It has also convened a regional conference to discuss ways to secure internal peace.

Unita has proposed a cease-fire and indicated that Mr. Savimbi would be prepared to step aside during peace negotiations and refrain from participating in the government for two years. New external aid could jeopardize these diplomatic achievements by reinforcing hardliners on both sides.

During the regional peace negotiations, Moscow openly urged the Angolan Government to find a formula for national reconciliation that would achieve an enduring political solution. For the U.S. now to ratchet up the violence in Angola would complicate the Kremlin's efforts to wind down an expensive military supply relationship.

Of course, some diehard adherents of the Reagan Doctrine of supporting anti-Communist forces throughout the world believe that the United States should have only one agenda in Angola. That's to put Mr. Savimbi, a.k.a. the "freedom fighter," into power.

The myth of Jonas Savimbi as an apostle of freedom is propagated by a nearly $2 million-a-year public relations operation led by the well-connected lobbying firm of Black, Manafort, Stone and Kelly.

Yet, reality keeps intruding upon the Savimbi myth. An impressive study by Human Rights Watch has documented Unita's indiscriminate use of land mines against civilians and its policies of forced labor and conscription. And even Mr. Savimbi's sympathetic biographer, British journalist Fred Bridgland, has become disillusioned. Recently, Mr. Bridgland presented new evidence that Mr. Savimbi executed his political opponents.

With the Cubans now leaving Angola, it is harder than ever to justify continued U.S. involvement. At the very least, Congress should resist the short-sighted military strategy proposed by the Administration and the Unita lobby. It should insist, as it did with contra aid in Central America, on a diplomatic framework to achieve American objectives.

Such a framework should be devised in concert with the Soviet Union and key regional states. It should aim toward the following: reducing military aid to both sides and encouraging a cease-fire; negotiations leading to a national reconciliation that gives Unita's constituency a meaningful share of power; incentives, including international economic assistance, for achieving a political solution; and signaling South Africa that it will be punished if it abandons its commitments in Angola under the regional peace accord.

We can escalate the war in Angola, thereby extending a conflict that has already cost 200,000 lives, jeopardizing our newly won credibility with the black-ruled states of Southern Africa and inviting reciprocal escalation from Moscow. Or we can take the diplomatic path, building upon one of the Reagan Administration's most notable foreign policy achievements.

The right choice is as obvious as it is crucial.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE HERMAN COHEN ON CNN'S "INTERNATIONAL HOUR" (JULY 18, 1989)

Q: Let's move on to Angola. As you well know a cease fire . . . Jonas Savimbi of the rebel forces and President Dos Santos, shook hands on a cease fire agreement, on the 24th of June—I think it was. Now both sides have been saying the cease fire was violated. What is your information as far as the cease fire is concerned right now?

A: It's not perfect. Angola is an extremely large country and we have a guerilla war going on, and it's not easy to call off the fighting all over the place. But there's another element into that. That is the requirement that they get into political discussions. I believe the negotiations will resume in Kinshasa tomorrow and once the political discussions get serious I'm quite persuaded that the cease fire will hold.

Q: There was a lot of speculation before your trip (to Africa, including Luanda), that you would be recognizing the marxist Angolan government of president Dos Santos. What is the position of the US right now?

A: Our position has been consistent from the Carter administration. We will not have normal diplomatic relations or recognize the government of Angola until there is national reconciliation. That is, the end of the negotiating process. We want to improve our dialogue with the MPLA Government and we will be doing that. But actual diplomatic relations must await an outcome of the negotiating process.

* * * * *

Q: For natioinal reconciliation, will Jonas Savimbi remain in Angola, or will he have to go into exile?

A: The agreement at the Gbadolite Summit, a couple of weeks ago said that in an eventual Government of national unity, Jonas Savimbi would be part of it in a very high position. What they are talking about is a transitional period of one year or 18 months where Jonas Savimbi will not be part of the Government. He has already volunteered to do that. But an eventual Government of national unity will include Jonas Savimbi. Everyone's agreed on that.

Q: Give us some sort of a scenario what that Government might look like * * *

A: That's gonna have to be negotiated among the Africans themselves. We are not prescribing * * * I think it will be a typical African situation, probably a one party government, with a Parliament. But the two parties, UNITA and the MPLA, will probably merge into something new.

Q: What role do you see Jonas Savimbi playing * * *?

A: I think he has to play a major role in any Angolan government, because he represents at least 40 per cent of the Angolan people, and maybe more. So he's going to have to have a high post. The only way the government and the country can stay together is if he brings his people along into it. He has already conceded that the President of Angola will be the current president, President Dos Santos. So he's not looking to take over that job. But he would have to have something very big, such as Prime Minister, I think.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 24, 1989]

THE WAR IN ANGOLA CONTINUES

The world may think that the civil war in Angola is winding down. We read news reports that a cease-fire is in place and that negotiations are under way between the warring parties. We are told that compromise is in the air, that peace is just around the corner.

The people of Angola know better. While the world watches the historic effort to hold fair elections and achieve genuine independence for Angola's neighbor to the south, Namibia, it ignores the mayhem that continues just across the border to the north. Angolans are still being killed and maimed by some of the most brutal, indiscriminate violence in the world today. And the United States supplies the weaponry that allows that violence to continue.

I have just returned from a trip to Angola. Part of our purpose was to provide humanitarian assistance to victims of the war. We found evidence that the U.S.-supported insurgency (UNITA) continues to use our arms to terrorize the civilian population of Angola.

As I stood at the bedside of six-year-old Felismina Essenge hours after her legs had been mangled, her parents wiped out and her home distroyed by UNITA shelling, I heard her cry, "Mama, it hurts." If the American people could have been there to see that little girl's crippled body and hear her tormented whimpers, our policy of giving guns, rockets and land mines to UNITA would be instantly ended.

Americans should be clear about what we are doing in Angola. It is a conscious policy of UNITA to target civilians, to lay waste to the countryside, to destroy the economic infrastructure and to make Angola ungovernable. We supply the weapons that make UNITA's attacks on innocent civilians possible.

Why is it that our government consistently relies on that inane, destructive, unimaginative and evil solution? Just because the Soviet Union backs President Jose Eduardo dos Santos and his MPLA government, the United States is not required, robot-like, to support Jonas Savimbi of UNITA.

Jonas Savimbi is hardly the democrat his supporters portray. On the contrary, he has reportedly ordered the murder of hundreds of political dissenters and is said to have burned entire families as "witches" in bonfires at public rallies.

Ironically, American-owned oil companies have continued to do business in Angola throughout the war, their facilities protected by Cuban mercenaries from the attacks of U.S.-supported guerrillas.

Now that the Cuban troops are being withdrawn, our only interest in Angola should be humanitarian, to bring this brutal conflict to a speedy end. Continuing to supply weapons to UNITA does not advance that objective. We should call an immediate halt to our policy of providing support to UNITA.

Presently, aid to UNITA fails under the auspices of the Senate Intelligence Committee which protects its supporters from the scrutiny of public debate but does not excuse them from the terrible moral responsiblity of sending $40 million worth of military equipment to Angola; this, incredibly, at the same time as the two warring factions had finally reached across the table and agreed to a cease-fire.

We have now replaced the Soviet Union as the leading supplier of weapons to the Third World. This policy does not make friends for America. It only creates victims and adversaries and fosters anti-American feelings among people who would otherwise be our friends.

ETHEL KENNEDY.

McLEAN.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 4, 1989]

THE BURDEN OF ANGOLA

A serious hitch has developed in the process that was meant to convert Angola's June cease-fire into a negotiation to end that brutalized country's 14-year war. Talks on a political settlement have yet to begin. Indeed, the MPLA government and the UNITA rebels cannot even agree on the factual matter of what commitments they undertook at the African summit where peace was supposedly nailed down. Though Cuba and South Africa are withdrawing from the conflict under terms of the broad American-brokered Namibia-Angola accord of last December, the Soviet Union continues its massive supply and the United States its modest supply of government and guerrillas, respectively. Some fighting has resumed, and talk of more is in the air.

The Angolan war has long had its own attentive and, of course, divided public here, and so it is no surprise to find both Angolan sides now appealing to the United States to change its policy. The MPLA government, desperate for the expected political and economic benefits, urges Americans to cut off rebel Jonas Savimbi and resume normal ties now that its Cuban protectors are going home. Mr. Savimbi, who has assiduously cultivated American conservatives, has been in Washington this week arguing essentially for an extra measure of American support that would spare him the considerable uncertainties of reliance on the mediation of African governments.

Both Angolan parties are heading down the wrong track. The MPLA government's effort to induce President Bush to jettison the rebels runs smack up against a politically solid administration commitment to see reconciliation through. The rebels' attempt to make Washington their permanent guarantor overlooks 1) the administration's proper reluctance to be engaged in a conflict now becoming more tribal than anything else and 2) the American national interest in relations with an Angolan government that, by removing the Cubans, is meeting the basic American condition for restoring ties.

The unacknowledged common purpose of the Angolans is to draw in the United States in a way that will spare them the rigors of compromise with each other. This is not a burden that Washington should be lifting from their shoulders. Quite the contrary. The original design of American diplomacy in Angola was to remove the foreign combatants—Cuba and South Africa—and then to involve other African countries in fashioning a framework of Angolan compromise. The design was sound then, and it remains so, notwithstanding the current hitch.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 8, 1989]

SENDING MR. SAVIMBI A MESSAGE

President Bush did well to push the Angolan rebel leader Jonas Savimbi back to the negotiating table. But it remains to be seen whether Mr. Savimbi is prepared to bargain on the basis of the African-sponsored framework for settling Angola's 14-year civil war. He needs to understand that continued U.S. help will be politically impossible if he misses this chance to negotiate.

The chance arises from a June agreement between Mr. Savimbi and Angola's President, José Eduardo dos Santos. Brought together by President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire and observed by 17 other African heads of state, the two Angolan rivals parted with a handshake.

The deal consisted of a cease-fire and agreement to negotiate a settlement. However, the cease-fire never took hold. Mr. Savimbi, despite a written plea from Mr. Bush and a visit from Assistant Secretary of State Herman Cohen, refused to attend a Sept. 18 meeting at which a cease-fire accord was to be signed. And having agreed to an ill-defined "temporary retirement," Mr. Savimbi now talks about running in presidential elections.

Meanwhile the U.S. has continued to send food, arms, medicine and clothing to Mr. Savimbi's Unita rebels. But that aid, delivered through Zaire, was jeopardized by Mr. Savimbi's balky behavior. An angry Mr. Mobutu reportedly ordered supply lines cut.

Mr. Savimbi, the darling of some on the American right, forget that a substantial minority in Congress has never been happy about aiding UNITA. That minority could easily become a majority if he spurns this chance for a settlement.

More important, America's purpose in Angola should not be to support one tribe or faction over another, but to rid Angola of 50,000 Cuban troops and to reduce Soviet influence. Thanks to last year's Namibia settlement, the Cubans are already leaving. Moscow, which would like to rid itself of the financial burden of Angola, might be willing to back an eventual agreement.

Seldom in the past 14 years has there been a better opportunity to silence the guns that cause Angola so much misery. Washington is right to insist that Mr. Savimbi not spoil that chance.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

As the ranking Republican member on the Africa Subcommittee, I find it difficult week in, week out, year in, year out, to understand why the chairman of that subcommittee who just spoke and was involved in a colloquy continues to focus attention on those who are fighting for freedom and to try to get us to cut off aid to those people who are fighting for freedom in Southern Africa, when he ignores the atrocities that are taking place in countries like Ethiopia. Very rarely on this floor do we hear the gentleman from Michigan complain about the hundreds of thousands, and yes, millions of people who are dying of starvation in Ethiopia because Mengistu, the Communist leader, will not let food that we are sending over and paying to send over there get to the people who are starving in those areas. The gentleman never talks about that, but let a guy fight for freedom against the Communist government, like the Angolan government, the MPLA, and he is down here ranting and raving, day in and day out, telling us that we should not help those people fighting for freedom.

Under Ronald Reagan it was called the Reagan doctrine, saying to go help people fighting for freedom around the world in places like Nicaragua, Angola, and Afghanistan, and we did that; but this gentleman has been opposed to every one of those freedom fighter groups from day one.

Now, the gentleman talks about Dr. Savimbi not living up to these agreements. Let us look at the facts.

There was a meeting held in Gbadolite in Zaire and Dr. Savimbi went to that meeting in Gbadolite along with the presidents of many of the other countries in Southern Africa and he sat down and tried to negotiate a peace settlement, national reconciliation and free elections.

Well, after that there was a meeting in a place called Harrare, Zimbabwe. Now, Dr. Savimbi or his people were not invited to that meeting, but the other presidents were, and at that meeting they came out with a communique that said that Dr. Savimbi had agreed to go into exile, that Dr. Savimbi would let his forces who had been fighting for 14 years in the jungles of Angola, he would let his forces be folded into the Communist MPLA forces. That does not make sense. Why would he agree to that? He had been fighting them for 14 years. He finally fought them to the conference table.

And yet this gentleman would like for us to believe that he agreed to that in Botalitay because of this communique which came out of Harrare, when he was not even there.

Further, they said that he was going to adopt the Communist constitution, or accept the Communist constitution of the MPLA in Angola.

I submit to my colleagues that that was information that at the very least was misunderstood. I certainly do not believe that Dr. Savimbi after fighting the Portuguese for 15 years and the Communists for 14 years would go along with caving in when he was on the verge of getting what he wanted, free and fair elections and national reconciliation.

Now, my colleague says that we should normalize relations with Angola under the Communist government.

□ 1550

I was in Luanda, Angola, earlier this year, and I can tell the Members that the people live under oppression. The infrastructure of that country is going straight to hell. The streets do not work. There are holes everywhere. There is not even running water at the parliament or at the airport. The people are suffering.

The reason they want to normalize relations with the United States is to get our money, to get our hard currency, to get our investment, so they can go on with their tyrannical regime.

The fact of the matter is, my friends, that we should not normalize relations with Angola until there are free and fair elections, until there is true freedom in that country, until the tyrant dos Santos and the Communist leadership agree to sit down and have true national reconciliation and democracy in that country. No matter what my colleague says, the facts do not bear out what he has been telling us. That is, that Dr. Savimbi is a man that we cannot deal with, that he is a man who is not really for freedom and democracy, when in fact we know that he is.

Last week I introduced Dr. Savimbi at a major rally in Washington, DC, and I can tell the Members that those who know him, those who have come to know him, those who have visited him at his headquarters in Jamba in southern Angola know this is a man who is a patriot, a man who wants freedom and democracy, a man who really cares about his fellow man in Angola, and one that we should support. President Reagan was right to support him, President Bush has been right to support him, and this Congress should continue aid to him and not listen to the machinations of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MONTGOMERY] having assumed the chair, Mr. MOODY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2748) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the intelligence community staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 254, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The amendments printed in section 2 of House Resolution 254 are considered to have been adopted.

Is a separate vote demanded on any of the remaining amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 369, nays 31, not voting 32, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Nelson for, with Mr. Murphy of Pennsylvania against.

Mr. Anthony for, with Mr. Dymally against.

Mr. Dixon for, with Mrs. Collins of Illinois against.

Messrs. BATES, OWENS of New York, DORGAN of North Dakota, DOUGLAS, and COX changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida and Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2748 the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on the following rollcall numbers.

Rollcall No. 284.
Rollcall No. 285.
Rollcall No. 286.
Rollcall No. 287.
Rollcall No. 288.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time that I might inquire of the distinguished majority leader the program for next week.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT].

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

First, Members should know that there will be no more votes this evening and there will be no votes tomorrow in the House.

On Monday, October 16, the House will meet at noon to consider suspensions. We will consider the following bills:

H. Con. Res. 194, support for people of Colombia;

S. Con. Res. 61, democracy and human rights in Burma;

H.R. 3294, authorize USIA film "A Tribute to Mickey Leland;"

H.R. 1473, designate certain lands in Los Padres National Forest as wilderness and Sespe Creek and the Sisquoc River as wild and scenic rivers;

H.R. 1310, redesignate certain portions of the George Washington Memorial Parkway as the "Clara Barton Parkway;"

H.R. 76, study the eligibility of St. Mary's River as an addition to the Wild and Scenic Rivers System;

H.R. 2949, authorize a study of nationally significant places in American labor history;

H.R. 1622, Copyright Fees and Technical Amendments Act;

H.R. 3045, Copyright Remedy Clarification Act;

H.R. 3046, Copyright Royalty Tribunal Reform Act; and

H.R. 2806, amendments to the Controlled Substances Act.

Votes on Monday will be held until 4:30 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon so that Members coming long distances will have time to be here.

On Tuesday, October 17, again we will meet at noon and consider suspensions, 4 bills:

H.R. 3341, Anti-Trust Criminal Penalties Amendments of 1989;

H.R. 3152, bankruptcy treatment of Oil and Gas Farmout Agreement;

H.R. 2138, Immigration and Nationality Act; and

H.R. 3259, Immigration Nursing Relief Act.

We will also have up H.R. 2989, consideration of the conference report for Treasury, Postal Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990.

On Wednesday we meet at 10 a.m. The House will recess immediately and reconvene at 11 a.m. to receive President Roh Tae Woo of the Republic of Korea in a joint meeting.

Following the joint meeting the House will reconvene for legislative business, for consideration of H.R. 2883, consideration of the conference report for the Agricultural Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990.

On Thursday, October 19, and on Friday, October 20, the House will meet at 10 a.m. We will be considering H.R. 2494, International Development and Finance Act, subject to a rule, and H.R. 3402, aid to Poland and Hungary, subject to a rule.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I notice we do not have a private calendar day on Tuesday, the 17th. I understand there are some measures building up on that calendar as suspensions. Can the gentleman enlighten me as to when we might have a private calendar day?

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman will yield further, I am not sure at this point. We will review what is there and try to schedule that when it seems like it is an appropriate time.

Mr. MICHEL. I have maybe a question of whether or not the gentleman has to make the appointees on his side. I have three that I have on mine, ready to make. So as soon as the gentleman has his appointees ready for the consent calendar and private calendar, we would be happy to join in that because some of those then tend to back up when we come near to the end of a session. And if they are taken in a little more orderly progression, we do not get ganged up at the end of the session.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wanted to ask the distinguished majority leader, first of all, what are the plans for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission bill? I understand there have been some new developments, and I wonder if the gentleman could share those with the House.

Mr. GEPHARDT. The gentleman is correct.

□ 1620

It is my understanding that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs will be holding a hearing in the next few days with regard to that matter and that, as I understand it, will allow Members to then make an assessment on how to proceed.

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, we have a concern about the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RITTER's amendment. We appreciate that step in holding the hearing.

Second, there is some concern on our side about getting adequate notice before a bill as important as the minimum wage might come to the floor. As I understand, there is no immediate scheduling indication. Do you have any notion at this stage when we might see the minimum wage bill?

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman will continue yielding, it is unclear at this point. We had wanted to consult with the Senate and see what their plans were before we made a final decision. We will try to give all Members adequate notice before it comes up.

Mr. GINGRICH. If the gentleman will continue yielding, I might request, and I do not know if the gentleman would necessarily be able to do so, but I would like to suggest from the standpoint of the Republican side, it would be very helpful if there is a way to get 2 weeks' notice.

That is such a major issue and one in which the President took such a firm position, and if there was something on the possibility of 2 weeks' notice, it would be helpful on our side.

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman will continue yielding, we will do the best we can.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask one further question of the distinguished majority leader, on next Thursday and Friday, they are lumped together for the consideration of two measures. I know it is difficult for the majority leader to predict with absolute authenticity, considering what the other body is doing, whether or not we have a session on Friday. Is it possible, or would we be doing something like this week?

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, we will try to advise Members at the earliest possible moment as to whether or not Friday will be needed.

As the gentleman knows, we are in an important conference next week on reconciliation with sequestration in the background, and we want to make sure we do everything to get that concluded as quickly as possible. If we need that day in order to make sure the conference goes forward, we will schedule business. If we do not need it, we will make that call as early as we can and let Members know that.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that comment, and to add by way of observation, as we get, again, near the end of the session, and Members would like to know with a degree of certainty, particularly on Mondays and Fridays. We do have a problem in our respective leadership roles of having enough people around here to serve on conference committees when push comes to shove. Sometimes when Members are inclined to think, why do we have to be here when there is very little scheduled, the real underlying reason for that is somebody has to be here to serve on the conference committees.

When we are not in session, Members on the conference committees say, shucks, I might as well go home, too, and we get out at Christmas time instead of Thanksgiving time. I am inclined to think Members would like to make it by Thanksgiving.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I am in that kind of a box, trying to take a bill to conference, and because of 60 nongermane amendments to the bill that was sent over there by the House, we have 12 other committees involved in the conference, taking 59 people to conference, and we do not have a session, we have no conference. We cannot get through. I would like to get out of here sometime this year.

Mr. MICHEL. The gentleman has buttressed my points very well, and I thank the gentleman for the contribution.

Mr. GINGRICH. If the gentleman will continue yielding, one more topic I might ask the majority leader, the President sent the crime and drug package up in June, and I understand it is now in the Committee on the Judiciary, and as I understand, the Senate sent a drug bill over this week.

Does the Democratic leadership have any plans as to when either of those bills might reach the floor?

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman will continue yielding, we will be acting as expeditiously as we can on what the Senate has sent over. We do plan to bring out legislation on the drug problem before we leave in November or December. Hopefully, November. So we will be bringing a bill to the floor.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished majority leader indicated that "sequestration was lurking in the background." I merely asked for this time so that I would remind Members that as of Monday, sequester will be lurking in the foreground. Sequester will take effect on that day, because Congress has not met the deadline in passing the reconciliation bill.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order at any time on Wednesday, October 18, 1989, for the Speaker to declare recesses, subject to the call of the Chair for the purpose of receiving in joint meeting his excellency Roh Tae Woo, President of the Republic of Korea.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare recesses on Monday, October 16, 1989, subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT FROM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1989 TO MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday, October 13, 1989, it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday, October 16, 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE PRIVATE CALENDAR ON TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Private Calendar be dispensed with on Tuesday, October 17, 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT-WIDE ETHICS ACT OF 1989

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks, and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the recently passed House version of the reconciliation bill is noteworthy in part for its action on a portion of the President's Government-Wide Ethics Act of 1989.

As a House sponsor of the President's ethics bill, I am pleased by the steps taken to not punish Presidential appointees by first requiring them to divest themselves of certain assets to avoid conflict-of-interests and then assessing tax penalties on the gains realized from such divestitures.

As Congress prepares to more fully address the particulars of ethics legislation, I urge my colleagues to consider providing such protection to judicial and legislative branch appointees as well.

A primary objective of the Government-Wide Ethics Act of 1989 is to apply standards across all three branches of the Government.

I commend the Ways and Means Committee—and in turn my House colleagues—for their action on this provision.

COMMITTEE REPORT

14. Deferral of recognition of gains for property required to be divested by Federal ethics requirements (sec. 11655 of the bill and new sec. 1043 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Generally, gain or loss is recognized on any sale, exchange or other disposition of property. The Internal Revenue Code contains provisions under which taxpayers may elect not to recognize gain realized on the involuntary conversion of certain property if property similar or related in service or use to the property converted is acquired by the taxpayer within the replacement period (sec. 1033). In such a situation, gain is recognized only to the extent that the amount realized exceeds the cost of the replacement property. The basis of the replacement property will generally be the same as that of the converted property; however, proper adjustments must be made for (1) any money received and not spent to acquire replacement property, and (2) any gain or loss not recognized.

REASONS FOR CHANGE

The committee is aware that the President has issued an executive order requiring that certain executive branch employees divest themselves of certain assets which might pose a conflict of interest. The committee believes it is important for individuals to find government service attractive. The committee wishes to minimize the burden of government service which is imposed by recognition of gain on divested assets which would are sold only because of the ethics requirements.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

The bill permits any individual required to divest himself of an asset pursuant to a certificate of divestiture issued pursuant to an executive order (relating to conflict-of-interest rules) in effect on the date of enactment to elect to roll over any gain realized upon sale to the extent that the individual purchases "permitted property" within 60 days of the date of sale of the asset. The individual's basis in the permitted property is reduced (but not below zero) by the amount of any gain not recognized. Any subsequent sale or redemption of the permitted property would result in gain or loss recognition. To the extent realized gain exceeds the cost of the permitted property purchased by the individual, gain will be recognized currently.

Eligible individuals are those subject to an executive order (relating to conflict-of-interest rules) in effect on the date of enactment and the spouse or minor or dependent child of any such individual. Eligible assets are those assets which an eligible individual is required to divest pursuant to the certificate of divestiture. Permitted property is limited to Treasury securities and any diversified, investment fund approved under regulations issued by the Office of Government Ethics.

Example 1.—If an individual is required to divest himself of corporate stock which had an accrued gain of $8,000, and within 60 days of the date of the stock he purchases a Treasury bond for $10,000, he may elect not to recognize any of the gain from the stock sale and, instead, to reduce his basis in the Treasury bond by $8,000, to $2,000. If he subsequently sells the Treasury bond for $11,000, he must recognize a $9,000 ($11,000 minus $2,000) gain at that time.

Example 2.—If an individual is required to divest himself of corporate stock which had an accrued gain of $12,000, and within 60 days of the date of the stock he purchases a Treasury bond for $10,000, he may elect not to recognize $10,000 of the gain from the stock sale and reduce his basis in the Treasury bond by $10,000, to zero (under no circumstances can the taxpayer create a negative basis in permitted property). He would then have an immediate recognition of the remaining $2,000 of capital gain. If he subsequently sells the Treasury bond for $11,000, he must recognize a $11,000 gain at that time. If the taxpayer wishes to defer all of the $12,000 in realized gain in the present year, he would have to purchase $12,000 or more of Treasury securities.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision applies to divestments first required after the date of enactment.

SEC. 11655. NONRECOGNITION FOR CERTAIN SALES TO COMPLY WITH CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST REQUIREMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to common nontaxable exchanges) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1043. SALE OF PROPERTY TO COMPLY WITH CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN.—If an eligible person sells any property pursuant to a certificate of divestiture, at the election of the taxpayer, gain from such sale shall be recognized only to the extent that the amount realized on such sale exceeds the cost (reduced by any basis adjustment under subsection (c) attributable to a prior sale) of any permitted property purchased by the taxpayer during the 60-day period beginning on the date of such sale.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) ELIGIBLE PERSON.—The term 'eligible person' means—

"(A) an officer or employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government, and

"(B) any spouse or minor or dependent child whose ownership of any property is attributable under any executive order referred to in paragraph (2) to a person referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(2) CERTIFICATE OF DIVESTITURE.—The term 'certificate of divestiture' means any written determination—

"(A) which is made pursuant to the provisions of an executive order which is in effect on the date of the enactment of this section and which relates to conflict-of-interest rules, and

"(B) which specifies that the divestiture of specified property is reasonably necessary to comply with the provisions of such executive order.

"(3) PERMITTED PROPERTY.—The term 'permitted property' means any obligation of the United States or any diversified investment fund approved by regulations issued by the Office of Government Ethics.

"(4) PURCHASE.—The taxpayer shall be considered to have purchased any permitted property if, but for subsection (c), the unadjusted basis of such property would be its cost within the meaning of section 1012.

"(c) BASIS ADJUSTMENTS.—If gain from the sale of any prohibited property is not recognized by reason of subsection (a), such gain shall be applied to reduce (in the order acquired) the basis for determining gain or loss of any permitted property which is purchased by the taxpayer during the 60-day period described in subsection (a)."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1223 (relating to holding period of property) is amended by redesignating paragraph (14) as paragraph (15) and by inserting after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held property the acquisition of which resulted under secion 1043 in the nonrecognition of any part of the gain realized on the sale of other property, there shall be included the period for which such other property had been held as of the date of such sale."

(2) Subsection (a) of section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis) is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (23), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (24) and inserting ", and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(25) in the case of property the acquisition of which resulted under section 1043 in the nonrecognition of any part of the gain realized on the sale of other property, to the extent provided in section 1043(c)."

(3) The table of sections for part III of subchapter O of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1043. Sale of property to comply with conflict-of-interest requirements."

EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply in cases where the divestiture is first required to be made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SOUTH AFRICA FINANCIAL SANCTIONS

(Mr. FAUNTROY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as second ranking majority member of the House Banking Committee, and as a member of the Congressional Black Caucus and the recently formed legislative task force on South Africa, I am introducing the South Africa Financial Sanctions for Democracy Amendment Act of 1989. I am introducing this bill as an expression of the urgency many of us attach to America's moral obligation to enlist U.S. banks in the international effort to accelerate a negotiated settlement to South Africa's political crisis which is at the root of its debt crisis.

There are some who may think this an inopportune time to introduce such a bill when there is a newly elected President in South Africa who has offered some conciliatory comments and actions. De Klerk's announcement yesterday of the long-overdue release of Walter Sisulu and other African National Congress veterans on the eve of his meeting with church leaders Desmond Tutu, Allan Boesak, and Frank Chikane is indicative of the reformist image that de Klerk seeks to foster. Yet it is not the first time that Pretoria has released prominent political prisoners. Following the announcement, Reverend Chikane warned that if de Klerk's "aim is to release leaders to come and live in an apartheid society, then we will continue calling for sanctions in this country." The release of Mr. Sisulu and others was widely anticipated as a gift to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to help her defuse renewed pressures for tougher financial sanctions at the upcoming Commonwealth heads-of-state summit in Malaysia.

Certainly, President de Klerk has proffered a more progessive image than his predecessor. He has spoken of negotiations with black leaders. He has visited frontline state presidents. He has even allowed several demonstrations to proceed without police interference. But, it is important to note that he has yet to alter the legal basis of apartheid or challenge its premise based on group identification. Even the demonstrations were allowed despite the fact that the state of emergency still exists expressly to prohibit them. De Klerk did not change the law, he merely allowed an exception. Mrs. Albertina Sisulu and their son, Zwelake Sisulu remain under heavy restrictions under the state of emergency. There have also been new rounds of detentions apparently aimed at the leadership of the new Mass Democratic Movement which has organized the protests. Leaders such as Titus Mafolo and Kurnick Ndlovu, both of whom met with President Bush in July as part of the delegation of Mrs. Albertina Sisulu, have recently been arrested. These actions belie the sincerity of Mr. de Klerk in accommodating black aspirations. How can he arrest a younger generation of leaders while releasing their elders and be seen as sincere?

We should, of course, welcome the new mood that Mr. de Klerk expresses. However, it must be borne in mind that Pretoria does not have a track record that inspires confidence that it will voluntarily make the necessary moves needed to promote a negotiated settlement to South Africa's political crisis. Further, de Klerk's notions of reforming apartheid in a process of evolutionary change falls far short of the urgent need to dismantle a thoroughly racist totalitarian system and install a democratic form of government. If Mr. de Klerk intends to move in new and positive directions, the criteria by which his intent can be judged are clearly available and universally agreed. He should abolish the state of emergency, free Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners, unban black political movements, and begin meaningful negotiations with truly representative black leaders.

Until these things begin to happen, those of us who are concerned with promoting a peaceful transition to nonracial democracy must look for ways to continue to encourage the South African Government in the direction of fundamental change. The country's debt crisis, one that is rooted in its unjust political system, offers the most appropriate pressure point for persuading de Klerk of the need to adopt such measures. It does this because it is timely: negotiations between Pretoria and its creditors are imminent. It does it because it may be the most effective pressure that we can bring to bear. And, it still responds to those who feel breathing room for de Klerk is necessary to demonstrate his sincerity. Let me explain what I mean.

There is a broad consensus that financial pressures on South Africa account for much of the change that has occurred thus far, and therefore need to be sustained and strengthened in order to hasten a transition to democracy. Despite the demonstrated efficacy of financial sanctions, those banks holding a portion of South Africa's $7.5 billion debt have been reluctant participants in exerting pressure on South Africa in spite of the fact that it was American banks that precipitated the current era of sanctions when they called in South Africa's short- to medium-term loans in 1985 that triggered the country's partial debt moratorium.

Whether the banks like it or not they are inescapable actors in the quest for change in South Africa and must shoulder part of the responsibility for helping us bring this tragic chapter in South Africa's history to as quick an end as possible. It is neither in the interest of the United States nor the people of South Africa for American banks to wash their hands of South Africa by agreeing to generous rescheduling terms offered by Pretoria—terms that buy more time for a white minority regime already in retreat while the banks secure their bottom line in disregard for the aspirations of the South African people.

Yet, without a law that sets some responsible parameters for debt repayment, and that closes up the many loopholes covering financial transactions in the current Antiapartheid Act, the banking community may very well let South Africa's apartheid regime off the hook. They did in 1987 when they agreed to terms that would allow them to convert South African short- to medium-term loans into 10-year exit bonds in violation of the spirit if not the letter of current sanctions law. To do so again would have tragic consequences for the people of South Africa who would have to endure a further prolonging of their repression at a time when the peoples of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union are at long last beginning to taste the sweet fruits of freedom.

Many in the South African Government and even within this body argue that increased sanctions will destroy the South African economy. To the contrary, South Africa is destroying its own economy. With freedom for its majority deferred, there looms the prospect of an increasingly impoverished economy and infrastructure crumbling under the weight of the administration of apartheid and the societal disruptions inherent to the resistance of its implementation. Freedom would not occur before South Africa would slip into an economic backwater from which it might take generations to recover. We cannot afford to see such a scenario unfold when we have this opportunity presented by South Africa's debt crunch between now and 1992. By helping to speed up the process of change, we can more quickly move South Africa back into the international financial community as well as relieve it of the catastrophic burdens of its self-destructive system of government.

This bill is both fair and tough. We would like to see the banks repaid by Pretoria as soon as possible. Rescheduling is not ruled out altogether as long as South Africa is required to repay no less than 20 percent of principal on a yearly basis. Conversions of short- to medium-term South African debt into long-term exit loans will be prohibited since these, in effect, constitute new loans that threaten to undermine the impact of sanctions without requiring Pretoria to make fundamental political changes.

Those banks that have taken the exit vehicle will be required to divest themselves of such assets by the end of 1992. The limits placed on rescheduling and the prohibition on exit loans would take immediate effect along with several other provisions designed to close loopholes in the current Antiapartheid Act as well as strengthen our opposition to any request that South Africa might make for a loan from the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

We do not share the administration's view that those sanctions already in effect are adequate when they were never whole heartedly enforced. But this bill does attempt to accommodate the administration on the issue of time by structuring into it a framework whereby time is used constructively. Time will be made to work to speed up peaceful change rather than for delaying change to buy more time.

There are provisions that would not take effect until either 6 months, 1 year, or 2 to 3 years had passed, thereby giving the banks and the administration intervals of time in which to attempt to persuade Pretoria through dialog, consultations and diplomacy to take steps outlined in the bill that would immediately trigger an easing of pressures contained in the act. Thus, the time that the administration is seeking is built into this act either explicitly or implicitly in all of its provisions.

Therefore, I am appealing for a bipartisan show of support for this bill as a demonstration that we care as much for freedom in South Africa as we do elsewhere in the world where the winds of change are gathering force.

DEVASTATION OF HURRICANE HUGO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALLON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, 3 weeks ago, my district was devastated by the worst storm of this century.

By now the rest of America knows that Hurricane Hugo ploughed through South Carolina leaving in its wake complete destruction and chaos.

We've got a half million people displaced, a quarter of million out of work and damage to physical property exceeding $4 billion.

That's not taking into account the effects on agriculture, tourism, and daily increase in clean up costs.

It will take us years to recover.

But, as the people of South Carolina begin the long, painful process of piecing their lives and belongings back together, it has become clear that one of the greatest casualties was our forests.

Hugo prematurely harvested over 3 years' worth of South Carolina's timber—the State's largest cash crop.

It left over 6.5 billion board feet of saw timber on the ground.

For a $4.3 billion industry this sort of damage is crippling for the entire State economy.

One observer said, "It looks like a giant walked through the forest and broke off trees. Trees 30 inches in diameter are snapped like twigs."

And unlike other crop producers, timber farmers have no substantial Federal assistance program to fall back on.

For agricultural producers of program and nonprogram crops there are a number of Federal farm assistance programs available.

The Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 provides disaster assistance payments to farmers who suffered losses in production due to damaging weather including hurricane.

As well, the Farmers Home Administration has low-interest emergency loans for loss of farms and equipment.

But the timber farmer is largely left to his own devices.

This is bad news for those concerned about the production and conservation of the 4-million plus acres affected by Hurricane Hugo.

That's why today I, along with members of the South Carolina delegation, am introducing legislation to set up a cost-sharing program for the clearing and reforestation of timber acreage damaged by Hurricane Hugo.

This program will encouage tree owners to reestablish their damaged stands by assisting in the reforestation of damaged stands, site preparation, and other necessary timber stand reestablishment.

The bill provides $100 million for this program and assumes 75 percent of the cost of implementation for private timber stands of 1,000 acres or less and 50 percent for private stands over 1,000 acres.

This program is modeled on the Forestry Incentive Program which has been extremely effective in encouraging reforestation but which if funded at current levels would take 111 years to reforest South Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, timber is a costly, long-term investment.

Most of South Carolina's small timber owners simply don't have the means to replant damaged and destroyed stands.

The result will be a severe blow to our national conservation efforts and to South Carolina's economy.

This country's spent millions promoting conservation in the West, the Amazon and other areas around the world.

I urge my colleagues to turn their eyes back to South Carolina, North Carolina, and Puerto Rico and help restore one of this Nation's most important natural resources—her forests.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTRODUCTION OF THE INCARCERATED VETERANS REHABILITATION AND READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to announce the introduction of the Incarcerated Veterans Rehabilitation and Readjustment Act of 1989, a bill which I am sponsoring together with over 30 of my colleagues.

This is a simple and straightforward bill; it does not create a new program or entitlement nor does it excuse incarcerated veterans for their crimes. The bill merely recognizes that thousands of incarcerated veterans—up to 20 percent of the Nation's prison population—have not been provided with the benefits and services to which they are entitled as veterans. The bill also recognizes that over one-quarter of Vietnam veterans currently suffer from total or partial post-traumatic stress disorder. While the vet centers program has successfully reached out to many Vietnam veterans, incarcerated veterans have been largely ignored; an oversight which this bill is designed to rectify.

In a nutshell, the bill directs the Nation's 194 vet centers to reach out to incarcerated veterans and provide them with readjustment counseling. Other provisions seek to ensure that this counseling continues, when necessary, following the veteran's release. Again, the bill does not create a new program, but merely attempts to better utilize resources which already exist under the vet center program. It makes little sense for the vet centers to fail to reach out to any group of veterans suffering from readjustment difficulties. It is especially important to address these problems if they may have been a factor contributing to a veteran's criminal behavior. When fully implemented, this legislation should reduce recidivism among incarcerated veterans.

The Vietnam Veterans of America has done impressive work in this area. Over 30 VVA chapters have been formed in prisons, providing a forum for thousands of incarcerated Vietnam veterans to come to grips with their wartime experiences. The Department of Veterans Affairs can and should play a role in this effort. The Incarcerated Veterans Rehabilitation and Readjustment Act will meet this need in a progressive and cost-effective manner, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

MR. EDWARD DOYLE: TEAMSTER AND COMMUNITY LEADER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today is Columbus Day—a fitting day to pay tribute to Mr. Edward Doyle, who was honored on October 6, 1989, at the Annual Yonkers Columbus Day Dinner. At the dinner, Mr. Doyle received the Savino Ferranto Humanitarian Award.

As a Teamster and as a community leader, Mr. Doyle has unselfishly dedicated his time, his energy, and his vast experience to the city of Yonkers and to Westchester County. He has been a committed member of local 456 of the Teamsters Union since 1958, when he worked for the Castle Block Company in Tarrytown, NY. Within 3 years, Mr. Doyle was elected vice president of local 456. His term was interrupted when he was called into active duty in the U.S. Army Reserves when President Kennedy activated the Reserves during the Berlin crisis.

However, Mr. Doyle's commitment to local 456 continued. He was reelected vice president and business agent in 1976 and was appointed secretary-treasurer and business manager by the executive board in 1985 and reelected by the membership later that year.

Mr. Doyle has been widely recognized for his work on behalf of the Teamsters. He was named by Joseph Trerotola, director of the Eastern Conference of Teamsters, to serve as a member of the policy committee of the National Construction Division of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. Mr. Doyle himself comes from a Teamster family. His father served in local 456 for 25 years, and was president for 10 years.

But there is much more to Mr. Doyle, or "Eddie" as his friends—and I am proud to count myself among them—call him, than his vast commitment to the Teamsters. Eddie has spent many years devoting himself to the city of Yonkers. He is a member of the board of directors of the Angel Guardian of the Elderly. He is a member of the board of directors of the Brighter Tomorrow—a shelter for abused and battered women and children. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Dr. I Foundation and the Yonkers P.A.L.

In addition, Eddie has been involved in politics. In fact, he has been involved in bi-partisan politics, as he has served on both Democratic and Republican political committees.

This was certainly not the first time that Eddie Doyle has been recognized for his many gifts. He was honored by the Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Program for the Union Award. He was recognized by Willie Mays and honored for his devotion to children, specifically to children with cerebral palsy, to the March of Dimes, to the Children's Village, and to special education for underprivileged children.

I am proud of Mr. Doyle for receiving this prestigious award, and for his many years of unceasing commitment to his neighbors. He is an inspiration to all of us.

AN APPRECIATION OF NEW YORK YANKEE JOE DiMAGGIO, A TRUE AMERICAN HERO

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that Italian-Americans have left their mark on the great national pastime, baseball. They range from Tony Lazzeri and Frank Crosetti to Phil Rizzuto and Yogi Berra to current Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda and "Bart" Giamatti, the baseball commissioner who died last month. None, however, can match the credentials of that great New York Yankee, Joltin' Joe DiMaggio.

Mr. Speaker, many of today's young people know the Yankee clipper only from his television commercials as "Mr. Coffee." But even casual baseball fans know him as one of the greatest players ever to participate in the sport, perhaps the best all-round player in history. He excelled at every facet of the game—Joe was sensational at the plate, hitting for both average and power, a splendid, graceful, ballhawking centerfielder, and a great thrower. He was a daring and alert base runner, a heads-up player who never missed a sign in his entire career and a team leader. Not once in his major league career, which spanned from 1936 through 1951, was Joe ever ejected from a game for protesting an umpire's decision. Joe was truly everything a manager could hope for, even when he was hobbled with injuries that would have done in lesser men.

Joe gave 100 percent effort every time he stepped on the field. He was the Yanks' team leader on clubs which won 10 American League pennants and nine World Championships.

Some of Joe's career statistics do not measure up to those of other greats, but one must remember when examining Joe's lifetime statistics that he missed three seasons in the prime of this career because of military service—1943–1945.

Off the field, Joe was a gentleman. He was not a controversial person. He never badmouthed anyone. He would not allow himself to be dragged into any seamy situations and he got along with his teammates and the Yankee front office. During his Yankee career, Joe was quiet, shy, and conservative. He avoided strangers and publicity. All Joe's teammates were fond of him and held him in awe much as the average fan did.

This Saturday night Joe DiMaggio will be honored at the National Italian American Foundation's 14th anniversary dinner in Washington. The group, of which I am a founder, will give Joe its Lifetime Achievement Award. Vice President and Mrs. Dan Quayle will be present at the affair, which attracts nearly 3,000 people. Vice President QUAYLE will be carrying a letter from President Bush, who has attended four previous dinners but is otherwise occupied this year. Italian President Francesco Cossiga also will attend the dinner at which actor Danny Aiello, fashion designer Valentino, and K-Mart Chairman Joseph Antonini also will be honored.

It is appropriate that Joe DiMaggio will receive the Lifetime Achievement Award this year because the Hall of Famer will turn 75 on November 25.

Mr. Speaker, it seems like only yesterday Joe DiMaggio set a record that will be toughest to surpass—he hit safely in 56 consecutive games in 1941. During the year, a person could approach a stranger and ask: "Did he do it?" Even the ones who didn't speak English knew who he was: "DiMaggio" was one of the first 100 words immigrants heard on arrival.

In 1969, when the All-Star Game was played here in Washington during major league baseball's centennial anniversary, Joe was voted baseball's greatest living player. In 1976, during the Nation's Bicentennial, Joe's 56-game hitting streak was voted the most memorable moment in American League history.

If Yankee Stadium was the "House That Ruth Built," it was Joe who made the people feel at home.

The Yankee Encyclopedia says the following about DiMaggio: Joe was completely dedicated to his profession. He was constantly learning more about the game and improving himself as a player. Any teammate interested in becoming better could go to Joe and recieve expert advice or information. Joe remained in the clubhouse long after the game was over while less gifted players were in a hurry to run along. Joe always kept himself in top physical shape and adhered to training rules. He was the most responsible athlete and felt responsibility to the Yanks, taking each loss as a personal failure.

Paul Simon wrote a song by Simon & Garfunkel in the late 1960's entitled "Mrs. Robinson," in which the question was asked: "Where have you gone Joe DiMaggio? A nation turns its lonely eyes to you." The answer: He may no longer be playing baseball, but his presence as a true American hero is felt.

DEINDUSTRIALIZATION OF AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, you—as well as all of my colleagues—know very well my concern about the deindustrialization of America. It is a subject I have made my passion and my purpose. It is a topic on which I have spent countless hours addressing the Members of this body.

And—most of all—it is a story which needs to be told before it is too late. How nations like Japan are filling our markets with their imports, and preventing our goods from gaining access to theirs.

How, consequently, our own factories are beginning to close and our industrial base begins to crumble in the face of overseas competition. It is a war—a struggle to save America from impending economic disaster—as well as our own shortsightedness.

Only recently, however, I also have become well acquainted with the deforestation of America—by, you guessed it—Japan and other nations.

This, too, is a tale which needs telling, for it involves the crippling of yet another American industry from abroad.

All of this activity was brought to my attention by the President of the United Carpenters Union, Sigurd Lucassen, whose members have lost many jobs because of this deforestation.

Indeed, just as many steelworkers in my district have been thrown out of work because of the importation of foreign steel, the jobs of many American mill workers have been threatened by the exporting of raw timber to China, Korea, and—most of all—Japan.

Japan, it seems, is buying up our unprocessed logs and shipping them back home. And—because of the gap between the yen and the dollar—they're buying up our forests at dirt cheap prices!

"What would they want with our raw timber," you may ask. "Why don't they just buy our processed lumber if they need it?"

The answer is simple: Because they want to keep their own mills running.

Japan's lumber industry consists of about 25,000 saw mills—mainly small, mom and pop businesses. Japan, however, does not have enough forests to keep all the mills running. As a result, the Japanese Government must subsidize the industry by finding additional sources of raw timber.

Sources like our West Coast, where States like Oregon, Washington, California, and Alaska provide 90 percent of all softwood logs exported from the United States. Sources like Wisconsin and Michigan—States which also are involved in the lumber industry.

The number of softwood logs shipped overseas has skyrocketed over the past two decades. In 1971 Oregon, Washington, and northern California exported 417.7 million board feet [mmbf] of softwood logs overseas. Alaska sent them another 38.9 mmbf.

In 1987, however, the number of logs shipped to Japan increased to 1,684.5 million board feet—an increase of nearly 400 percent.

During the 1980's alone logs equivalent to a 600,000-acre forest—I repeat equivalent to a 600,000-acre forest—were exported overseas. Last year alone, exports—mostly to Japan—consumed one in four logs cut on the West Coast and in Alaska.

As a result America's small mill owners—who have been unable to match the bids of Japanese log buyers—are having trouble finding enough raw timber to keep their own mills running.

In the words of my colleague, Mr. DEFAZIO of Oregon, whose leadership on this issue is well known: Decks at Japanese mills are piled high as Mount Fuji with logs from the Northwest, while mills here at home are scraping for leftovers."

And this, in turn, costs American jobs. According to a Forest Service study, 3.5 million American mill jobs are lost with every million board feet of timber exported instead of being milled in the United States.

And, of course, where there is a shortage of raw timber there must be a shortage of finished timber as well. So carpenters all over the Nation—including those in my district— also are threatened with losing their jobs because they have no finished wood with which to work.

Unless, of course, we are willing to buy finished wood from other Nations—wood made from our own natural resources. It's almost like being made to buy apples grown from our own trees.

Simply stated, Mr. Speaker, States like Oregon, Washington, and Alaska are becoming giant tree farms for Japan. They are being asked to relinquish one of our Nation's most precious national resources to countries that have none of their own.

And this must stop.

It's time that America did what other nations—like British Columbia in Canada—have done when Japan made them the same offer—just say no.

If Japan wants to buy our timber, let them buy it in processed form, as they do from British Columbia, which has forbidden the export of raw timber to any foreign country. Let them bolster our industries not theirs.

Mr. Speaker, I am very upset over seeing our industries go under as a result of unfair foreign competition. I think we should stop this whole insane process of sending our resources—economic and natural—overseas to keep the workers of other nations employed.

For American workers are just that, American. And we in the Congress must stand together to protect all of their jobs. After all, that's what we're supposed to be here for, to look out for their interests, not those of foreign nations.

Mr. Speaker, God blessed this Nation with many wonderful natural resources. And our forests are certainly among our Nation's greatest treasures—as well as an important part of our heritage.

But no resource is limitless. That's why we must use this valuable resource, with great care, efficiency, and in the best way possible. That's why we must use them in a way which will benefit America the most.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mrs. COLLINS (at the request of Mr. GEPHARDT) for today on account of medical reasons.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 248. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide increase penalties for certain major frauds against the United States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, October 13, 1989, at 10 a.m.

SENATE—Thursday, October 12, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable PATRICK J. LEAHY, a Senator from the State of Vermont.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge: He putteth down one, and setteth up another.—Psalm 75:6, 7.

Almighty God, from whom comes all authority and to whom all in authority are accountable, help us to sense Your presence in our midst today. Consistent with our democratic system, this Chamber is crowded with the needs of all the people—all the cities, counties, and States of the Nation—plus the demands of business, industry, finance, education, agriculture, and thousands of organizations, as well as international affairs. One hundred fallible people, chosen by and representing 250 million, bear this impossible burden. In their commitment to this responsibility give the Senators and their staffs grace to seek Thy face, to call upon Thee for divine guidance, and to remember their accountability to Thee.

In Jesus' name. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable PATRICK J. LEAHY, a Senator from the State of Vermont, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. LEAHY thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the distinguished majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders this morning, there will be a period for morning business until 11 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

As I indicated yesterday, I hope that shortly we will be in a position to get a unanimous-consent agreement and turn to the Nicaraguan assistance bill, H.R. 3385, under an agreement with cloture being filed after 2 hours on the bill.

I am now advised we will be able to get that agreement. Shortly I will propound the agreement. I note the presence of the relevant Senators on the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I certainly will yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I just want to say to the majority leader that some of us on the Appropriations Committee oppose bitterly that bill, on the basis that it should not be done, and that we should spend the money elsewhere.

I want to state to the majority leader, I object to a unanimous-consent request and a cloture petition unless I am allowed to offer an amendment that germaneness would be waived, and the 1-hour rule would be waived: I would be forced to object because, otherwise, we did not amend in committee. Our amendments are saved for the floor. Therefore, I object unless I can get that kind of unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator permit me to discuss this with him briefly?

Mr. ADAMS. I would be most happy to discuss it with the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF LEADERS' TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the time for the two leaders will be reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

SOCIAL SECURITY MAILINGS TO SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I rise as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security to call the attention of the Senate to a new event in American life, which is the growing number of mailings sent to senior citizens telling them of legislative threats to Social Security benefits of one kind or another. Sometimes these are very specific, having to do, for example, with the catastrophic health care measures, which we dealt with last week—which we undid last week. Sometimes there are simply more generalized appeals to anxiety, or, if they are not appeals to anxiety, certainly they can arouse it.

I have, for example, a letter here—it is a mailer, I believe is the term we use—entitled "Legislative Alert," sent to senior citizens in rural areas, and it speaks of a threat to millions of senior citizens who live in rural areas. It says on the front, "Your immediate action may mean the difference between life and death for you or a fellow senior."

Inside, Mr. President, we are asked to send postcards to Members of this body, and, if we do, we will find ourselves very quickly asked for money.

Mr. President, may we have order? Is this morning business, or is this a legislative conference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, there exists an uncomplicated right of anyone who wishes to write letters to anyone whose address he can locate, I suppose, and it is not a right which is wholly unrestrained by certain responsibilities under the mail fraud statutes. But I do not rise to discuss that aspect. It is the aspect of causing alarm.

We have some 30 million senior citizens who receive Social Security checks every month. In half a century, those checks have never been a day late or a dollar short.

The Social Security reserves are rising at $1 billion a week, and in fairly short order they will be rising $3 billion a week. There has never been in history a revenue stream as powerful in public finance, and yet at most a bare majority of adult Americans not now retired are confident they will receive Social Security benefits. Just a few years ago, it was down to almost as low as a third showing any real confidence, but half the American adults not retired are not persuaded they are going to receive retirement benefits, which is a statement of concern I find surprising, and one to which we should attend.

We have reported from the Finance Committee a proposal that will, for example, give to persons paying into Social Security a statement of how much they have paid and what they may expect in benefits, if they should continue to do so over their working lives; what they would get in retirement benefits, in disability benefits, what their survivors' benefits for spouses and children would be. This would be a way of being in touch with the individual so that he or she knows that the Social Security Administration knows they are there.

But still there is this problem of fright mail. We have not seen it before and it is preying on this anxiety.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, without any animosity, but simply as examples, some mail of the kind arriving in my office, and perhaps a little more does, as I said, because I am chairman of the subcommittee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL MAJORITY COMMITTEE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR FRIEND:

Fraud. Deception. Lying. Extortion.

These are all crimes. Serious crimes.

If you or I committed any of these crimes, we would be arrested, prosecuted, convicted, and sent to prison.

But a large group of powerful people are committing all of these crimes right now—and they're getting away with it!

In fact, there is absolutely no chance whatsoever that any of them will be arrested or even prosecuted.

I'm not thinking about organized crime, international drug dealers, or insider trading on Wall Street.

I'm taking about the United States Congress!

That's right. What the liberals in Congress are doing right now with the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Program is nothing less than an outright fraud!

And the victims of their outrageous crimes are—as usual—the American taxpayers, people like you and me.

Let me explain.

As you know, for the last several months the Congressional Majority Committee has been leading the attack on the latest massive liberal tax-and-spend scheme.

CMC's National Campaign to Repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act has mobilized tens of thousands of American taxpayers to send postcards to Congressman Dan Rostenkowski, to call the White House, and to sign petitions to President Bush.

Needless to say this tremendous public outcry against the Catastrophic Coverage Act's huge tax increase on America's senior citizens has caused more than a few waves on Capitol Hill.

As I'm sure you know, the one thing every Congressman and Senator really worries about is getting re-elected!

But at the same time, the liberals who control both houses of Congress are determined to do everything they can to hang onto their latest big government, tax-and-spend program.

So, in order to have their cake and eat it too, they've resorted to the outright deception and extortion of the American people!

Here's what's happened since I last wrote to you:

First, the Senate killed another attempt by Senator John McCain of Arizona to delay for one year the outrageous surtax seniors have been hit with—a tax that pays for coverage most already have!

Just like before however, they refused to take a clear cut up-or-down vote. McCain's proposal was blocked on a procedural vote.

That way that can still claim they actually support the idea of delaying the surtax—at the same time they voted against it!

But that's nothing compared to what the House Ways and Means Committee just did.

Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, whose first arrogant response was that senior citizens "are going to have to swallow and accept" the huge tax hike, apparently is beginning to feel the heat.

But as I said, he and his liberal cronies are ready to try anything rather than give up their favorite new tax-and-spend scheme.

So last month he orchestrated an amendment through his committee which was billed as a "major modification" of the Catastrophic Coverage Act designed to "solve the problem" of the surtax.

In reality, this amendment is nothing short of the deception and extortion of America's senior citizens!

First, it cuts the size of the tax increase in half.

And to hear the liberals talk about it, we're supposed to consider that a gift!

My response to Dan Rostenkowski and the liberals is the same as that of conservative Congressman Harris Fawell of Illinois:

"The problem with the surtax is its existence, not the amount."

Second, and even more outrageous, the amendment allows seniors to "opt-out" of the Catastrophic Coverage Program—but to do so they must give up all of Medicare Part B.

In other words, if this passes, the only way out of the catastrophic surtax is to give up all coverage of doctor bills!

As Congressman Fawell said, ". . . seniors recognize this as no real choice. It is an offer most seniors can't accept and the sponsors know it. It is a cruel hoax which seniors recognize. By attaching the catastrophic package to Part B, the Ways and Means Committee admits the program cannot stand on its own merits."

Or to be more blunt, this amounts to the extortion of America's elderly by the U.S. Congress!

If this amendment is passed, Dan Rostenkowski and the liberals will claim they have "solved the problem" of the catastrophic surtax.

When in fact they will have made a bad situation worse.

To say nothing of having preserved their outrageous new big government tax-and-spend scheme.

This amendment is attached to a bill that will probably be voted on by the full House in mid-September.

That means the next two weeks are the most critical time yet for our National Campaign to Repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

We must go all out to mobilize the opposition to this huge tax hike on America's senior citizens.

That means more letters, more postcards, more phone calls . . . In short, maximum pressure on the liberals on Capitol Hill!

And it also means one more thing . . .

Targeting for defeat the key liberal Congressmen and Senators who are behind this "cruel hoax" on America's elderly—starting with Dan Rostenkowski himself!

But we can't do any of this without you.

Your support in the past has brought us this far. We are now at a "moment of truth".

I desperately need your help now to keep our campaign strong and meet this liberal threat head on.

If you could possibly contribute $100, $250, or even $500 to CMC's National Campaign to Repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act, it would go a very long way.

If that's too much, $50, $25, $15, or anything at all would still be a big help.

But please, send whatever you can today. Developments are happening fast and there is no time to lose!

Sincerely,

RALPH GALLIANO,
National Chairman.

REPLY TO RALPH GALLIANO

DEAR RALPH:

We can't let Dan Rostenkowski and the liberals in Congress get away with the outright fraud, deception, and extortion of America's senior citizens. The Catastrophic Coverage Act must be repealed now!

I'm returning this entire page to you right away with my maximum contribution to CMC's National Campaign to Repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act:

DUE APRIL 15, 1990: YOUR NEW TAX BILL FOR UP TO $1,600 MORE THAN YOU'RE PAYING TODAY

(Sample Enclosed)

DEAR FRIEND:

The Government of the United States has decided that you have not done enough for your country.

They have decided that older Americans owe more taxes than their younger counterparts.

You'll be seeing your "elderly surcharge" in April 1990.

This is no distant possibility—no vague threat. This is Federal Law.

I've enclosed a sample of what your new tax form—due April 15, 1990—might look like.

If you pay more than $150 per year in Federal taxes, and if you'll be 65 or older in 1989, its time to start saving.

Because you're going to be paying for the new Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Law.

That word "catastrophic" just about says it all for loyal Americans like you who have spent their lifetimes building this nation, paying their taxes, doing their duty . . .

. . . and now, after you've planned and saved for years for your retirement, the Congress has decided you should pick up the tab for increased medical costs!

Maybe you heard about this new Bill on T.V., or read about it in our newspaper. And maybe you weren't too concerned.

After all, the new law does improve some Medicare benefits. And nobody mentioned the words "tax increase"—though you might have heard them say something about financing all this with a "supplemental premium."

"Supplemental premium" is Washington double-talk for "tax increase."

And this one is aimed at you.

It is a tax on older Americans, pure and simple. And it will be due with your regular tax return in 1990.

Americans 65 and over who have more than a minimal income will pay anywhere from $160 to $1,696 in 1990 to pay for increased Medicare benefits.

Talk about discrimination!

Congress says older Americans should pay for the increased Medicare benefits, because we're the ones who use them.

But that's not quite the whole picture.

Disabled individuals of any age may qualify for Medicare. That means young folks who've been crippled by accidents . . . people with degenerative diseases like multiple sclerosis or Lou Gehrig's disease . . . people with AIDS.

That's several million people—well under the age of 65—who get Medicare benefits . . . but will all Americans be required to pay these bills?

No, that privilege has been reserved for you and me.

And I'm fighting mad about it.

I say older Americans have spent a lifetime shouldering their burdens. We've gone off to war for our country. We've worked in the factories and on the farms. We've built businesses and we've raised and taught our children.

We've created the most prosperous, affluent nation on earth.

And now, after we've carefully planned our retirement—and when many of us are just getting by on those dollars we so prudently saved—we're being forced to foot the bill for younger people's health care!

Make no mistake about it. We haven't been given any choice in the matter.

Even if you wanted to turn down Medicare benefits so you could skip paying this new tax, you couldn't. You are required by law to pay the enormous price tag, not only for your fellow senior citizens, but for younger people as well.

My friend, ours is a generation that doesn't complain much. We try to do what's best for America without a whole lot of noise or fanfare. We don't expect special treatment, and we certainly haven't received it.

But I believe it is time we stood up for ourselves.

Because—believe me—nobody else is going to do it!

Even the so-called "friends" of senior citizens in Congress let this outrageous measure be passed!

Maybe they let certain special interest groups pull the wool over their eyes.

Or maybe they just weren't paying attention.

Whatever their reasons, they let this catastrophe of a Bill get passed into Law.

And the only chance we have of revising it is to build a loud and forceful coalition of Americans who say "No Way!" to the idea that—just because we're 65 or over—senior citizens alone should be surcharged for America's rising medical costs!

That is why I am writing to you today.

I am hoping you will not sit idly by while this outrage is perpetrated upon our generation. I know you're not the protesting type. I'm not either. But enough is enough.

Please join our—National Association for Uniformed Services—in an urgent national campaign to change the Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Law.

Here are the steps you can take—if you want to avoid paying as much as $1,600 extra taxes on April 15, 1990:

1. I have enclosed three postcards for you to sign and send to your Congressman and your Senators. They make it very clear that you do not believe older Americans should be singled out to bear the burden of health care costs for all Americans.

2. Please review the enclosed Sample Tax Bill. See where you stand in relation to the new law. Will you have to pay $225, $680, $1,520—or $1,600? Decide if you believe you're being penalized for having an income above the poverty line—and for your age.

Then make one more decision—to support our Association's all-out effort to turn this law around with a national campaign contribution of $15.

If you can manage to send $20 or $25, so much the better. With your help, we can alert other Americans to this scandalous tax increase . . . work with government officials to turn it around . . . and let our legislators know in no uncertain terms that we won't stand for this miscarriage of justice!

Think of it this way: Your $15 contribution to our campaign may save hundreds, even thousands of dollars in the future!

With your support, our Association can speak for you in Washington, protecting your interests . . . you might even say protecting the savings you've so cautiously built up so that you might enjoy some peace of mind in your retirement years.

I don't think that's too much to ask.

And neither do the 55,000 members of the National Association for Uniformed Services . . . who stand together to preserve the hard-earned rights and privileges of retired Americans like you!

NAUS started out as the voice of current and former members of the uniformed services, veterans, their families and survivors to fight for their hard earned entitlements . . . just the basic necessities of life our veterans have coming to them!

But today—in the face of an emergency like the Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Law—we are acting on behalf of all retired Americans . . . and I hope that will include you.

If you want to do something about the tax increase Congress has in store for you, act now. Send the postcards to your legislators. And join NAUS's campaign to reverse this unjust tax burden by sending your contribution of at least $15 today.

The 1989 tax year is right around the corner. We don't have long to fight this battle. Please, let me hear from you today.

Sincerely,

J.C. PENNINGTON,
Major General, U.S. Army (Retired),
Executive Vice President.

P.S.—Unless we do something to revise the Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Bill, a retired couple 65 or older in 2005 may face an extra tax burden of $8,000! And that's not a wild guess on my part—that figure comes from estimates made by the U.S. Treasury! Take action today to prevent financial disaster tomorrow. Please return the enclosed Enrollment Form right away.

THE NATIONAL TAX LIMITATION COMMITTEE

To Congressman Tom Tauke, Lewis K. Uhler.

From:

I agree with you—it's time for Congress to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. It's an unfair tax on our seniors, and I support your efforts to delay it for one year while opening a full-scale debate in Congress on developing a fair way to fund Medicare benefits.

That's why I've agreed to Co-Sponsor H.R. 1564. I've signed my Resolution Form and give you my permission to circulate it to as many Members of Congress as possible.

And I've also enclosed a contribution, payable to the National Tax Limitation Committee, in the amount marked below. I want to make sure that NTLC has the resources it needs to carry out a major lobbying effort for H.R. 1564 and also stay on track with building support for our Tax Limitation/Balanced Budget Amendment.

My contribution is for:

☐ $25 ☐ $37 ☐ $—— other

THE NATIONAL
TAX LIMITATION COMMITTEE,
Washington DC, June 2, 1989.

DEAR ——: The catastrophic health surtax (the "Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act," or MCCA) has created a firestorm of angry protest from concerned taxpayers across America.

One of our loyal NTLC members, Mrs. Julianna Meloche of Michigan, sent me a letter recently that moved me deeply. Mrs. Meloche authorized me to enclose a copy of her letter for you. Please take just a moment now and read it.

Frankly, I've deliberated long and hard as to whether NTLC ought to get involved in this particular fight. I'm persuaded now that we must, because so many of you have written us letters expressing concern similar to those of Mrs. Meloche.

It's clear that literally millions of Americans taxpayers are being victimized by a cruel and unfair tax that you and I should work together, through NTLC, to change.

That's why—with your help—we are making a special effort to reform the Medicare catastrophic tax. While the principle of taxing those who receive benefits is fair, the way this surtax is calculated is unfair.

We should not stand by when one group of taxpayers is treated unfairly—especially many of our senior taxpayers who have already "paid their dues" and whose life savings are now being threatened.

This year every senior who pays taxes will bear the surtax. By 1993 nearly 25% of senior taxpayers will bear the maximum surtax.

The simple fact is that the catastrophic surtax is an income redistribution scam that threatens many of our senior citizens, hitting hardest those who were the most conscientious about preparing for retirement.

If you agree with me that this tax must be reformed, then I'd like to ask you to do two things today.

First, please sign the petition I've enclosed for you addressed to House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, urging him to hold hearings on the catastrophic surtax. The Senate is holding hearings, but we have to force the House to do so as well.

Second, please send back a special contribution along with your signed petition so that we can muster the forces necessary to force Congress to address this issue now.

We need to generate thousands of signed petitions over the next few weeks to make Congress realize the catastrophic surtax must be reformed. As Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Congressman Rostenkowski is the member of Congress who needs to hear this message most forcefully. That's why our petitions are addressed, and will be delivered, to him.

This special project is costly and was not planned for in our budget this year. But I strongly believe we must raise the money we need to begin lobbying to reform the MCCA. It is an unfair tax and it must be changed!

When I receive your signed petition, I will make sure your petition is delivered to Rep. Rostenkowski, so he will get on with the hearings. And your generous contribution will enable us to contact more Americans and generate more pressure on Congress in the weeks ahead.

It's time we put our foot down against unfair taxes imposed on narrow groups, especially our senior citizens. Please help us in this fight by sending in your petition and your most generous contribution today.

Sincerely,

LEWIS K. UHLER,
President.

P.S. I feel terrible when I think about our friends like Mrs. Meloche, who are now being taxed so unfairly. Every day counts in this effort. Please send back your signed petition and your maximum contribution as soon as you possibly can.

CONGRESSMAN TOM TAUKE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ——: I was really excited when Lew Uhler told me that the National Tax Limitation Committee wanted to enter the fight to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (MCCA):

The fact that you agree with me that this Act, which started as a good health bill but has ended up a bad tax bill, needs to be overhauled is vitally important. Our seniors deserve sound health and retirement policy. With the MCCA, they get neither.

I voted against the Catastrophic Coverage Act in 1988. I was in a small minority then.

But the firestorm of protest against the MCCA that you and the NTLC have helped ignite now gives us a chance to redo the wrong Congress committed last year.

That's why Congressman Peter DeFazio of Oregon and I have introduced a bill, H.R. 1564, to repeal for one year the income tax surcharge that has been levied since January 1st.

If we're successful, our seniors will not be forced to pay the surcharge (which in 1989 amounts to a whopping 15 percent of their total income tax bill) when they pay their 1989 income taxes.

Just as importantly, my bill will give Congress the time it needs to re-think and reform the MCCA!

Lew Uhler supports my bill and what it is trying to achieve. I hope you do, too.

If you want to help us pass H.R. 1564, there are two critically important things I would like to ask you to do today.

First, will you sign on with me as a NTLC Member Co-Sponsor of H.R. 1564? I've included with my letter a Co-Sponsor Resolution that I truly hope you will sign and send back to me, care of Lew at NTLC, no later than Labor Day, September 4th.

And second, will you back up your support of my bill with a generous financial contribution to NTLC?

I'll be frank with you. I'm counting on you and NTLC to help me move H.R. 1564 through Congress.

The first way is by having literally thousands of NTLC members, like you, sign on as Co-Sponsors of my bill, so that I can show my fellow members of Congress just how much public support there is for this urgently needed measure.

It is especially important for us to put maximum pressure on Lloyd Bentsen, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Dan Rostenkowski, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who are both strongly resisting any changes in this unfair tax bill.

And to make sure our seniors don't get stuck with a gigantic tax boost next year, we need to pass H.R. 1564 through Congress this fall. That's why I urge you to send back your Co-Sponsor Resolution by Labor Day.

Secondly, and just as importantly, I'm counting on NTLC to help do the intense personal and grass-roots lobbying down the road that will help us come up with a fairer way of funding Medicare benefits after we scrap the Catastrophic Care Tax.

Thanks in large part to the work of organizations like NTLC, I believe the time is now ripe to delay the Catastrophic Care Tax and begin reforming it radically.

But we still have much to do. I urgently need your help, through the NTLC, to make sure this unfair tax is not imposed on our seniors.

Thank you for your support of NTLC and this vitally important project.

Sincerely,

Congressman TOM TAUKE.

P.S. Please be sure to read Lew's note that I've enclosed with my letter. And please be sure to sign on as an NTLC Member Co-Sponsor of H.R. 1564 by Labor Day.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS

I, the undersigned taxpayer, citizen and member of the National Tax Limitation Committee, hereby signify my support of H.R. 1564 and urge you to pass this urgently needed measure immediately.

[Portions of Pages 1 through 3 of Bill]

H.R. 1564

A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act and other provisions of law to delay for one year the effective dates of the supplemental Medicare premium and additional benefits under part B of the Medicare Program, with the exception of the spousal impoverishment benefit

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Revision Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to provide Medicare beneficiaries with protection from the financial ravages of an illness that results in a long-term hospitalization (provided for in the Medicare Castastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, already implemented);

(4) to delay, for a year, implementation of all other benefits provided for in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988;

(5) to delay, for a year, implementation of the supplemental premium provided for in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988;

(6) so Congress will be afforded the opportunity to review the portions of the Act which this legislation delays to determine whether it ought restructure the Act to deal with the concerns of our nation's seniors. Their concerns being that the Act includes some items which are seen by the seniors as not truly catastrophic-related, that the financing ought to be spread more generally across the senior population, and that the Act does not provide much in the way of protection from the financial ravages of an illness requiring long-term care services.

WASHINGTON, DC.

PRESIDENT,
The National Tax Limitation Committee.

DEAR : I believe that Congressman Tauke's bill, H.R. 1564, represents the best way to reform the Catastrophic Coverage tax that is so cruelly affecting millions of our Nation's seniors. That's why I told him that the NTLC would do everything we could to help him pass H.R. 1564 through Congress this year.

I want to urge you to join me as a taxpayer "Co-Sponsor" of H.R. 1564 by signing the facsimile of the cover of the bill I've enclosed for you. Despite the growing opposition to this tax, there are still powerful forces, including some groups claiming to speak for American seniors, who are fighting any attempts to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. We must show the leadership of the House that the American people demand a change in this unfair tax.

I also urge you to commit yourself further to this fight by making a special contribution to NTLC, hopefully for as much as $25. As important as our efforts to reform the Catastrophic Coverage tax are, the fact is that we didn't anticipate becoming involved in this fight when we put together our budget for the year. That means that our resources right now are stretched to the limit.

In order for us to help Rep. Tauke and keep on track with our Tax Limitation/Balanced Budget Amendment. NTLC urgently needs to raise an additional $50,000 by September 1st. I deeply hope you can help us reach that goal.

Thank you again for your tremendous support of NTLC, Mr. .

LEW.

CITIZENS AGAINST THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH ACT TAX,
Sterling, VA.

DEAR MR. : Please sign the enclosed "Petition for a FAIR Catastrophic Health Act."

Citizens Against The Catastrophic Health Act Tax (CATCHA) is conducting this national Petition Drive to repeal the up to $800 tax and the Catastrophic Health Act. We want Congress to replace it with a fair and honest coverage program for our nation's senior citizens.

Congress calls it a "supplemental Medicare premium," but it's really a tax of up to $800 per person on seniors since everyone eligible for Medicare must pay it. Many seniors are already calling it the "Medicare Tax". . .

The Catastrophic Health Act doesn't cover one cent of long term nursing home costs; one of the most crippling costs facing the elderly.

Yet America's senior citizens will pay up to $800 per year per person or $1,500 per couple. Next year this tax increases by 10%.

Many people who pay the tax will receive NO benefits: Only 16% will be eligible for prescription drug benefits and only 7% will be eligible for certain other benefits.

If you think this bill is unfair, help us show Congress they cannot get away with this new tax. Help CATCHA flood Congress with petitions and letters demanding immediate repeal.

Public support for a repeal is building as people discover the details of this new tax. NOW is the time to protest the bill and CATCHA has organized this national petition drive so you can register your demand for immediate repeal of the Act and the Tax of up to $800 per person per year.

Our goal is to force a repeal of the bill by the end of this year, and we can do that if you and enough concerned people take a couple of minutes to help. Over the next few weeks and months we plan to bombard Congress with hundreds of thousands of protest letters and petitions.

As a first step CATCHA wants to deliver your signed petition to the Senate leaders from both parties. If enough people sign the petitions our lobbyist can arrive at the offices of these two influential Senators with hundreds of sacks of mail with millions of signed petitions.

The bottom line is this: Congress has passed a tax—but they didn't give seniors the benefits so many need.

Which is why I need you to sign the enclosed petition to Senate Majority Leader, George Mitchell and Senate Minority Leader, Robert Dole.

The people at Citizens Against the Catastrophic Health Act have made it easy for you. All you need do is sign your petition and return it. CATCHA will do the rest; with enough help we can swamp Congress with our demands.

It is extremely important that you also help CATCHA with a contribution. We can enlist an army of 1,000,000 seniors and show Congress that we will not stand for this tax hike and that we demand fair Catastrophic coverage.

This will only happen if people give their financial help. Please try and make a contribution of $15, $25 or more when you return your petition. Your contribution will help CATCHA move forward and contact 8,000,000 seniors, taxpayers and retired people and ask them to join us in demanding that Congress pay attention to their needs.

Sincerely,

MARK D. SILJANDER,
Former Member, Select Committee on Aging; Subcommittee on Retirement, Income and Employment Member of 97th-99th Congress.

P.S.—You'll see CATCHA has a solid plan including this petition drive to 8,000,000 seniors and taxpayers by year-end. This petition drive targets the Senate leader from both parties. Help CATCHA swamp these key legislators with petitions. Petitions like this stopped the 50% Congressional pay raise, they can force a repeal of this tax. With your help we can build our army and keep the telephones on Capitol Hill ringing off the hook and bury the Congress with letters, telegrams and petitions. Please sign your petitions and make a contribution to help us keep the pressure on Congress for a repeal of the tax.

WASHINGTON, DC.

I DON'T BELIEVE YOU INTEND TO DESERT US NOW . . . NOT AFTER OUR SUCCESSES IN PROTECTING YOUR COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT AND OTHER BENEFITS

DEAR NATIONAL COMMITTEE MEMBER: I feel so sure that you have not intended to abandon the millions of your fellow Members of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare that I am enclosing your personal, gold-embossed, 1989-1990 Membership Card even though we have not yet received your renewal dues.

I'm doing this because I think it is very likely that you intend to renew but just haven't gotten around to it yet.

If that is the case, please accept this reminder and write your check for only $10 and send it to the National Committee now to renew for 1989-1990.

But if you are unsure whether you've really received $10 worth of value for your Membership, I have to answer by putting a question to you. How much have just these few victories meant to you?

Threat	National committee action	Results
Catastrophic Seniors—Only Surtax Reconsidered
Congress passes unfair catastrophic care bill placing full cost of up to $800 ($1,600 per couple) on seniors-only.	Members handwrote millions of post cards and letters to Congress demanding fairness.	S. 1125 and H.R. 2547 introduced in Senate and House to repeal the tax increase.
2 Percent COLA Reduction Stopped!
A 2-percent permanent COLA reduction proposal in 1987 would have cost the average retired worker $2064.00 over five years!	The National Committee delivered almost 8 million Petition signatures from your fellow Members and others protesting this action.	The proposal was withdrawn the day after our delivery.
$640.00—5-Year Benefit Cut Stopped!
Administration proposed cuts in Medicare benefits in 1986 that would have cost the average beneficiary $640 over 5 years.	Members sent 250,000 letters and 130,000 Petitions to Congress and the President.	Congress rejected cuts and reduced the rise in our hospital deductible from $572 to $520.

I'm sure you'll agree that any one of these victories would repay your $10 National Committee Membership Dues many times over.

But they are only part of the story.

Since I started the National Committee in 1982, we have been hard at work fighting all attempts to cut Social Security and Medicare benefits, and supporting proposals to protect and improve those benefits.

We have delivered over 20 million Petitions to Congress and the President urging an end to policies which might reduce the Social Security and Medicare benefits you have paid for and earned.

Your full-time lobbying staff now includes 19 of the most effective, professional lobbyists on Capitol Hill and we are constantly adding more good people.

Our new President, Martha McSteen, spent 39 years in the Social Security and Medicare Administration rising through all levels to head the agency as Acting Commissioner in the years 1983 through 1986.

But, the most important reason for our great success is, and will always be, you and our other loyal Members.

Your National Committee now represents over five million Members and Supporters. We are the second largest senior citizens organization in America and one of the largest organizations of any kind!

You and your fellow Members are our most effective lobbyists. In response to my letters, our "Legislative Alerts" and stories in "Saving Social Security," you have sent millions of letters, postcards, petitions and telephone calls to Congressmen and Senators.

And, as you have seen, your efforts paid off handsomely.

Leaders in Congress have praised the work of your National Committee. Alan Cranston, a senior member of the Senate leadership, was particularly impressed with our efforts to safeguard the Social Security Trust Funds. He said, "The National Committee deserves a lot of credit for its work on this issue and for recognizing that the most important goal in this effort was making sure that Social Security recipients wouldn't have to go through an emotional turmoil each year wondering whether or not their checks were going to arrive."

The late Congressman Claude Pepper, highly regarded as the nation's leading advocate for senior citizens, submitted the following statement to a Congressional hearing:

"Over the last several years there have been numerous assaults on Social Security and Medicare. Student benefits have been eliminated, the minimum benefit was killed, the Senate has voted to freeze the Social Security COLA, disability beneficiaries have been heartlessly cut off from their only source of income, Medicare premiums and deductibles continue to skyrocket in cost and there are numerous other proposals to weaken Social Security and Medicare.

"These events inspired the founding of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare and the Committee has been very effective in mobilizing seniors to stand together to protect the integrity of the Social Security system," Congressman Pepper concluded.

As you can see, your $10 Annual Membership Dues go a long way in the fight to protect benefits which are worth thousands of dollars to you.

And, besides funding all of our important work in Washington, your dues enable us to continue providing you with these other valuable benefits of Membership:

Regular issues of our Saving Social Security newspaper.

Frequent Legislative Alerts immediately advising you of fast-breaking issues in Washington involving Social Security and Medicare benefits.

Frequent correspondence to alert you to the current projects of the National Committee's fight to preserve and enhance our benefits.

Senior Flash hotline to Washington for legislative information.

A gold-embossed Membership Card.

You know that your National Committee receives no government funds or contributions from "special interest" groups of any kind.

Our only sources of support are the voluntary dues and contributions of our loyal Members.

That is why it is so important for you to renew your Membership.

We need you—because without your continuing support, your National Committee will become powerless in the continuing battle against those in government who would cut or oppose improvements in your Social Security and Medicare benefits.

And you need the National Committee—because you need a fighting organization in Washington which is not afraid to take on those in Congress and the administration who want to cut your benefits, or who want seniors to pay completely for any new benefit program.

My father, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, was a great many things. But he was certainly not a quitter.

Neither am I. I believe that our great Social Security and Medicare programs are worth fighting for, and although I am 81 years old, I will continue this good fight no matter what the odds.

But I must know if you will stand behind me in this fight.

If your answer is YES, sign your Verification of Receipt located in the plastic pouch in front of your Jet Letter envelope. Please return it to me today with your Annual Membership Renewal Dues of $10. I've enclosed a postage-free envelop to speed your reply.

Most sincerely,

JAMES ROOSEVELT,
Chairman, National Committee To Preserve Social Security and Medicare.

P.S.—Please act today. Stay with your fellow NCPSSM Members in the battle to preserve and enhance Social Security and Medicare and be certain not to miss a single issue of "Saving Social Security" or any "Legislative Alerts."

The National Committee is totally independent of Congress, every government agency, and all political parties.

Contributions or gifts to the National Committee are not tax-deductible. You need make no special contributions other than annual dues.

The National Committee spends its budget in approximately the following way: legislative advocacy 36%, educational activities 25%, fund raising 13%, administration 26%. Detailed financial reports are available from the National Committee and the charitable solicitations department of most states.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this is a letter from a group called Citizens Against the Catastrophic Health Act tax with the acronym CATCHA.

I see here on the floor we have the majority leader, GEORGE MITCHELL, and the Senate minority leader, ROBERT DOLE. The group wants you to sign a petition to them.

But then right away, talking about what they are going to do for a million seniors, they say: This will only happen if people give their financial help.

Please try and make a contribution of $15, $25, or more when you return your petition. Your contribution will help CATCH move foreward and contact 8 million seniors, taxpayers, retired people, and ask them to join us in demanding that Congress pay attention to their needs.

The National Tax Limitation Committee writes about the firestorm of angry protest concerning the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. But then it includes a reply memo and says contributions are sent back for $25, $37, whatever that denotes, or other.

There is also a message from Mr. Lewis K. Uhler, who is the president of the National Tax Limitation Committee, who says he needs urgently to raise $50,000 by September 1. "I deeply hope you can help us reach that goal." Signed, Lew.

Mr. President, another group, the Campaign to Revise the Medicare Catastrophic Expansion Law, a project of the National Association for Uniformed Services, writes to alarm the citizen about "Your new tax bill for up to $1,600 more than you're paying today." It says in red letters, Mr. President, "Due April 15, 1990, your next tax bill for up to $1,600 more than you are paying today. Sample enclosed."

Mr. President, you would have no difficulty with handling that kind of communication, most Senators would not, most persons would not. What about the 82-year-old woman living in the country or lost in the debri of an urban slum. What about persons who have no spouse, no children, and all they get are letters about your new $1,600 tax bill coming, and it also says, Mr. President, you can help turn around this law with a national campaign contribution of $15. There is a pattern of saying maybe you cannot quite swing $15, or maybe you can put in a little bit more.

Mr. Pennington, major general, U.S. Army (retired), executive vice president says, "If you can manage to send $20 or $25, so much the better," and then tells you that by the year 2005, your additional taxes will be $8,000, Mr. President, $8,000, just starting out with $1,600 immediately; $8,000 to come.

Mr. President, I could spend the morning on this, and I do not wish to, but I think the letter I have found to be most repulsive, truly questionable, comes from something called the Congressional Majority Committee, Washington, DC, signed by Mr. Ralph Galliano. It says:

Dear Friend: Fraud. Deception. Lying. Extortion. These are all crimes. Serious crimes. I'm not taling about organized crime, international drug dealers, or insider trading on Wall Street. I'm talking about the United States Congress!

Exclamation point. Always exclamation point, and then sure enough, Mr. President, what we need is money.

If you could possibly contribute $100, $250, or even $500 to CMC's National Campaign to Repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act, it would go a very long way.

And the last page just turns on the subject of money from senior citizens.

Mr. President, I do not know that there is anything that this body can do about this kind of mailing. But I think we ought to be aware of it. I think we might well want to hold hearings about it. They are frightening persons in a way that is a form of assault.

I do not want to be more specific. I do not charge anything that would be felonious, but there is something that has a quality of assault about it when you get a letter in the mail that says "your immediate action may mean the difference between life and death for you," and you are 87 years old and your husband is not around and your children are not at hand, and then they will ask you to give money.

I do not think it is fair. I do not think it ought to be encouraged, and I do not think we ought to yield to it, although last year, Mr. President, by a vote of 99 to nothing, that is exactly what we did.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, who I know shares many of these concerns.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank my friend for yielding.

I associate myself entirely with his comments.

I point out to him something of which he may be well aware, which is some months ago a number of our colleagues introduced a bill that I sponsored and wrote called the Social Security Deceptive Mailing Practices Act of 1989. It is legislation that has been referred to the Governmental Affairs Committee on which this Senator is also privileged to serve.

My recollection is hearings have not only been held but the bill will shortly be scheduled for markup, and it may be that the Senator from New York and I might devise or he might have some improvements in that legislation that perhaps might be able to address the problem to which he refers, namely the terrorization of our senior citizens and others who may be, by one reason or another, made vulnerable to being preyed upon by people who frankly I think are more interested in getting $10 pried loose from their Social Security checks than they are in the welfare and peace of mind of our Social Security beneficiaries and others who are so vulnerable to this kind of exploitation.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his remarks? I believe I am a cosponsor of his bill. It is an excellent bill, and it is not a moment too soon.

Is the Chair aware that a letter may be even this moment jetting its way to you telling you you are about to die unless you send in $15? I think the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is a very careful man, was absolutely right when he used the word terrorize.

We have built a marvelous system of social insurance in this country, and it is being abused, or so I think. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania agree?

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator agrees entirely with the Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President I have concluded my remarks, but I am so pleased that Senator HEINZ has joined me—we have joined each other—in proposing, among other things, that the Social Security surplus be taken out of the calculations of our budget so the senior citizens can see it there. We have approved in the Committee on Finance provisions to make the Social Security Administration an independent agency. An independent agency may have to take on this issue, may from time to time have to write to recipients and say, "Social Security is all right. You do not have pay other people to look after you; the U.S. Government is a trustee of those moneys, and that trust will be maintained."

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. I thank the Chair for its courteous attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. HEINZ pertaining to the introduction of legislation are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, what is the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are in morning business until 11 a.m.

Mr. CHAFEE. Are there any orders during that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no additional order, although time has been reserved for the two leaders, without objection, previously.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the leaders' time, I ask unanimous consent that I might have 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island has requested that at the conclusion of the leaders' time that he might be permitted 15 minutes. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—H.R. 3385

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate immediately proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3385, an act to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua, that the bill be debated for 2 hours equally divided, in the usual form, and that the majority leader then be recognized to offer a cloture motion against the bill.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the filing of the cloture motion against H.R. 3385, the Senate proceed to the Senate reconciliation bill, and that the vote on cloture on H.R. 3385 occur immediately following the vote on final passage of the reconciliation bill, with the mandatory live quorum being waived and that, regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote, that the following amendments be in order to H.R. 3385:

An amendment by Senators ADAMS and HARKIN, relating to the transfer of this funding to a drug program;

An amendment by Senator DODD, providing that funding be made available only to the National Endowment for Democracy and for the observer groups;

An amendment by Senator DODD, providing that no money go to the Nicaraguan Government or any of its agencies;

An amendment by Senator HARKIN to reduce the funding and to shift it to the observers;

An amendment by Senator HARKIN, that there be no money provided by the National Endowment for Democracy, but that its assistance be only in the form of in-kind services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. The majority leader refers to final passage. I assume that is final passage of the House bill H.R. 3299?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. In reading it I stated that we would proceed to the Senate reconciliation bill and that the vote on final passage of the reconciliation bill—so it is my intention we would complete action in accordance with prior practice up to a certain point on the Senate bill and then move to substitute that for the House bill. It is after final action on that that we would proceed to this, to the Nicaraguan cloture vote.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have two questions to the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Under this formulation, at what point would those of us who have amendments be required to file those amendments?

Mr. MITCHELL. You are protected until 1 tomorrow for first-degree amendments; second-degree amendments, up until 1 hour prior to the vote on cloture.

I ask the Chair to confirm the accuracy of the statement I just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. DODD. In other words we would have until 1 tomorrow to file these amendments which the leader outlined here?

Mr. MITCHELL. These amendments, yes. With respect to the cloture vote, Senators should understand we do not know precisely when that would occur, which is a variance from ordinary procedure. Ordinarily the cloture vote would occur 1 hour after the Senate convenes on the second day following the filing of the petition. Under this agreement we are going to proceed to it after we finish reconciliation.

Mr. DODD. I further ask whether or not the amendments that have been identified as the Adams, Harkin, Dodd amendments would be considered germane under this agreement?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. As I stated—well, I do not want to say they would be considered germane. They would be permitted to offer them, notwithstanding the cloture vote. Which means they would not need to be considered germane. They are specified in the order, irrespective of their germaneness. That is the intention of this here.

It is my belief or my expectation that most of them would, in fact, be germane but they will not now be required to meet the test of germaneness under this order.

Mr. DODD. I thank the leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding this being a freestanding bill, not a general appropriations bill in its form, that rule XVI would not apply, so this would not be considered as legislation on an appropriations bill. That is my understanding.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Chair if he would advise in that respect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill in question is not a general appropriations bill and therefore is not subject to objection under rule XVI.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, since the questions have been answered to Senator DODD about the germaneness issue, the question this Senator has, has to do with the time limits after cloture, assuming that cloture is invoked.

It is this Senator's understanding that each Senator has 1 hour if cloture is invoked. Therefore, if the Senator has two amendments then obviously this Senator has only a half an hour on each amendment.

I am wondering if there might not be some provision to allow a little bit more time to develop the arguments and the cases on these amendments? That is all this Senator is just a little bit concerned about, the time limitation on that.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is my understanding that the majority leader, and the minority leader can each yield up to 2 hours to other Senators, which is obtained from Senators who choose not to speak. I believe the Senator would be amply protected in that regard. It is my intention to cooperate and make certain every Senator has an opportunity to present his arguments fully.

The alternative is to agree to a time limit of an hour equally divided on each amendment; and then—you could do that. I do not think you have any real concern in that regard and I will obviously do my best to make certain that no Senator fails to have ample time.

Mr. HARKIN. If the leader will yield, assuming on that agreement there would be time made available from the leader's time to amply get these amendments debated because obviously if, in fact, the Senator from Connecticut offers his amendment and I wish to speak on it for 15 minutes and I want to speak on Senator ADAMS' amendment for 15 minutes, there is a half hour of my time right there, and I have not even gotten to my amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the prudent thing is for Senators to concentrate the time on their amendment to make sure they can present them and assume the authors of the other amendments can present them in their behalf.

Mr. HARKIN. This is a very important subject and one we debated frequently on the floor of the Senate in the past for many, many hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). The Senator from Iowa has the floor. Is there an objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire if the 2 hours is the total amount of time under cloture that you can dispense to all Members of this side, assuming there are others who are willing to relinquish time?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is my understanding the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Vermont, can also yield up to 2 hours. I will ask the Chair to confirm that fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. So you then have a total of 4 hours in addition to the 1 hour each Senator has.

Mr. HARKIN. If there is a general agreement, that time would be available if needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I just want to emphasize what I told the majority leader earlier that I will do everything possible as manager of the bill. I happen to oppose the underlying legislation, but I would think it possible to make sure time is available for Senators who are here and I will work with Senators in making that possible. I think, concerning the issues we have here and I say, again, I am opposed to the underlying legislation, we will have enough time. I think we will be able to go ahead, get this unanimous-consent agreement in place and all Senators will have a chance to speak and bring up their amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS AGAINST JUDGE ALCEE L. HASTINGS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume consideration of the impeachment proceedings against Judge Alcee L. Hastings of the Southern District of Florida at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, October 18, for the final arguments on the merits by the managers on the part of the House of Representatives and by Judge Hastings and his counsel.

I further ask unanimous consent that each side be permitted no more than 2 hours for its final argument and that final arguments made may be made by three persons on each side.

I further ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, October 19, at 2 p.m., the Senate shall meet in closed session to deliberate on the articles of impeachment and that these orders have effect notwithstanding any other rule of the Senate, including rule XXII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, I want to indicate that the joint leadership will object to any unanimous-consent request to permit committees to meet on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons after 2 p.m., and a live quorum will be commenced on each of those days at 1:45 p.m. The Senate has many solemn responsibilities. One of them is to deliberate on matters involving impeachment. These are very serious matters. Of course, they are of the utmost importance to those involved in the proceedings.

Therefore, and I will ask the distinguished Republican leader to address himself to this issue. I urge every Senator to meet his or her public responsibility by being present during these proceedings. It is a disservice to the Senate and a disservice to those involved in these proceedings for Senators to absent themselves during impeachment proceedings. We have set this in plenty of time so Senators can adjust their schedules, and I hope that every single Senator will observe his or her responsibility and be present during these deliberations. I thank the distinguished Republican leader for his cooperation in this regard.

Mr. DOLE. Will the majority leader yield? I certainly share the views he just expressed. These are important proceedings and we are going to have two of these this month to deal with. I know Senators are busy with other matters, but in fairness to those who are threatened with impeachment, charged with impeachable offenses, I think it is our obligation, though I think it is a little outdated but is still on the books, we need to be here to make certain we carry out our responsibilities.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to say to the majority leader, there is also a unanimous-consent agreement on Monday that we will take up the constitutional amendment on the flag. As I understand, if we did not complete action on that by, say, 2 o'clock on Wednesday, there would still be time Wednesday morning and time Wednesday evening when we might complete action on Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday if we do not do it prior to that time.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is precisely my intention; that if we reach 2 p.m. Wednesday without having completed action on the flag amendment, we will return to that following the presentation of arguments by the impeachment managers and Judge Hastings and his counsel on Wednesday, back to it on Thursday and continue on a double track, so to speak, until such time as we do complete action on that.

The only additional action that is not included in the unanimous-consent agreement regarding the impeachment proceeding is, of course, the vote. We do not provide for that because we do not know in advance how long the deliberations will take in private by the Senate which commences at 2 p.m. on Thursday. Other than that, we are going to continue to work around that and complete action on the flag amendment as soon as possible upon the completion of debate by the Senators.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues, and I yield now to the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me say in reference to Nicaragua, and we will be debating these issues either today or later, that with reference to the transfer of money to a drug program, we have already been through that once on this floor. We had an agreement on both sides and we did not offer what we call Wilson amendments in an effort to transfer funds from any program to drug programs. I hope when that amendment is offered there will be a bipartisan recognition of the previous agreement which we have adhered to on this side of the aisle. If we are going to violate it, then we need to have notice so we can start gearing up amendments for the remaining appropriations bills that have to be resolved and decided upon in the U.S. Senate.

In addition to that, it would certainly take care of this particular bill, as far as I know, because if any of these amendments are adopted, we have to go back to the House and we are going to lose another Sunday. We will get to the point where it is probably not worth the effort if we have one other Sunday lost as far as registration is concerned. I hope we can complete action on it quickly. I have a feeling cloture may be coming about midnight or later, either tomorrow night or sometime during the night, early Saturday morning, 4 or 5 a.m. And maybe at that point we will be able to complete action on it.

I will also indicate to my colleagues on this side that there will be a Republican conference at 1:30 in S-230 in my office, chaired by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], where we will discuss what action we should take on the reconciliation bill, whether or not Republicans should support the Byrd rule since we seem to be getting nothing else in reference to capital gains; whether we should let the other party worry about the good government aspects of reconciliation. So we will be discussing that at 1:30 in our conference and hopefully we can do that without in any way interfering with the action on the floor on reconciliation, opening statements and other matters.

We are still hopeful there might be some opportunity for a capital gains amendment to be offered and to meet the 51-vote requirement. But I have had some of my colleagues on this side wonder why we are going to be so cooperative with the distinguished leader and the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee if we get nothing in return.

So we will be discussing those matters at our 1:30 conference. I advise my colleagues on this side if you are there at 1:30, we hope to complete the conference not later than 2:15.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

THE SPECIAL INTEREST OF NORTH CAROLINA IN THE BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, North Carolinians have always had a special interest in the Bill of Rights. They even take credit for the Bill of Rights—with some justification. The Constitution, when it was being considered by the States for ratification, was generally referred to as a plan of organization and that is what it was. It prescribed the three branches and their relationships, the terms and requirements of the Presidency and other officers, and the duties and powers.

The North Carolina convention delegates declared that this document did not deal with the great cause for which the war of freedom was fought by the Colonies. It did not deal with the right to speak and protest, the individual rights and protection from government oppression.

North Carolina voted down the new Constitution, and resolved that it would not accept the Constitution and join the United States until a bill of rights was added, and proposed a bill with 22 points. We still feel strongly about individual freedoms. Subsequently, the Congress shifted position and presented for approval the Bill of Rights. North Carolina promptly ratified the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

We believe in the Bill of Rights in North Carolina. We believe it is the greatest document of freedom ever written. There is no question that the world sees our Bill of Rights as their symbol of freedom.

The Bill of Rights has never been amended. Perhaps there may be reason some day to amend it, but that day has not yet arrived.

Certainly we do not need to rush to amend it because of a 5 to 4 Supreme Court decision on a question that constitutional experts tell us can be handled by a statute.

We have passed the law. Now let us be certain that we preserve the Bill of Rights.

Mr. President, James W. Warner, a marine flyer who was a prisoner of war of the North Vietnamese for over 7 years, wrote of his feeling toward freedom in a column printed in the Washington Post on July 11, 1989. I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHEN THEY BURNED THE FLAG BACK HOME: THOUGHTS OF A FORMER POW

(By James H. Warner)

In March of 1973, when we were released from a prisoner of war camp in North Vietnam, we were flown to Clark Air Force base in the Philippines. As I stepped out of the aircraft I looked up and saw the flag. I caught my breath, then, as tears filled my eyes, I saluted it. I never loved my country more than at that moment. Although I have received the Silver Star Medal and two Purple Hearts, they were nothing compared with the gratitude I felt then for having been allowed to serve the cause of freedom.

Because the mere sight of the flag meant so much to me when I saw it for the first time after 5½ years, it hurts me to see other Americans willfully desecrate it. But I have been in a Communist prison where I looked into the pit of hell. I cannot compromise on freedom. It hurts to see the flag burned, but I part company with those who want to punish the flag burners. Let me explain myself.

Early in the imprisonment the Communists told us that we did not have to stay there. If we would only admit we were wrong, if we would only apologize, we could be released early. If we did not, we would be punished. A handful accepted, most did not. In our minds, early release under those conditions would amount to a betrayal, of our comrades, of our country, and of our flag.

Because we would not say the words they wanted us to say, they made our lives wretched. Most of us were tortured, and some of my comrades died. I was tortured for most of the summer of 1969. I developed beriberi from malnutrition. I had long bouts of dysentery. I was infested with intestinal parasites. I spent 13 months in solitary confinement. Was our cause worth all of this? Yes, it was worth all this and more.

Rose Wilder Lane, in her magnificent book "The Discovery of Freedom," said there are two fundamental truths that men must know in order to be free. They must know that all men are brothers, and they must know that all men are born free. Once men accept these two ideas, they will never accept bondage. The power of these ideas explains why it was illegal to teach slaves to read.

One can teach these ideas, in a Communist prison camp, Marxists believe that ideas are merely the product of material conditions; change those material conditions, and one will change the ideas they produce. They tried to "re-educate" us. If we could show them that we would not abandon our belief in fundamental principles, then we could prove the falseness of their doctrine. We could subvert them by teaching them about freedom through our example. We could show them the power of ideas.

I did not appreciate this power before I was a prisoner of war. I remember one interrogation where I was shown a photograph of some Americans protesting the war by burning a flag. "There," the officer said. "People in your country protest against your cause. That proves that you are wrong."

"No," I said. "That proves that I am right. In my country we are not afraid of freedom, even if it means that people disagree with us." The officer was on his feet in an instant, his face purple with rage. He smashed his fist onto the table and screamed at me to shut up. While he was ranting I was astonished to see pain, compounded by fear, in his eyes. I have never forgotten that look, nor have I forgotten the satisfaction I felt at using his tool, the picture of the burning flag, against him.

Aneurin Bevan, former official of the British Labor Party, was once asked by Nikita Khrushchev how the British definition of democracy differed from the Soviet view. Bevan responded, forcefully, that if Khrushchev really wanted to know the difference, he should read the funeral oration of Pericles.

In that speech, recorded in the Second Book of Thucydides' "History of the Peloponnesian War," Pericles contrasted democratic Athens with totalitarian Sparta. Unlike the Spartans, he said, the Athenians did not fear freedom. Rather, they viewed freedom as the very source of their strength. As it was for Athens, so it is for America—our freedom is not to be feared, for our freedom is our strength.

We don't need to amend the Constitution in order to punish those who burn our flag. They burn the flag because they hate America and they are afraid of freedom. What better way to hurt them than with the subversive idea of freedom? Spread freedom. The flag in Dallas was burned to protest the nomination of Ronald Reagan, and he told us how to spread the idea of freedom when he said that we should turn American into "a city shining on a hill, a light to all nations." Don't be afraid of freedom, it is the best weapon we have.

HON. WILL HILL TANKERSLEY'S SERVICE AS CHAIRMAN OF THE RESERVE FORCES POLICY BOARD

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, this month the Honorable Will Hill Tankersley will step down after serving 4 years as Chairman of the Reserve Forces Policy Board. Mr. Tankersley has had a long and distinguished career of service to the national security of our Nation, and I want to take a few moments to highlight some of his contributions as he steps down from his leadership of the Reserve Forces Policy Board.

Will Hill Tankersley served 8 years in the Regular Army, and is a decorated combat infantry veteran of six campaigns of the Korean war, a ranger and a master parachutist. After his active duty service, he went on to a distinguished career in the Army Reserve, finally retiring from the Army Reserve as a major general. During his Active and Reserve service, he served the Army at all levels from platoon to the Department of the Army staff. His final assignment was commander of the 87th U.S. Army Maneuver Area Command in his home State of Alabama.

In 1974, Mr. Tankersley was nominated by President Ford and confirmed by the Senate as the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs and he served in this position until 1977. I was chairman of the Subcommittee on Manpower and Personnel on the Armed Services Committee during that time, and I worked very closely with Mr. Tankersley on issues affecting the National Guard and Reserve. All of the members of the Armed Services Committee came to appreciate Mr. Tankersley's intimate knowledge of, and profound commitment to, the needs of our Reserve components.

In October 1985 Secretary of Defense Weinberger appointed Mr. Tankersley to serve a 4-year term as Chairman of the Reserve Forces Policy Board. The Reserve Forces Policy Board was created by Congress to be the "principal policy adviser to the Secretary of Defense on matters relating to the Reserve components."

At the time of Mr. Tankersley's appointment, I thought that Secretary Weinberger could not have made a better appointment to head this critical board, and the last 4 years have reinforced my initial impression. Under Chairman Tankersley's direction, the Reserve Forces Policy Board has advised the Secretary of Defense on a broad range of issues and policies that have helped to modernize and integrate the Reserve components into a genuine and ready total force. No one knows better than Will Hill Tankersley that the men and women of the National Guard and Reserve units must be prepared to fight side by side with our Active Forces in real world missions on short notice. No one has worked harder than Will Hill Tankersley to insure that the Reserve components have the equipment and training to carry out their missions.

Mr. President, Will Hill Tankersley has made significant and long-lasting contributions to the national defense. I know this record of service will continue in the future. But as he steps down as Chairman of the Reserve Forces Policy Board this month, I want to congratulate Will Hill for his service to the Nation.

THE HOUSING NOW! RALLY

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, last Saturday, tens of thousands of housing activisits, homeless individuals, and concerned citizens gathered on the Mall to voice their concern for an increased Federal, State, and local role in housing. On Friday I met with some 50 marchers from North Carolina including 4 homeless individuals from Winston-Salem who walked to Washington from Roanoke, VA, as part of the Southern New Exodus March.

I share the concern of the Housing Now! participants that the terrible tragedy of homelessness and the substandard conditions of our Nation's housing stock must be addressed through a comprehensive Federal, State, and local government strategy on housing which builds upon the vast public, private, and nonprofit resources of the United States.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks to the North Carolina Housing Now! marchers be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR TERRY SANFORD BEFORE "NORTH CAROLINA HOUSING NOW" MARCHERS

I welcome you to Washington for one of the most important events of the year. This weekend, hundreds of thousands of Americans will join together in support of one of the basic needs of all citizens: decent and affordable housing. Many of these people are homeless and low-income Americans who have been deprived of a decent place to live due to social and economic domestic problems and an inadequate response from the Federal Government. I am proud to participate in a North Carolina Housing Now! rally, and I want to reaffirm my strong support for an increased federal, state, and local government role in combatting the severe housing crisis facing this country.

The 1990's will be a critical era for the Federal Government. Difficult budgetary decisions must be made to Government. Difficult budgetary decisions must be made to eradicate the federal deficit and to target federal funds to the greatest needs facing the nation. It is my belief that the Federal Government must make housing assistance a top priority. In the next decade we must eliminate the tragedy of homelessness. In the next decade we must eradicate substandard housing in both urban and rural areas. In the next decide we must increase the supply of decent, affordable housing to ensure that all Americans have a roof above their heads and a home to call their own.

I for one have had enough of the Reagan years. The past Administration cut the budget for the Department of Housing and Urban development by almost 80%. They pushed responsible and qualified administrators out of HUD and replaced them with influence peddlers and slack managers. The history of the Reagan years in aptly characterized by the HUD scandals in which federal resources for low- and moderate-income housing became slush funds for developers and billions were squandered through fraud or managerial inattention. Enough is enough.

Thankfully, the Reagan years are over, and throughout the nation both public and private entities are forming partnerships to build new housing, and to modernize and preserve the units that now exist. I am proud of the work of numerous North Carolina organizations—the Triangle Housing Partnership, the Macon Program for Progress, Habitat for Humanity, and the Wilson Community Improvement Association—just to name a few, who are working at the grass roots level to increase the supply and the quality of housing throughout the State. No doubt many of you who are here today have been involved in local housing assistance efforts which will provide the foundation for future action.

But what is needed to catalyze efforts at the state and local level is an active federal presence in housing assistance. As an important step in the right direction, the Senate last week passed an appropriations bill which increased funding for HUD by 19% to $15.2 billion. This is only an incremental step, but it marks the beginning of a new era in which housing funding will be a priority of the Congress. I am also pleased that Secretary Kemp has moved quickly to reform HUD and establish an agency truly dedicated toward providing housing for all Americans.

I am proud to be a member of the Democratic Housing Task Force which is currently working to create a comprehensive housing bill that will provide additional money to combat homelessness, to modernize and expand public housing, to eradicate substandard housing units, to preserve low-income housing, to provide additional units and services to individuals with special needs, and to create a nationwide infrastructure for affordable housing. Working in a bipartisan fashion, the Task Force and the Administration will enact during the upcoming year a comprehensive reform of HUD and a general expansion of the federal role in housing assistance.

Of course, the Federal Government must be joined by state and local governments, private businesses, and non-profit organizations to ensure that every American has a decent place to live. The heart of the Democratic housing package is an new program, the Housing Opportunity Partnership or HOP program which will provide Federal funds to State and local governments and require a match in order to leverage federal funds. The HOP program will provide flexibility to all levels of government to ensure that the particular needs of all localities can be met through the program.

I am optimistic about the future, but I also realize the serious need that exists throughout North Carolina and the nation. Your involvement, and the participation of thousands of people from across the country in this weekend's match is a desperately needed reminder of the crisis that exists in housing. We face many difficult decisions in the upcoming year, but we must realize that our national security depends as much upon providing for the domestic needs of our citizens as providing hundreds of billions of dollars for our defense establishment.

In closing, I want to express my commitment to improving housing. I will take your message back to the Congress and work to provide the necessary funds to improve our nation's housing stock. I wish you luck in your endeavors, and I hope that the Federal Government will respond to this outpouring of support.

This concludes my statement.

Thank you, Mr. President.

INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Saturday, October 8, 1989, the Senate approved the conference agreement on H.R. 2788, the Interior Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990. I had intended to discuss section 319 of the act with my colleague from Michigan at that time, but our colloquy was inadvertently omitted from the RECORD. I think that this discussion is important to the interpretation of section 319, and I ask that it be included in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, section 319 of the act prohibits the use of Federal funds to influence certain Federal contracting and financial transactions. Paragraph (e)(1)(A) states that this section does not prohibit the payment of reasonable compensation for "agency and legislative liaison activities" not directly related to the award of a particular contract, grant, or loan.

I would like to clarify the meaning of the term "agency and legislative activities" with my colleague from West Virginia.

It is my understanding that appropriate agency and legislative activities permitted by this section would include monitoring Federal legislation and regulations and informing agency and legislative staff of workable and unworkable approaches; collecting information for the preparation of testimony, comments, and reactions to proposals; identifying related Federal programs, activities, and legislation; inquiring into conditions, requirements, selection criteria, definitions of terms, and factors for award; communicating local conditions that affect, impact, or in any way relate to Federal proposals; and determining the process for and timing of Federal decisionmaking.

Would the Senator from West Virginia agree with this understanding of the statutory language?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is correct.

THE 1,671ST DAY OF TERRY ANDERSON'S CAPTIVITY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise once again to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,671st day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I ask unanimous consent that a Chicago Tribune article on this subject be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 16, 1989]

HOPES SLIM IN 5TH YEAR OF ANDERSON'S CAPTIVITY

American journalist Terry Anderson, longest held of the 15 Western hostages in Lebanon, begins his fifth year of captivity Thursday with no sign that he will be freed soon.

In the last message his captors allowed him to send—a brief videotape Oct. 31—Anderson said, "I find it difficult to keep my hopes and my courage high."

Anderson, 41, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, was returning home from a tennis game on March 16, 1985, when gunmen seized him in Moslem West Beirut.

His captors belong to the pro-Iranian Shiite group Islamic Jihad, or "holy war." It is believed to be part of the fundamentalist Shiite militia Hezbollah, or Party of God.

Shiites also hold most of the other Western hostages: seven Americans, three Britons, an Italian, a Belgian and an Irishman.

Six organizations of Western journalists observed Anderson's anniversary by issuing a "solidarity with Anderson" statement. It urged President Bush and his administration "to use every possible means at their disposal to bring Terry Anderson and other hostages home."

Some hope had arisen that so-called pragmatists in Iran would help free the captives. It was crushed by the new revolutionary radicalism accompanying Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's order that his followers kill Salman Rushdie as a blasphemer of Islam for writing "The Satanic Verses."

"The doors have been slammed shut again," said Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, an American priest kidnaped by Islamic Jihad on Jan. 8, 1985, and freed July 26, 1986.

Father Jenco of Joliet, who shared a cell with Anderson for several months, was one of three American hostages released in former President Ronald Reagan's arms-for-hostages deal with Iran.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE GOLD MEDAL AWARDS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the 41st Annual Honor Awards Program was held yesterday at the Department of Commerce. The Department's highest honorary award is the Gold Medal which is given for rare and distinguished contributions of major significance to the Department, the Nation, or the world. It is a pleasure to report that Mark E. Brown, the Director, Office of Budget, was one of the 31 persons awarded the Gold Medal by Secretary of Commerce Robert A. Mosbacher at the ceremonies.

Mr. Brown, as the Department's budget officer, works closely with the Subcommittee on the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary and related agencies appropriations that I chair. His outstanding presentations of the Department's budget to the subcommittee are models for the other Departments and agencies. He represents the Department well in his negotiations with us. Now, as we go to conference with the House managers, he is supplying the timely, reliable data we need to make the final decisions.

Mr. President, on behalf of the subcommittee, I want to publicly congratulate Mark and let me close by reading the citation accompanying Mr. Brown's Gold Medal:

Mr. Brown has demonstrated throughout his 16 years of Federal service the capacity to motivate and guide the best efforts of the staff, and to provide imaginative and effective budget and policy support to senior policy officials. He is recognized throughout Commerce for his expertise and for his professionalism. His work has won the praises of Departmental Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries for Administration—as well as members of Congress and their aides. For his years of dedication, keen analysis, and hard work, Mr. Brown is deserving of the Department's highest honor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to take my time. However, if the majority leader and the Republican leader want to get started on their measure, which, after all, they had a time certain to start, I am willing to back off my time. I will leave it up to the decision of the leaders. I would like the time, but they had the prior time and I would be willing to back off if they want to get started.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy. I really would like to get started on this bill so we can then get started on reconciliation.

Mr. CHAFEE. Fair enough.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps we can accommodate the Senator at some later time.

Mr. CHAFEE. There will be a time later, I am sure.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator.

ASSISTANCE FOR FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3385 which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3385) providing assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, my understanding is we have right now 2 hours of debate on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARKIN. And no Senator is limited to the amount of time that they can take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire first, who is controlling time?

Mr. HARKIN. This Senator can respond that this Senator is not certain who controls time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I designate the distinguished Senator from Vermont to control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. DOLE. I designate the Senator from Wisconsin, Senator KASTEN, to control the time in favor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Iowa might withhold just for a moment while I lay out what we are trying to do.

Mr. President, the Senate is considering H.R. 3385, a bill to provide $9 million to assist, in the words of the bill, free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

On Wednesday of last week, the House voted 263 to 156 in favor of H.R. 3385. The administration had said it strongly supported the bill and the leadership wishes to move the bill promptly. The Appropriations Committee held an urgent meeting this morning to bring this bill to the floor. As the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I am required to be the manager.

Mr. President, in my capacity as chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I will manage this bill. I will make sure that all Senators' rights are protected, that amendments can come up and be voted upon, and that we will fulfill the commitment to move this to a final vote in the Senate. But I want all Senators to know that I will vote against this bill in the final analysis. I oppose the request and I will vote against it.

Let me explain briefly what the bill contains. It has $9 million in assistance for the "promotion of democracy and national reconciliation," in Nicaragua: $5 million for internal groups, political organizations and alliances; the remaining $4 million for election support intended to ensure the conduct of free, fair, and open elections through the National Endowment for Democracy; $400,000 to go to the Council of Freely Elected Heads of Government; $250,000 for the Center for Democracy; $400,000 for the Center for Training and Election Promotion.

Mr. President, it seems that over and over again we try to find whatever we can do wrong in Nicaragua and then do it. The Contra program was a dismal failure. It came as a result of the past administration trying to substitute a covert action policy for a foreign policy, something that has never worked in the past, is not working today, and likely will not work in the future.

We also now are being asked to say that while we cannot have publicly financed elections in the United States, we will in Nicaragua. Given the history of our involvement down there, I would think most people running for election in Nicaragua would consider it the kiss of death to have the U.S. backing their election.

It also makes no sense, once again, of the administration has a fixation on Nicaragua, a fixation that if they just throw more money at a problem it will go away.

We heard years ago from the administration that somehow Nicaragua posed a threat to the United States—that they were going to march out of Nicaragua through the Central American countries, come across the border from Mexico and take on the National Guard of Texas, at which point of course they would lose.

With all of the money we are going to send down there, about $14 million in 18 months, just think what we are doing, or what they are asking to do in these elections: $14 million in 18 months in a country of 3 million people where the per capita income is only $300 a year. It makes no sense at all. In comparison, we sent $2.4 million to help assure a fair plebiscite in Chile, a country with 12½ million people; in the Philippines, with 60 million people, we spent $1.3 million; but in Nicaragua, with that great fixation the administration has on Nicaragua, with all the problems facing the United States, all the problems facing the world, we are still fixed on Nicaragua as though it is a major threat. We make it an important threat where it would not be otherwise.

A predecessor of mine once said—referring to another time in our history—to declare victory and pull out. We ought to declare we have done enough and pull out.

If some foreign government were to spend per capita the same amount in the United States as we are being asked to spend down there, it would have to spend one-half billion dollars. That gives some idea how much we are being asked to get involved in the elections in that impoverished little country.

Someday historians will look back at all the great opportunities this country has missed in Eastern Europe, in arms control, in issues of protecting the world's environment, and those areas of international competition and technology, and they will say, why? Because we had this fixation on Nicaragua. Historians will write papers and books and everything else wondering why in heaven's name this country got so far off the mark.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the manager yield me 15 minutes?

Mr. LEAHY. I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from the State of Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill. I do not think we should be in Nicaragua buying either bullets or ballots, and that is just how it is going to be viewed by the American public and by the people in Nicaragua, whether they are for or against the existing government.

We have already sent $3.5 million to Nicaragua to help in the elections. We did it last summer. I did not think it was a good idea then.

I am appalled by the fact that we have gone through all of our appropriation bills and cut them by a percentage to fund the drug program, which I support, but now, instead of taking this $9 million and using it in the United States for a need like that, we are going to send it down to try to influence an election in a Central American country.

It leaves a very bad taste in my mouth that we should be involved in that election, and I think it will throughout the world.

It is a very different thing, Mr. President, for us to say that we are going down and spending taxpayers' money to support one side in an election.

There is something else I do not understand.

People who are saying send this public money for this election in Nicaragua are the same people who oppose giving public money to candidates in the United States so we can have an election without having to raise funds and be involved with all of the campaign financing problems we have seen in the last year.

I only learned of this bill and this proposition within the last week. I had no idea it was going to be moved to the head of the calendar so we could be sending some money down in October for a November election. It is foolish policy for us to do this quick notice. There is a very good possibility, if it is like all the other programs we have run in Central America, that this money will not even arrive there until after the election is over.

I have gone through the bill and looked at how it is going to be spent. it is very, very vague. It is just given to organizations. We do not know whether the trucks that are going to be driven down there are going to be trucks to take people to the elections or if the Government later is going to use them for something else.

This is a bill that comes up that says the Congress is going to go to another nation and finance one side in their election. I am sure it will probably turn people against the United States.

A comment was made by the minority leader that there had been an agreement not to put any more tied amendments on appropriations bills to shift money from whatever was being debated into the drug program or into some portion involved with the drug program. That is not involved in this bill. This is not a regular appropriation bill. This is a bill that is starting here. It has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations as a free-standing bill. This is not under any of the appropriations committees and their standard operation. Those bills are all closed. Those bills have already been presented. Those bills are working their way through conference. This is a special attempt by a group of people who want to influence a particular policy, had it been good or bad, to make an end run.

It is bad policy to spend American money on this purpose when we are running a large budget deficit. It is just appalling that we do it at this time because we are struggling to get a reconciliation bill up to reduce spending so we will not have a sequester on Monday that is going to again cut every bill: defense and discretionary spending alike.

Instead of passing this bill, we should take care of the American public with programs to help the poor ranging all the way from assistance to pregnant women, and to help fight drugs, and improve Medicare and Medicaid assistance programs. We do not have enough money. We should instead try to help the sequester problem by taking this money and using it for a purpose that has already been authorized, such as the war on drugs, to avoid an increase in the deficit. This bill would send money down to Nicaragua to influence an election. I would like to see some public funding of elections in the United States. We stood on this floor in the last 2 years and had eight separate cloture votes where we attempted to obtain some public financing of campaigns in order to be able to put a limit on campaigns. We wanted to limit the amount of money spent. But we could not use that tool because we were opposed by people who are coming forth now and saying, oh, we will spend $9 million down in another country.

What would I do with the money? I will give you some idea about what I feel are some areas that we are underfunding, and they will be cut even more if there is a sequester.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my statement an article from the Washington Post of October 12. It says "When the Baby Must Become the Sitter." It deals with the latchkey child, the child that is at greatest risk, the one where we put an amendment in two different bills here to try to obtain enough money to see that these children were protected before and after school.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 12, 1989]

WHEN THE BABY MUST BECOME THE SITTER—VIRGINIA LATCHKEY CHILD FLAGS PROBLEM FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

(By Sandra Evans)

Mary Crowe is as eager to demonstrate how she lets herself in the door each day when she comes home from school as she is to show off her baby doll's clothes box.

The latchkey that hangs from a ribbon around Mary's neck and the little girl's playthings may seem incongruous, but they are both a familiar part of her life. Mary stated caring for herself at home after school eight months ago, when she was 7.

When she celebrated her 8th birthday last month, Mary was already a veteran at caring for herself, a situation that shocks child-care advocates and officials who nonetheless have no suggestions on how else her family might deal with its child-care needs.

"The anxiety . . . never really goes away," said Fay Crowe, Mary's mother. "If she got hurt or injured and had to go to the hospital or, God forbid, died, I could be charged with neglect."

This is not a case of an uncaring or ignorant parent who does not understand the risk of so young a child caring for herself. Fay Crowe, 26, a divorced mother of three, must work full time to support her young family and simply sees no other option.

Trying to rear her young children—Mary is the oldest—in Northern Virginia on an income of less than $30,000 a year, Crowe has only a little more than $400 left each month after she pays the rent and child care costs for her sons, 4-year-old Jimmy and 5-year-old Joel.

Her salary is above the $24,744 gross annual income limit for families of four to qualify for state child-care subsidies.

Mary Crowe is among an increasing number of children who care for themselves each day after school and is a prime example of a warning child-care advocates have voiced for some time: As low- and moderate-income families and single parents face the ever-rising costs of child care, more will be forced to leave their children at home alone at younger and younger ages.

"This is really pretty horrifying," said Margaret C. Plantz, director of Project Home and research project for children in self-care.

Plantz said parents with children as young as 5 have called asking for tips on self-care.

"A mature [7-year-old] can probably hang in there when everything is fine. What concerns me is when there is an emergency," she said.

"To expect someone with seven years of life experience to deal with a fire or someone trying to break in, it's really risky."

There are social and emotional consequences as well, child-care experts added.

"There are stories of children who go home and lock themselves in the bathroom until mom comes home. They may not be physically damaged, but there is lasting emotional damage," said Plantz, whose project is sponsored by the American Home Economics Association and Whirlpool Foundation.

Latchkey tragedies already have occurred: in October 1987, two 6-year-olds in Reston died in an afternoon fire after they were left in the care of an 8-year-old who accidentally left the other children trapped in a locked house when she ran for help; in November 1986, 3- and 4-year old brothers in Miami burned to death in a clothes dryer when the mother, having exhausted her child-care options, left them to go to work; and just last May, an 8-year old boy shot and killed his 7-year-old sister while they were alone in their grandmother's Franconia town house.

Fairfax County schools let out early on Mondays, and the children took care of themselves for about two hours on those days until an uncle got home from work.

Fay Crowe's problem strikes at many child-care issues being debated locally and nationally.

Although state and local governments in recent years have adopted child-care subsidy programs, advocates say the need for services far exceeds what any state program now does.

Nationally, more than 2 million children from ages 5 to 13, or about 7 percent of that age group, are regularly in self-care, according to 1984 U.S. Census Bureau estimates, which child-care experts consider conservative.

A recent Washington Post poll found that 15 percent of the children ages 8 to 13 in the Washington area are primarily responsible for caring for themselves outside of school hours while their parents work, and even more are regularly left alone for part of the day.

Barbara Willer, of the National Association for the Education of Young Children, said that the age at which children may safely care for themselves varies greatly with their maturity and personality, but in any event should not be earlier than 10.

Situations such as Crowe's "are more common than we would like to think," Willer said. ". . . . There are more [latchkey children] and at younger ages."

Landing a better-paying job in February prompted Crowe's child-care crisis. Until then, when she was making $21,000 a year as a secretary, she received child-care subsidies under a Virginia state program created in 1987.

With the subsidies, Crowe said, she paid an average of $30 a month for all three children to attend the private Kinder-Care Learning Center when they were not in school or preschool.

The pay raise that came with her new job as a data base analyst took her above the state eligibility ceiling of $24,744 a year for a family of four. As a result, her day-care bill jumped from $360 a year for all three children to $137 a week—or $7,124 a year—for just the two boys, more than wiping out her raise.

Keeping Mary at the center would have cost an additional $40 to $50 a week, money Crowe said she simply doesn't have.

Last month, she got more bad news: Kinder-Care was raising its fees, and, starting this month Crowe must pay $160 a week for her two sons.

"Some mothers, just sat down and cried" when they heard of the increases, Crowe said, noting she hasn't been able to find less expensive day-care arrangements that fit her needs.

Crowe's situation also touches on child-support enforcement issues. Her divorce decree did not include any provision for child support from her ex-husband, who now lives in Florida.

Although he would be liable for support under Virginia law, it has been extremely difficult to get support from out-of-state fathers, particularly when they move from job to job, as Crowe says her former husband does.

Crowe said one state social service employee advised her to take a voluntary pay cut to regain eligibility for day-care subsidies, something that goes against the grain of a young woman determined to get ahead in the working world.

She also has no intention of giving up her job to go on welfare, but she has toted up the figures to show that she would be ahead financially if she did and could get into subsidized housing.

Crowe's budget now looks like this: She takes home $1,668 a month. Out of that, she pays $600 in rent on a modest one-story house and, beginning now, $640 a month for her sons' day care. That leaves her with $248 for food, utilities, clothes, care maintenance and other expenses.

She owns a 1977 car that is paid for, and sews all the children's clothes to economize.

If she went on welfare, Crowe said, she would receive $300 a month in food stamps and $386 in Aid to Families with Dependent Children; in addition, she would have no day-care costs and Medicaid would automatically cover her children's health-care needs.

E. Janet Riddick, Virginia's child day-care program manager in the Department of Social Services, said the child-care subsidy program was not intended to end so abruptly when a parent gets a raise but that the upper income limit on the program is tied to 70 percent of the state's median income, geared to those most in need.

Local jurisdictions can set even lower income limits, and some have put the ceiling as low as 30 percent of median income, "not enough to survive on in any locality," Riddick said.

"We do feel that we don't have enough money at the current level to meet all the needs that are out there" despite a major expansion of the program last year, Riddick said.

"This is an unfortunate situation for this woman [Crowe] and not one we want to encourage . . . . I don't think you would find anyone in any agency that would say a 7-year-old should stay alone."

The state does not compile a waiting list nor keep track of how many peole are eligible for the subsidy, she said. The median-income figures are due to be revised soon, so some families currently ineligible may qualify later, she added.

Advocates of a massive child-care bill pending in Congress say the measure could help someone in Crowe's position because the bill calls for subsidies to families with incomes up to 100 percent of state medians.

But in the meantime, Mary Crowe stays by herself more than two hours each afternoon, doing homework or watching television or caring for the family lizards.

She was happy when her mother let her stay by herself rather than go to day care, she said.

"The best part is getting to read, and it's quiet to do my homework," she said. "Sometimes I miss my brothers, and I can't eat pudding. When I get lonely, I call Mommy."

Crowe comforts herself that her daughter is a responsible and trustworthy child who follows instructions.

The family has developed a system designed to protect Mary's safety: She is to walk home with other children and calls her mother as soon as she is in the door. She has been instructed in detail how to deal with telephone calls and not to answer the door under any circumstances.

Another mother in the neighborhood gets home shortly after Mary does and keeps a close watch on the house.

Still, the unexpected crops up. A simple thing like dealing with a headache requires precise directions by phone on just where the aspirin is and what it looks like.

Crowe didn't think to instruct Mary on how to use the thermostat until she came home one day to a sweltering house.

"I regret it," Crowe said of the situation. "My kids are growing up a lot faster because they have to do things other kids don't have to do. Kids used to be able to play after dark, and now they can't. They have a lot of things to worry about that we didn't, like coming home alone."

Crowe also predicts that today's children will grow up resenting the generation of adults who have not provided for them.

"When they are the leaders, they are going to say, 'Where were you when I fell down and hurt myself when I was a kid?' Is anybody thinking about an entire generation of kids?"

Mr. ADAMS. I would spend the $9 million on that first.

That is just an example. Studies have shown that the latchkey child has a higher risk of involvement in drugs.

I just do not understand why there is such a rush for us to come in the middle of our problems with reconciliation and potential sequester and pass this bill.

I am appalled by the fact that we are faced with these changes, rules now that will say that we have not cut enough. Therefore, we may cut everything. Well, this is one place where we can save some money very easily. Why rush forward to spend more money when we are trying to cut everyplace else, and when we are trying to fund the war on drugs, and we are trying to improve the education of our children, and we are trying to protect our children before and after school from the raids and the deprivation and the problems that come from their not having their parents at home and from the dangers of the streets.

We speak of a country that is loving and caring and, yet, we are involved here with trying to interfere in another country's election, with spending money we do not have, which we must borrow in order to send, and with not really helping our own elections, by trying to do some public financing. I just think the world is turned upside down.

I had the question put to me this morning in the Appropriations Committee as we were voting this, of whether or not it is better to spend money for ballots than bullets. I think that is a terrible slogan. I do not think the American people are for spending money for bullets or ballots in that war-torn country, and certainly anybody that runs on a ticket in the United States which spends money for ballots would find they were in enormous trouble with the electorate.

I know we will have a chance to debate this bill later, but as I am trying to say now, it offends many of us deeply and greatly that this bill would be brought up. That is what we are talking about now, that this bill is being brought up, rushed before us, when there are so many other needs in this country that should stand before it and have such a great desire and need.

We are in here this week—not out working in our districts—to try to reduce spending through a reconciliation bill so that we will not have sequester on Monday, and what are we greeted with in the middle of the week but a bill that says let us take $9 million, which we happen to have around, and send it into this election. If we happen to have it around, let us use it for purposes far better suited to reduce this deficit, avoid sequester, or fund the Drug Program on which we have gone across the board with cuts.

I thank the President and the Senators for this time. I just do not think we should vote cloture or proceed with this bill. It should die a death now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Iowa is going to be seeking time, and I see him on the floor. I might ask the Senator from Iowa how much time he will require?

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator. I need about 30 minutes, I think.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield 30 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

I want to thank my distinguished chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee for his leadership, not only in this area, but also in all areas dealing with aid to foreign countries. He has been a very progressive and diligent leader in making sure that our hard-earned tax dollars are not wasted frivolously in giveaway programs, but are used to provide the best possible support for our friends and allies abroad.

Mr. President, I hate to say this, but here we go again, just when we thought the last tax dollar of America was going to Nicaragua, here we go again. Well, it has been on and on every year; if it is not one thing, it is another. If it is not giving money to Somoza, then it is giving money to the Contras. If it is not one group of Contras, then it is another group of Contras. If it is not one group of Contra leaders, it is another group of Contra leaders. If it is not for freedom fighters, it is for another political party.

Last spring, this body and Congress passed an aid package to the Contras and everybody—look at the record—said this is it, this is the last payment; the failed policy in the Reagan administration regarding Nicaragua was being put to rest. That was this spring. Then they came back this summer and said, oh, no, guess what, we need $3.5 million for the upcoming elections. We passed that.

All right, give them $3.5 million for the elections. Three months later they want $9 million more for the elections. What is it going to be in November? What about January, when we come back a month before the elections; how much more?

I heard a comment made the other day that there is a new saying in Spanish, that the word "Nicaragua" has a new meaning in Spanish. It means "waste U.S. money." That is about what we are seeing here, waste U.S. money.

We have already poured into Nicaragua in this decade alone over a quarter of a billion dollars. What have we got to show for it? Half of Nicaragua living in Miami, that is what we have to show for it. A lot of U.S. taxpayers' money is in Swiss bank accounts, funneled over there through the Contra leaders, who are living high on the hog in Miami or Caracas.

I cannot really believe that we are here again discussing sending another $9 million to Nicaragua. To paraphrase Yogi Berra, it is deja vu all over again, Mr. President. I do not know how many times we have to ask the American taxpayer to give more money to that failed policy of the Reagan administration.

Mr. President, let me make a few points clear about my reason for opposing this amount of money. It is not based on any opposition I have to a free and fair election in Nicaragua—far from it. Last year, this Senator supported a provision which appropriated $2 million to the activities in Nicaragua of the National Endowment for Democracy.

This summer, I also supported the amendment that provided $3 million in additional political activities in Nicaragua. That was $1.5 million for NED, and $1.5 million for the Organization of American States. Altogether, this Congress approved—and I supported it—$3.5 million to the National Endowment for Democracy, to be used for the same purposes as provided in this bill.

This bill says they are going to use the money—I will read this:

> Up to $5 million in assistance to internal groups, such as support for political organizations and alliances, independent elements of the media, independent labor unions, business, civic and professional groups through and consistent with the charter and operating procedures for the NED.

Five million dollars. Civic groups, professional groups, labor unions, media. Get in line. Line up for it, because here it comes with no controls whatsoever on what it is going to be used for.

Rather than ensuring free and fair elections, this package that would pour in another $9 million, could well undermine those elections, could well undermine the main opposition candidate, the major recipient of these funds.

Do we really want Mrs. Chamorro to be known as the best candidate that the United States can buy? That is what is going to happen. Do we really want free elections and fair elections in Nicaragua, or do we want an election bought and paid for by the United States Government?

As I said earlier during markup in the Appropriations Committee, I looked around and saw how many people were sitting there who opposed and still oppose public financing of campaigns in this country, but they are now willing to vote $9 million for public financing of a campaign in Nicaragua. I cannot understand what kind of sense that makes.

But do not just listen to me. Listen to some others. Here is a person, Mark Falcoff who is a Latin American specialist with the American Enterprise Institute, that bastion, of course, of leftwing liberal thinking here in the United States. Mr. Falcoff cannot be considered a liberal. For several years he served as one of Senator LUGAR's foreign policy advisers. He is also a protege of former Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, that other great liberal we have in this country.

Mr. Falcoff condemned the request as being excessive, and he said it may look as if the United States were bent on buying the election.

Listen to the official in the Government of Costa Rica, President Oscar Arias, who believes under the proper conditions the opposition could win in Nicaragua.

But the official warns—and here he reflects the opinion of the Arias government—the United States pouring funds into the campaign of Mrs. Chamorro would give the Sandinistas a power propaganda weapon with which to portray Chamorro as a United States puppet.

So there is ample cause for concern here. Some people just believe that all we have to do is throw money out. That is what we did with the Contras, throw money at them, just give them whatever they want, and surely they will overthrow the Nicaraguan Government and establish democracy. How many times have we heard that sorry song sung in the Senate, time and time again. Now we are hearing this siren calling to spend more money to pour in the opposition party in Nicaragua.

If this package passes, we will be spending a total of $8.5 million to support the internal opposition in Nicaragua, a country of 3 million people, with only 1.7 million registered voters. That amounts to $5 per voter.

I did a quick compilation, Mr. President. I wanted to find out what would that mean in our Presidential election if another country were to put that kind of money into the United States. You know what it would amount to? It would be over one-half billion dollars, half a billion dollars. Last year the combined campaigns of Mr. Dukakis and Mr. Bush, plus the Federal matching fund, amounted to just over $100 million. Let us compare that to what we are doing in Nicaragua, mindful that I said 3 million people, 1.75 million registered voters. Let us compare what we have done in the past.

In the 1986 elections in the Philippines the NED spent less than $900,000. The Philippines has a population of 50 million people. That was $900,000 of U.S. taxpayers' money.

In the recent Polish elections, we put in $2.7 million for NED. Poland has 35 million people.

In the 1988 plebiscite in Chile, a country with 12 million people, NED spent $1.2 million.

So look at those elections. Here is Poland, 35 million people, we put in $2.7 million; in Chile—and I supported the money that went to NED that went to Chile—12 million people, $1.2 million, no cash, all in kind. Yet here is Nicaragua, with 3.5 million people, and they want us to spend $8.5 million, seven times what we spent in Chile.

How is the Nicaraguan opposition going to use all of this extraordinary infusion of United States aid? To paraphrase President Bush, "Read their lists." Here is a preliminary financial proposal of UNO, the opposition party in Nicaragua, for infrastructure and expenses for supporting the democratic process in Nicaragua. This list was prepared by UNO as to how it could spend the $5 million in net funds in this bill.

Here is item 6, travel allowances and per diem for 20,000 poll watchers, $600,000.

Mr. President, we just heard earlier that the average annual income in Nicaragua is about $300 a year. If you take 20,000 poll watchers, divide that into $600,000, that is 30 bucks for 1 day, $30 for 1 day. That is 1½ months of income to the average Nicaraguan we are going to give them for 1 day for watching polls.

What we ought to be doing is teaching them how to organize and to get volunteers to watch the polls. That is what we do in America. I do not pay poll watchers. Other Members do not pay poll watchers. People go down and watch the polls on a voluntary basis for the political parties. That is what they did in Chile. NED went down there, and taught Chileans how to organize poll watchers, to get volunteers to watch the polls on election day. In Nicaragua, we want to pay poll watchers a month-and-half salaries for 1 day for watching polls. It is absolutely nutty.

Here is another item, $140,000 for courtesy invitations to international observers and/or visiting delegation from related organizations. What is this all about? That is $140,000 for courtesy invitations. We already have money in the bill and already have money from the $3.5 million we already sent for observers. What is this all about? That is $140,000 for courtesy invitations. What are they going to do, print them in 22-carat gold and send invitations abroad? There is no further explanation for how the $140,000 will be spent.

Another line item is $50,000 for travel and per diem for trips aboard by UNO leaders to promote free and fair elections.

Do they say how many UNO leaders? Is it four, or five, or six? Yet that is $50,000 for them to travel abroad. I thought this was supposed to be a pro-election package, not a travel promotion package.

But here is the one right here, Mr. President, item No. 1, salaries, benefits, and related expenses, $815,000.

What is this? Here we are cutting health care benefits in America and voted last week to cut the benefits on the catastrophic care bill; yet we have $815,000 for benefits and salaries for UNO leaders. That is for 4 months, just think of that, 4 months, $815,000, average income $300 a year. Who is getting paid all this money and where is it going?

Let me read here from an article that appeared in the New York Times on September 28.

> At a hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Bernard Aroson, the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, was, for example, unable to explain why the State Department wanted to spend $815,000 in salaries and $1.3 million on vehicles for opposition members working on next February's elections.

He could not explain it.

Mr. President, when your farmers or when your citizens of the State of Nebraska or the people in Iowa or other people come here and they want the Federal Government to spend some money on a project or a program or activity, they better darn well have chapter and verse how they are going to spend the money. Here is Bernard Aronson, Assistant Secretary for Latin American Affairs, who says he does not know how. He is unable to explain it. But he says, "Go ahead and write the check anyway." What kind of nonsense is that? What kind of absolute nonsense are we getting ourselves into? No accountability.

Finally, the item I just mentioned, there is $1,345,000 for vehicles. Think about that. Here is a country about the size of my State of Iowa. Let us face it, most of the country, is not even accessible by road. You have a small area where most of the people reside. They want $1,345,000 for vehicles for the election.

Well, we figured out—and I got this from Mr. CONTE on the House side. He said, if UNO decided to rent a car from Hertz rent a car for $20 a day, that is 2,241 cars a month that they can rent. What kind of nonsense are we talking about, $1,345,000 for vehicles?

Or is that just for a few Mercedes that the leaders want to have in Miami at their villas or perhaps they need a new BMW at their homes on the French Riviera? Is that the vehicles they are talking about? We do not know because we are not told. And even the Assistant Secretary of State cannot tell you what it is for. And yet, "Write the check. Give them the money."

Here is the other item. To support the $1.3 million for vehicles, there is another line item. They want $149,472 for "gasoline, lubricants, and maintenance."

Now, if that does not just take the cake—150,000 bucks for gasoline, lubricants, and maintenance. I am assuming they are going to spend it over 4 months—November, December, January, and February. That is 35,000 bucks a month just for gasoline and lubricants.

Would you not like to have that in your campaign when you go out and campaign? Mr. President, would you not like to have that kind of money and those kinds of cars and vehicles?

They cannot put that many cars on the road in Nicaragua. They do not have that much gasoline and lubricants. It is nonsense, absolute total nonsense what we are being asked to come up with here.

What is just as disturbing as the amount is the fact that NED can give over some $5 million cash to UNO. Cash. If you look closely at the items, you will find what can be politically called soft money.

Well, let us really be honest about it. Let us call it what it is—walking around money. We know what that is in this country. Walking around money, that is what it is; pouring money into a political party.

Here is Nicaragua, a country with a very sorry economy, where the average per capita income is, as I said, about 300 bucks a year. What you have here is a lot of walking around money.

They say that former dictator Somoza used to rig his elections for 30 cents a head. Today, we are being asked to rig them for 5 bucks a head. Even if you are for it, at least we could do it cheaper than this. If you want to buy an election, at least it could be done cheaper than this.

The exchange rate in Nicaragua right now is 25,000 cordobas per dollar. As I said, if we used that same money in this country for national elections last year, some foreign country could have poured a half a billion dollars into the campaign of Mr. Dukakis or Mr. Bush, whichever side they wanted to be on. Would we stand for that in this country? Would we say, "Oh, that's all right"?

But we are telling Nicaraguans that you ought to stand for it. We are going to pump that money into a political party. Absolute nonsense.

To quote from a recent Newsweek article:

> If Mrs. Chamorro is defeated, many Nicaraguans will blame the United States, and some Americans may criticize President Bush for sending good money after bad.

Have we not wasted enough money in Nicaragua, over a quarter of a billion dollars? When does it end? Never? Well, this is the time to end it.

Ironically, this package, which is designed to support a political opening in Nicaragua, could well be the door that closes that political opening.

Let me repeat: The issue is not whether or not we are going to support democracy in Nicaragua. The real question is: Are we going to smother it? Are we going to nip it in the bud?

Instead of pouring so much money into Nicaragua, the administration could offer the Nicaraguan opposition more effective—and most cost effective—assistance by simply adding one proviso: "No more CIA involvement in Nicaragua."

Reading again from Newsweek, and again I quote, about secret help:

The United States is already funneling millions of American dollars, much of it secretly, to help the Nicaraguan opposition in next February's election. Overt money, about $8.5 million, goes to the National Endowments for Democracy. But U.S. intelligence sources say covert money, about $5 million is handled by the CIA. Officials say the money is for political infrastructure, not campaigning.

Well, there you go. I wish we had a proviso in this package. I wish the President would come out and say the CIA is not going to be involved. Can any Senator here on the floor say absolutely for certain that the CIA has not been involved in the election process and will not be involved in the election process? I cannot. I am not on the Intelligence Committee. I do not know.

All I know is what I have read and what I have heard. And what I heard is that the CIA is involved. So we are not even just talking about all the overt money, we are talking about covert money, also.

I think the administration should stop playing cat and mouse with this issue of covert aid and come right out and say: "No covert activities will be engaged in related to next February's election."

Well, even the opposition to Nicaragua, UNO, made its position overwhelmingly clear that they are opposed.

Alfredo Cesar, a member of the resistance directorate, returned to Nicaragua in June after 7 years in exile. Here is what he said:

The worst thing the U.S. Government can do is to try to help in a hidden way. That would be the worst of all, worse than not helping at all.

Nicaragua's opposition daily, La Prensa, has called suggestions of possible covert aid to the Nicaraguan opposition a potentially fatal blow to their election hopes.

On August 4, 20 Nicaraguan parties, representing most of the political opposition, joined with the Sandinistas in signing a "political accord of the national dialog." Quoting from that accord:

The political parties call on the governments with interests in Central America to abstain from carrying out covert activities in the electoral process of Nicaragua.

And yet our Government, the administration of President Bush, has been ominously silent about saying whether or not covert activities would be engaged in.

Mr. President, over the past year, I have consistently advocated a position that the United States should be involved with the upcoming elections in Nicaragua, but it should be constructive and open, in kind and not in cash.

In 1988, I played a role in assisting the forces of democracy during the Chilean plebiscite by offering an amendment, which was adopted, to add another million dollars for NED, for their activities in Chile.

With the modest amount of funds we provided NED, the endowment provided Chile's democratic opposition the skills necessary to mount a highly sophisticated campaign. And even though they were outspent 30 to 1 by Pinochet, the free election forces won in last October's plebiscite.

That is the way to do it—no cash. There was not any walking around money. We did not pump a lot of cash into Chile to buy the elections. What we did was we used the NED to go to Chile to teach them how to organize, how to watch polls, to do polling, how to get people registered, get them to the polls on election day, how to use media wisely and effectively. That is all proper. I have no problems with that.

But in this package we are asking to pump in obscenely large amounts of money into that small country and to give them cash again.

Again, I am not opposed at a modest amount of money for the election process. But not in cash. We need to support independent organizations like the Council of Freely Elected Heads of Governments, the United Nations, the Center for Democracy, to help the election process, to help registered voters and to send independent monitors to oversee the independent registration and election process. That is what we should be doing.

That is why I am going to propose an amendment which will offer a reasonable compromise and a more effective way of supporting the elections process than that which we are considering today. My amendment would do the following: Provide $1 million in-kind assistance through NED for election support and monitoring to ensure the conduct of a free and fair and open election in Nicaragua, and another $1.5 million for support for the elections process which would be divided this way: $400,000, the United Nation's election monitoring team; $400,000 for former President Carter's Council of Freely Elected Heads of Governments; San Jose-based Center for Training and Election Promotion, $400,000; and $300,000 for the Center for Democracy.

With that modest amount of money, Mr. President, we will ensure that we have the monitors that we need to ensure that the process is open, free and fair in Nicaragua. But what we have in front of us today goes way beyond that. It ensures a bought and paid for election and, I believe, ensures the defeat of the opposition.

It will backfire. It will undermine Mrs. Chamorro and the political opposition. Oh, but I will bet you get the opposition to say they would like to have the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HARKIN. Can I get about another 10 minutes?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight minutes and fifty seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—this is a request for the distinguished ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee—that we be able to call a quorum at this point, without the time being charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Under that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina be allowed to proceed for up to 5 minutes on a different matter, without it applying to the matter before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. LEAHY. I would yield to him so he can say bienvenu to our colleagues from France.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY A GROUP OF FRENCH PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, we have a distinguished group of French parliamentarians as the Senator from North Carolina, who is the occupant of the Chair, knows.

Senators will certainly want to pay their respects and extend their welcomes to them. I certainly do that, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ASSISTANCE FOR FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes of my time to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator. I really want to caution Senators on the amount of money going to Nicaragua. I really believe this package is going to backfire. I am as committed and dedicated to free and fair and open elections in Nicaragua as any Senator in this body.

I disagree that this is the best way to do it, the same as I disagreed that the best way to help was through the failed policies of funding the Contras. We could have a more modest package. We have already pumped in $3.5 million. We could have a more modest package that gets the money to the international observer teams to ensure that the elections are free and fair and honest, but not pump all this cash into that poor, tiny country and buy those elections.

Let us save Nicaragua's democrats from America's big pockets. Let us vote for a more reasonable alternative that I think would offer a more realistic way to support a free and fair election. Mr. President, a free and fair election in Nicaragua cannot be bought with United States dollars.

I thank my distinguished chairman for yielding at this time. I yield back my time.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes fifty seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator PELL.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Vermont.

Mr. President, my support of this proposal to provide United States funds for the electoral process in Nicaragua is based on the information provided by the administration that the assistance is in fact, only for the "process." Further, it is based on my respect for and faith in the National Endowment for Democracy that sensitive and proper use will be made of the funds in this very delicate situation and that a careful accounting will be made. In no way are the funds to be used by the opposition for direct partisan campaign purposes.

It is my understanding that the funds will be used to support the process through projects such as voter registration, seminars for poll watchers, get out the vote efforts, and communication equipment, but that money will not go directly or indirectly for campaign activities of the opposition parties.

The work done by the NED in the most recent elections in Chile and Panama provides me with the belief that this assistance to the electoral process in Nicaragua will underline that a free and fair election will be held on February 25 and that the results will be accepted by the administration.

I look forward to watching the election process carefully with the hope that relations between the United States and Nicaragua will improve. I believe that finally peace is at hand in Central America and the election in Nicaragua certainly is a key factor.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I do not intend to engage in debate on this issue today. I appreciate the support of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. I simply want to say that this package has been introduced by bipartisan leadership, Republicans and Democrats, in the House and Senate. It is the result of work the administration has done with both the House and Senate.

Although no one thinks it may be perfect, everyone feels this is the best we can do and everyone understands the urgency of this matter. A significant amount of the money in this package will be allocated to voter registration. The voter registration days are the Sundays in October, two of which we have already missed.

This is a perfect example of how this legislative body, by not acting—by voting neither yes nor no and by simply delaying action, can defeat the legislation. I am hopeful that we can move forward quickly on this legislation, and I look forward to, after the vote on cloture, engaging in the actual debate and dealing with amendments. At that point, we will discuss the merits and the objections to certain amendments and points that have been raised on the floor today.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD on behalf of the minority leader a letter from Secretary of State Baker to the minority leader outlining the urgency of and the rationale for this package.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR BOB: The Bipartisan Accord united the Executive and the Congress in seeking democratization and peace in Nicaragua. It is our common hope that the February 1990 elections will help achieve those goals.

As you begin consideration of HR 3385, a bill to assist in Nicaragua's elections process, I want to express my strong support for its contents. Democracy and peace can come to Nicaragua only if the elections are both free and fair. While the Sandinistas alone will determine whether the elections are free, Congress and the Executive, working together to pass this legislation, can help ensure that they are fair.

I also want to emphasize, in the strongest terms, the urgent need for the bill's passage. Half of Nicaragua's Sunday registration days have already passed; only two remain. Funds to aid in registration are needed more urgently than ever. It is also essential to the process of democratization that other funds contained in this package reach Nicaragua well before the election—now only four and a half months away.

Because the administration supports the bill as transmitted to the Senate, and because of the urgency of enactment, I am opposed to all amendments to HR 3385, regardless of substance or intent. As you know, the bill is a compromise resulting from consultations with both the Senate and House. Differing versions of the bill would further hinder enactment. While I remain respectful of Congressional prerogatives, the urgency of the situation in Nicaragua demands that we make these funds available as soon as possible.

With best personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. BAKER III.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, excuse me, can I withhold for a moment? I yield the Senator from Arizona 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator has yielded back all time but 10 minutes? The Senator may withdraw that.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I withdraw my request with regard to yielding back my time and instead yield to the Senator from Arizona 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Wisconsin, and I also express my deep appreciation to him for his continued leadership on this very difficult issue. I do not know of a more knowledgeable, more committed Member of this body on the issue of Central America, as well as many other areas. I again express my appreciation to him for his support for this very important effort to achieve democracy in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, what we do here today can be characterized just that simply. The Senate either will or will not stand with the forces of democracy in Nicaragua. I am confident that after years of division over the question of assistance to the armed resistance in Nicaragua, this body will be united in its support for those brave Nicaraguans who face their adversaries armed only with a ballot. For those who argue that the United States should not concern itself with the affairs of one foreign political party at the expense of another, let me say this: The contest in Nicaragua is not between two democratic organizations; it is between democrats and antidemocrats. For the United States to desire the success of democracy generally in Nicaragua, it must desire the success of the democratic opposition specifically in Nicaragua.

No Senator can argue with the purpose of the proposals contained in this legislation. Stated simply, the purpose is to improve the prospects that the forthcoming election in Nicaragua will be free and fair. There is, of course, a very natural concern on the part of some Members that overt U.S. assistance to the National Opposition Union, known as UNO, may inadvertently do more harm than good to UNO's campaign. This argument is predicated on the assumption that association with the United States is a political disadvantage in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, I am not at all certain that after a decade of bad relations, the people of Nicaragua might not welcome better relations between their prospective government and the Government of the United States. But be that as it may, let us be clear that we are not giving money directly to UNO's campaign. The leadership of UNO feels that this legislation will finance a substantial portion of its noncampaign needs. Any other funds UNO requires they wil raise privately from other parties.

We in the United States are not in the best position to make determinations about what is or is not politically advisable in Nicaragua. It is much wiser to depend on the judgments of those people whom we seek to assist.

Mr. President, the opposition Presidential candidate, Violetta Chamorro, one of the greatest persons I have ever had the honor to know, whose husband was assassinated by the Somocistas, has made clear to administration officials that not only would UNO welcome the aid in this legislation but that such assistance is desperately required if UNO is to have any chance of competing in fair elections.

Mr. President, when we assess the political conditions that currently exist in Nicaragua, we are not surveying a level playing field. This assistance is simply meant to repair some of the disadvantages confronting UNO. In power for 10 years, the Sandinistas have merged their party with the State, and they have the resources of the State at their disposal as they seek to undermine the ability of the opposition to challenge them politically.

Mr. President, I am not talking merely about the advantages typically enjoyed by incumbents. As incumbents ourselves, we would be hard-pressed to begrudge those advantages to other incumbents. No, Mr. President, the Sandinistas are able to manipulate the electoral process far beyond the level that is tolerated in democratic societies.

The Sandinistas dominate the Supreme Electoral Council which is responsible for running the election. In practice, the Sandinistas enjoy a 4-to-1 advantage on the Council. Unsurprisingly, the Council routinely issues regulations favorable to the Sandinistas. For example, the Electoral Council refused to allow Nicaraguan exiles to vote abroad because they do not have passports, even though they may have been forced by the Sandinistas to leave the country without passports. Further, their applications for passports are processed by the Sandinistas at a pace designed to ensure their arrival sometime after the February elections.

A 50-percent tax has been levied on foreign contributions to political parties which will in all likelihood be enforced by the Council only on contributions made to UNO. As of this time, the Council claims that there have been no outside contributions to the Sandinistas.

Mr. President, every year the Soviets and Cubans provide billions in assistance to the Sandinistas. To say that there have been no outside contributions to the FSLN at this time, of course, is ludicrous at best.

International observers, in Nicaragua to determine the fairness of the elections, will be regulated by and must deliver their reports to the Supreme Electoral Council.

Desperate for foreign assistance, the Sandinistas ardently desire that their election be recognized as fair by the rest of the world. Consequently, they hope to subvert the election process at the beginning of the process rather than on election day. Toward this end, the Sandinistas intend to retain control of the election machinery all the way down to the grassroots level.

We can expect them to compaign with a mix of heavy-handed threats and promises. They will offer food and jobs to the poor and starving victims of their chronic mismanagement of the Nicaraguan economy. They will threaten Nicaraguans supporting the opposition with employment. They will continue to dominate the media and to permit the opposition extremely limited access to television.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that once every 3 days the opposition party is allowed 10 minutes of free television time on a channel that barely reaches all of Managua. That is the kind of fair and equal treatment that the Sandinistas are extending to the opposition.

Furthermore, the Sandinistas intend to limit election monitoring by imposing new visa requirements and travel restrictions on foreign diplomats. In this way, they hope to obscure their hidden campaign against the opposition. Already, mobs of pro-government thugs, possibly including off-duty policemen, consistently harass and disrupt opposition political rallies.

Indeed, with these methods and with all the other measures at their disposal, the Sandinistas appear entirely confident that the February elections will never become more than a necessary nuisance to the continued consolidation of their power.

Mr. President, it is incumbent upon the world's leading democracy to answer the call for assistance from true Nicaraguan democrats as they wage this uphill struggle against their Marxist adversaries.

Mr. President, let us be clear. This legislation represents a clear attempt by the United States to associate itself with one party to a political contest. We need not obscure that fact. I say that because the prospects for the institutionalization of democracy in Nicaragua after the February elections are remote unless the opposition wins these elections.

The Sandinistas have no interest in permitting regular, routine elections. They hold such practices in contempt. Once the Contras have been removed as a threat to their power, and once they have secured assistance from generous Western donors, it is all too likely that their interest in elections will subside. Therefore, it is not only acceptable, it is proper for the United States to clearly identify itself with the candidate who does not seek office as an end in itself but as a means to the further promotion of democratic values in Nicaragua.

Having said that, let me stress that although we earnestly desire our efforts today contribute to the success of democracy in Nicaragua, nothing contained in this legislation represents direct assistance to UNO's campaign.

Mr. President, we believe that in a free and fair election UNO can take care of itself. Our intention is to only assist in opening the elections; to help repair the current imbalance in election procedures; to cooperate in leveling the playing field to the extent that UNO and thus democracy has an opportunity to flourish in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, the kinds of democracy supporting measures proposed by this legislation are no different from those programs financed by the National Endowment for Democracy in Chile, Panama, the Philippines, and Poland.

This legislation provides assistance for basic election support activities like party building, voter registration, informational media presentations, training poll workers, election monitoring, get-out-the-vote campaigns and international observer programs.

Although we believe that the freer the election, the greater the chances for an opposition victory, our assistance is strictly limited to noncampaign purposes and remains well within the charter of the National Endowment For Democracy. This legislation simply proposes to help the Sandinistas keep their word. Our only purpose is to encourage fairness in the election process.

Mr. President, let me briefly address another concern that Members may have regarding our assistance. There is among Members, including my good friend from North Carolina, a justifiable concern that because of the 50-percent tax on foreign contributions, some U.S. money will end up in the control of the Sandinista-dominated election council. I join in those concerns. Nevertheless, as disagreeable as this possibility is, we should not abandon all support for Nicaraguan democrats in order to avoid its occurrence.

In the event the Council should obtain some U.S. money, UNO believes it can ensure that some of the assistance goes for legitimate election expenses and not partisan activities and not into the coffers of the Sandinistas. Further, the legislation authorizes UNO to determine whether or not it is necessary to contribute to the Council. This will enhance the opposition's bargaining power as it seeks to promote greater campaign reforms.

Finally, Mr. President, Mrs. Chamorro has indicated that this arrangement is acceptable to her. I am sure it is not a desirable arrangement to her. But I think we should take encouragement from her acceptance.

Mr. President, there has been some concern the United States has ignored the fact that the opposition coalition contained parties we would usually refuse to assist. That is so. The opposition coalition includes the Nicaraguan Communist party. I think most Members would accept that this Senator has no desire to assist the advance of any Communist Party. Yet, in some small way Nicaraguan Communists will benefit from the activities proposed in this legislation.

Again, Mr. President, I defer to the judgment of Nicaraguan democrats, specifically Mrs. Chamorro. If she feels that the benefits of a united opposition exceed the cost of cooperating with the small and fairly insignificant Nicaraguan Communist Party, then we must abide by her judgment.

After all, Mr. President, it is Violeta Chamorro who will be President of Nicaragua if the opposition wins this election, not Nicaraguan Communists.

Mr. President, let me close by saying that the United States cannot make these elections free and fair. Unfortunately, only the Sandinistas can do that. But we can make the theft of these elections a much more difficult proposition for the Sandinistas. And in the process, Mr. President, the United States will reveal yet again the principle that governs our engagement in the world. Our support for democracy in Nicaragua, Mr. President, is another measure of our support for a better world—a world of free, democratic nations at peace with one another. It is the world we have always sought. Let us not break faith with that dream now, by ignoring the earnest pleas of some Nicaraguans to join our ranks.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from North Carolina yield to me 2 minutes so I might ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. HELMS. Absolutely, Mr. President,

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

First, I would like to direct a question, if I might, to the Senator from Arizona. I preface that by saying nobody in this Senate has had a more consistent record in the support of the opposition elements in Nicaragua than the Senator from Arizona. So when he speaks from the floor on this matter we all, it seems to me, should pay heed to his remarks because he has been involved with this. He has made I do not know how many trips to the area over the past several years.

Indeed, I believe he served on that commission that was formed. Was it called the Kissinger Commission? The Senator served on that Commission. So he knows what he is talking about. Thus, all of us, for the sake of making an intelligent vote on this issue, should heed the words from the Senator.

If I might address the question, as I understand the Senator's position, he recognizes that some of this money might go to the Sandinistas or what would be called the Nicaraguan incumbent government. Is that correct?

Mr. McCAIN. If I could preface my answer, I appreciate my friend's very kind remarks. I was not a member of the Kissinger Commission. I am the cochairman of the Senate Commission to observe Central American elections. I believe I will be one of the observers of the elections in Nicaragua. I appreciate his kind remarks.

In answer to his question, yes, that is my understanding. There is the possibility that some of this money, due to the Sandinista law, which I find repugnant, could possible go to the Sandinista government.

I would also add that if we support UNO, a very insignificant Communist Party in Nicaragua, would probably get some of those funds. Neither occurrence is a pleasant prospect to the Senator from Rhode Island, nor is it to me. But the option of providing no assistance is even less acceptable.

Mr. CHAFEE. The other point is that time is racing by. Each Sunday that we fail to act on this measure means more lost time before the registration which we are trying to encourage.

As I understand, I presume if we acted on this, it would be perhaps doubtful whether anything could happen on this Sunday. What would be the Senators estimate on that?

Mr. McCAIN. I say to the Senator, due to a very unacceptable procedure that has been imposed on the Nicaraguan people by the Sandinistas, the only time for registration is the first four Sundays in October. There is, obviously, very little time remaining. Voter registration is very difficult to conduct in the hinterlands outside of Managua, as my friend from Rhode Island knows so well. The problem is so acute because the opposition parties have no means of transportation to get out there.

It is also clear that the larger the turnout the better the chance for democracy to prevail in any election, particularly this one.

Mr. CHAFEE. A final question. The opposition candidate for President, Mrs. Chamorro, firmly supports this measure. It seems to me, if I judge this with what seems to be common sense, if we support the opposition, then we support Mrs. Chamorro, and we support what she is attempting to achieve. And she is seeking these funds knowing it will advance her chances for victory. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. McCAIN. I say to my friend from Rhode Island not only is this situation acceptable to her, despite the problems which were just so eloquently outlined by Senator CHAFEE, but she also believes that without the kind of assistance we are considering here today, her chances of succeeding are minimal. If we provide assistance to Mrs. Chamorro, it will make a significant difference in enhancing her chances of a fair and equal playing field.

Mr. CHAFEE. May I ask one final question? I ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona. Am I correct in saying that if a portion of this money goes to the Sandinistas, it makes little difference to them because they have plenty of money, whereas the absence of this portion of money to Mrs. Chamorro and the opposition parties is, perhaps I could even go so far as to use the word "devastating" since they do not have funds to operate.

So the fact that some goes to the incumbents, the Sandinistas—in order to get some to Mrs. Chamorro and her party, it is far better to have some go to her and some to them than no money go to either. Is that a correct analysis of this situation?

Mr. McCAIN. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is totally accurate in his analysis. I would also like to point out that the estimates of Soviet-Cuban annual aid to Nicaragua ranges between $2 billion and $3 billion.

In Nicaragua, the Sandinista Party is the state, the Sandinista Party is the army, the Sandinista Party is everything. So those funds, those billions of dollars in aid coming to the Sandinistas will clearly be used by the Sandinistas to further their own electoral chances, and more importantly to harass, intimidate, and oppress the opposition.

So I say in response to my friend, yes, this money is absolutely critical to Mrs. Chamorro. Yet at the same time, I believe it would be relatively insignificant as far as the Sandinistas are concerned.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to say as one who has observed the distinguished Senator from Arizona for many years deal with this problem, his attention to it, that I am greatly influenced by his position on this. I hope other Members of the Senate will be, likewise, when we come to vote.

I want to thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for giving me this time.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator is quite welcome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. The proposal before the Senate asks for a total of $9 million. Out of the $9 million, $5 million will be used to fund the National Endowment for Democracy for "political organizations and alliances, independent elements of the media, labor unions, and business, civic and professional groups" and for "support for the election process." The additional $4 million will be used for "election support intended to ensure the conduct of free, fair, and open elections through and consistent with the charter of the National Endowment for Democracy."

Mr. President, I have examined this proposal thoroughly. I have seen the interference the United States has attempted before in the elections of other countries with sad results. I have listened to all of the arguments, pro and con. I have consulted with the Nicaraguan freedom fighters about this proposal as well.

As one of the very first Senators to stand on this floor a decade ago to sound the alarm about the Sandinistas, I cannot in good conscience support this proposal.

Secretary of State Baker, who is a friend of all of us, came up to present the outline of this program several weeks ago. I told him candidly that I could not and would not support it.

The President of the United States called me on Friday, urging me not to delay this bill. As a courtesy to him, I agreed that I would do nothing to inhibit the process of its going through the Senate. But I also told the President that I could not support it, and I told him why.

Mr. President, I am opposed in principle to providing the taxpayers' money, the U.S. taxpayers' money, to support candidates or political parties in foreign elections anywhere in the world.

Some Senators may recall my vehement opposition to the reports of blatant interference by the United States Government in the Salvadoran elections of 1984. But specifically, in the case of the upcoming Nicaraguan elections, there are compelling reasons for the United States to stay out, to abstain from both overt and covert assistance.

Mr. President, it would be nice, it would be reassuring to think that the election scheduled for next February in Nicaragua will somehow turn out to be free and fair. We would all like to think that the elections will usher in a new era of representative democracy for the people of Nicaragua. We would all like to think that the new government will welcome the Nicaraguan freedom fighters home and adopt their commitment to freedom and that the new government will cease to export terrorism throughout Central America and halt its reliance on hundreds of millions of dollars in Soviet military hardware.

That is what we would like. Unfortunately, the evidence is overwhelmingly to the contrary. In the months since the United States ceased all military support for the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, the Soviets have escalated the volume of military supplies destined for Managua. The United States has kept its end of the Arias plan. I opposed that plan, but nonetheless, the U.S. Government is not now providing any military support for the freedom fighters—none. Yet, the Soviets are continuing to use the Arias plan to strengthen the Sandinista regime.

So the question persists, Mr. President, does anyone seriously truly believe that the Soviets are investing all this money in Daniel Ortega just to see him lose power in the upcoming elections. The answer to that is, of course, no.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Washington Post, of September 19, entitled "U.S. Says East Bloc Increases Arms Shipments to Nicaragua," be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. What do we know about the coming elections? First of all, they will be governed by a new Sandinista election law. That law requires that any money received by the parties from abroad can be split 50–50 with the Sandinista-controlled Nicaraguan electoral tribunal. In other words, for every dollar the United States takes from our taxpayers and proposed to give directly to the opposition, 50 cents of every one of those dollars will go to the Communist Sandinistas.

The State Department argues that the National Endowment for Democracy will try to find ways to get around the 50-percent tax. They claim that they will try to fund the process, rather than specific parties. Good luck. It is not going to happen. The laws governing the 50-percent so-called tax are vague and, when pressed on the issue, the State Department admitted to me and to other Senators that our assistance will go to the Sandinistas. However, they argue that this is a price worth paying in order to assist the election process.

Mr. President, what do we know about this election process? Is this a democratic election as some would have us believe? Is it arrived upon through a mutual agreement between the Sandinistas and the opposition? No, indeed, it is not. It is a process contrived and controlled by the Sandinista regime operating under Sandinista law.

Mr President, I recently asked the State Department for an assessment of the Sandinistas' electoral process, and I will quote directly from a State Department memorandum dated August 10 of this year in response to my inquiry.

> The Sandinistas appear determined to maintain a tight grip on the electoral process. Regime supporters hold four out of five seats on the Supreme Electoral Council, which is responsible for running the election and administering the election fund, into which half of all foreign contributions to Nicaraguan parties must go.

That is the State Department talking; that is not Jesse Helms. The State Department further said:

> The electoral laws, particularly those that prohibit slandering candidates, are vague enough to give the Sandinistas wide latitude in defining which issues are acceptable.

The State Department continues:

> Pro-Government mobs, known as "turbas," continue to disrupt opposition rallies and other events. The toughs who make up these mobs are drawn largely from the ranks of the FSLN's "mass organization," but may include off-duty police and Interior Ministry operatives.

The point is this: This is the "process" that the State Department now wants us to support. I just read what the State Department stated back in August. Things have not changed. Mr. President, this is no democratic process. It makes a mockery of democracy.

Now what do we know about the United Nicaraguan Opposition that the State Department intends to assist with United States taxpayer dollars? One would assume that the administration is at least asking for U.S. taxpayer dollars to help support the campaign of anti-Communist parties. But that is not the case—because the Nicaraguan Communist Party is a member of the United Nicaraguan Opposition coalition that is opposing the Sandinistas in the February election. They are a member of the coalition that the State Department wants to support—and wants the American taxpayers to support.

Mr. President, on September 7, I sent a letter to Assistant Secretary of State Bernard Aronson, asking for a brief analysis of each of the 14 parties in the United Nicaraguan Opposition. The reply that I received, states:

All 14 UNO parties have endorsed a common platform which calls for political democracy; respect for private property and family values; the rule of law.

And the letter goes on to identify the Communist Party of Nicaragua and its soul-mate the Socialist Party of Nicaragua, as parties in the coalition. The letter also identifies several other socialist parties in the coalition.

It should come as no surprise that the leadership of both the Communist Party and the Socialist Party was trained in the Soviet Union. And does anyone truly believe that the Communist Party of Nicaragua will respect "political democracy, private property, and the rule of law?" Is there a Communist regime in the world that respects political democracy, private property, and the rule of law?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of the 14 parties in the coalition, with their ideological orientation, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NICARAGUAN "OPPOSITION" PARTIES

1. Liberal Constitutionalist Party. President, Jaime Cuadra. Centrist.
2. National Democratic Confidence Party. President, Agustin Jarquin. Christian Democrat.
3. National Conservative Party. President, Silviano Matamoros. Conservative.
4. Communist Party of Nicaragua. Secretary General, Eli Altamirano. Marxist-Leninist.
5. Conservative Popular Alliance Party. President, Francisco Anzoatequi. Center-Moderate.
6. Independent Liberal Party. President Virgilio Godoy. Left-of-Center.
7. National Action Party. President, Eduardo Rivas. Christian Democratic Party.
8. Neo-Liberal Party. President, Andres Zuniga. Centrist.
9. Nicaraguan Democratic Movement. President, Robert Urroz. Center-left.
10. Popular Social Christian Party. Secretary General, Mauricio Diaz. Socialist.
11. Party for Integration of Central America. President, Alejandro Perez Arevalo. Centrist.
12. Social Democratic Party. President, Guillermo Potoy. Socialist.
13. Socialist Party of Nicaragua. Secretary General Gustavo Tablada. Communist.
14. National Conservative Action Party. President, Hernaldo Zuniga Montenegro. Moderate.

Mr. HELMS. I have always opposed sending U.S. dollars to Communist countries. I opposed aiding the Sandinistas in 1979 because I knew then that they were nothing more than devout Communists dedicated to Marxist-Leninist principles. Therefore I am absolutely appalled that this administration expects the American people to help fund the Nicaraguan Communist Party. But the State Department isn't worried about the Nicaraguan Communist Party—just as it wasn't worried about the Sandinistas back in 1979. One senior administration official told my office recently that the inclusion of the Communist Party is essential to the success of the coalition. Another official told us that we can control the Communists in the coalition.

But in addition to the Nicaraguan Communist Party, several other parties in the coalition closely identify with the Sandinista ideology. In fact the Vice Presidential candidate, Vergilio Godoy, is a former Sandinista Labor Minister who remained in the cabinet until 1984—long after the brutal nature of the Sandinista regime had become apparent to everyone. Moreover, during his tenure as Minister of Labor he alienated countless union members in his effort to implement Sandinista labor policies. To my knowledge, Godoy has never renounced the ideology of his former Sandinista colleagues.

So Mr. President, against this background it is understandable that there is limited enthusiasm in Nicaragua for either ticket. Nicaraguan voters have less than 1 month to register to vote. And in order to vote, a Nicaraguan must reside legally in Nicaragua. This excludes an estimated 300,000 to 500,000 voting age exiles who will not be allowed to register or to vote.

The exiles include the many outspoken opponents to the Sandinista regime. But for these exiles—and freedom fighters—the choice is stark. Either they accept the Sandinista promises of amnesty at face value, and return home to an uncertain future—and open prison doors—or they remain in exile while the Sandinistas legitimize their illegitimate regime through their own electoral process. And once that regime is legitimized by these elections there will undoubtedly be pressure to deport many of these exiles to their homeland—regardless of who wins.

And what if Mrs. Chamorro wins—with the financial assistance of the United States? Her regime will forever be tainted as an American puppet that was unfairly imposed on the people of Nicaragua by the financial contributions of the United States. And if the Sandinistas win? They will forever be able to justify their existence as a mandate from the people won through a free and fair election financed by the American taxpayer. Is that what we want, Mr. President?

In summary Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is purportedly to assist the election process in Nicaragua.

Apparently no one has asked the fundamental question. Should the United States assist any election process, anywhere, at any time?

The second question is this: Does it serve American interests, or the interests of the people of Nicaragua, to assist this particular election process in Nicaragua?

The third question is this: If we do assist the election process in Nicaragua, will this particular legislation actually help establish a democratic process in Nicaragua? Or better yet, will it help establish freedom?

Mr. President, the answer to all of these questions is no.

U.S. policy should oppose U.S. intervention in any election in any country at any time. You cannot jump start democracy. It is true that the Soviet Union and the Socialist International spend millions of dollars to support Marxist and Marxist-Leninist candidates in other countries. But we cannot teach the lessons of democracy by using undemocratic methods.

We all know what happened in El Salvador—how the United States intervened with millions of dollars in aid to elect a Socialist candidate. We all know how the resulting regime was incompetent and corrupt, destroying the economy in El Salvador, and lacking the will to defeat the Communist insurrection. We all know how the people of El Salvador resoundingly repudiated the handpicked United States candidate the first chance they got.

The El Salvador incident demonstrates the incompetence of the State Department and the CIA. Their experts know little or nothing about the political process in the United States, much less in other countries. They have never run for election anywhere, and they don't know what motivates people to vote.

When they put U.S. taxpayers' money on the line, the State Department invariably supports candidates who are more attractive to leftwing intellectual circles in the United States than to the people in the victim country. They think that the best way to beat communism is to support a Trotskite candidate, or at least one certified by the Socialist International. I can't think of a single candidate supported by U.S. taxpayers' money who could possibly win an election in the United States.

So that brings us to the second question. Are these elections in Nicaragua good for American interests, or even for the interests of the people of Nicaragua? It is childish to think that an election alone means that a democratic system has been established. Even if these elections are declared free and fair, with all the votes counted accurately, there is no way they could be considered free and fair.

A free election cannot take place in an atmosphere of intimidation. The Nicaraguan Government is controlled by the Sandinista Party, a party organized on Leninist principles of totalitarian domination. The Sandinista Party controls the lives of Nicaraguan citizens, both directly and indirectly. It determines where people work, where they to to school, what their chances for advancement are. The party system controls education, newspapers, television. The Sandinista neighborhood wardens control the comings and going of individual citizens and are always there to check up on their loyalty. The party even controls the rationing system for food.

Moreover, the Sandinista Party controls the military. The military is backed up with millions of dollars in Soviet military assistance, with deliveries escalating in recent months. The ordinary Nicaraguan citizen cannot ignore the overwhelming presence of the Communist military system, and cannot believe that even if the Sandinistas were to lose the election, a new government would ever take power. The Nicarguans know that it would not be healthy to vote against all that power, no matter what their real feelings.

So the third question is whether or not this election will help establsh democracy. Here we have to look at the incompetency of the State Department again. The so-called unified Nicaraguan opposition, is really a group of widely differing parties cobbled together by CIA threats and pressures.

The most prominent of the parties in UNO—originally 14, now 13—are the two Communist parties of Nicaragua. The Communist Party of Nicaragua, so-called, is a straight Marxist-Leninist party trained and supported in Moscow. The Socialist Party of Nicaragua, is also a Communist Party whose leader was trained in Moscow. The two parties work together as a coalition. They are the best trained, most experienced, best organized, and most able of the so-called opposition parties.

The next group of eight or nine parties might best be described as Sandinista front groups. It is hard to distinguish their left-of-center ideology from the ideology of the Sandinista Party. They represent Sandinista-ism without clout.

Then there are three or four moderate parties, with little experience or organization, which represent a political philosophy that might be acceptable to American voters. There are also parties outside the coalition.

The candidates of UNO have virtually no chance of obtaining broad support. Mrs. Chamorro, from all accounts, is a nice lady, but not politically active or particularly knowledgeable. The Vice President, Vergilo Godoy, was the labor minister in the Sandinista government until a few months ago. He was responsible for destroying the free labor movement in Nicaragua opposed to the Sandinista government. He has never repudiated Sandinista ideology. Would anyone seeking freedom vote for either of the candidates?

Nicaragua voters, therefore, have the choice of the Sandinista Party on the one hand, and the United States-backed Communist Party on the other. They have the choice of the Sandinistas with clout, or the pseudo-Sandinistas who are bound to lose.

Anyone who wants American taxpayers' money to go to support the Communist Party of Nicaragua, should support this bill. That's what it is all about.

Mr. President, the U.S. Congress should let the world see the Sandinistas for what they really are. The coming elections in Nicaragua are already a fraud, and I, for one, do not want to take part in legitimizing this sham. The elections amount to a figleaf of democracy for a totalitarian power. The elections present the people of Nicaragua with no real choices. The average citizen will see that the Sandinistas control the military, the secret police, the block wardens, the party organization, the labor unions, the economy, the ration books, and all hopes of career advancement. Their choice is between the Sandinistas on the one hand—and a coalition of Communists and former Sandinistas on the other. Mr. President, why should American taxpayers be forced to finance either side.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 19, 1989]

UNITED STATES SAYS EAST BLOC INCREASES ARMS SHIPMENTS TO NICARAGUA

(By David B. Ottaway)

The State Department charged yesterday that the level of East-bloc arms being transshipped through Cuba to Nicaragua has "increased dramatically" this year, despite a Soviet pledge to end its own shipments and the end of U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan contras.

"It is inexplicable to us why the East bloc feels that it must provide Nicaragua with even more weapons while a cease-fire is in effect than it provided the Nicaraguans when they were actively engaged with contra forces," said State Department spokesman Margaret Tutwiler.

President Bush, at a news conference in Montana yesterday, also criticized the Soviet Union for allowing East-bloc nations to continue shipping arms to Nicaragua.

"That's not very good, and it's not a very kind and gentle approach to this hemisphere," Bush said.

The charges came as U.S. and Soviet regional specialists began talks here in preparations for the meeting on Friday and Saturday of Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Wyoming.

Tutwiler indicated that continuing Soviet-bloc arms shipments to Nicaragua will be high on the U.S. agenda of regional issues Baker will take up with Shevardnadze. The Soviet foreign minister, in turn, is expected to have the continued provision of U.S. arms to the Afghan resistance high on his agenda.

Tutwiler said the "basic pattern" in recent years has been the shipment of Soviet arms from various East-bloc nations to Cuba and from there onward to Nicaragua.

"This year the weapons [transshipment] out of Cuba has increased dramatically," she said, and was "well beyond the legitimate defensive needs of Nicaragua."

By later yesterday afternoon, however, the only figure on East-bloc arms shipments made available by department officials was a $350 million estimate for 12,000 tons during the first eight months of this year; this compares with 19,000 tons valued at $515 million for all of 1988.

Thus, it was not immediately clear whether the $350 million estimate for the first eight months of this year was higher, lower or about the same as the same period last year.

Tutwiler said at another point that the total tonnage of Soviet-bloc arms shipments to Nicaragua "appears somewhat higher than for a comparable period last year."

She also refused to comment on a Washington Times report yesterday that U.S. intelligence agencies had spotted three Soviet torpedo patrol boats and four M-124 Hind helicopters being loaded on a Nicaraguan ship in a Cuban port last week.

Asked whether the administration believes Moscow has abided by its commitment to end direct arms shipment to Nicaragua, Tutwiler said the Soviets "have told us they are not" sending weapons, adding "this is something that we have stated on the record that we accept."

Tutwiler also charged that both Cuba and Nicaragua were continuing to supply Soviet-bloc arms to the insurgency in El Salvador in violation of several recent Central America peace accords and despite an appeal from Central America leaders for a halt to outside weapons supply.

But she offered no estimate of the quantities or kinds of arms being provided from those two nations to the Salvadoran rebels.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEAHY. How much time remains under the control of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin and under my control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has 25 minutes and 30 seconds; the Senator from Vermont, 5 minutes and 9 seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. We are going to yield back the remainder of the time, but I see the distinguished Senator from Florida. Does he wish to speak on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida requests from the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from North Carolina, managing the time, he be yielded 10 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Yes, of course. The Senator desires 10 minutes did he say?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we are debating today a very modest package of support for the democratic process in Nicaragua. If this debate were to allocate time among all the competing positions and perspectives, a substantal amount of time should be allocated to those who would argue that the question today should be whether what we are doing is enough in order to have an impact on the final result and whether we may be suffering the consequences of being coopted into this process by providing too little too late, but with an imprint of our support for this process.

The comments that I am going to make today are in the context that I would be in that camp, with my greatest concern being on the timidity and modesty of our approach rather than its excess.

But our decision on this bill today can be a significant part in determining whether the February elections in Nicaragua have a chance to be free, fair, and open, a significant part of determining whether the democratic opposition will stand any chance against an entrenched government.

All of us in this body have had experience in politics or we would not be here. All of us know that the Nicaraguan democratic opposition is playing against a stacked deck. The Sandinistas come into this election with an overwhelming number of advantages. After 10 years in power they control all the levers in this election.

Think, in your own political circumstances, if you were running against a candidate who for 10 years had had total control of the state-owned machinery of government, under a Constitution in which the party in the government are all interwoven with control over most of the means of communication, and now with weeks left before the election you are given a slim opportunity to become a participant in the election.

That is why Members such as myself have long urged that we should have maintained the Nicaraguan resistance as a viable point of leverage to give some assurance of fairness and equity in the election process in Nicaragua.

But we have opted instead to refocus our total efforts on these elections. I have reservations about supporting the process at a time when it is entirely premature to say whether it is going to be fair.

We already are late in addressing the issue of fairness. Two of the four Sundays that have been set aside for registration have already passed. The chances of this money having any impact on the remaining 2 Sundays is slim to none, even if we approve this package immediately.

The least we can do, however, is to act as quickly as possible. I congratulate the chairman and members of the Appropriations Committee for moving this morning to give us an opportunity to debate this bill on the floor.

This proposal of support will help us to aid the democratic process through the National Endowment for Democracy [NED]. NED was established by the Congress for exactly the purposes that they will be called upon under this legislation. Indeed, Congress has supported similar NED efforts in South Africa, Chile, Poland, and Paraguay. And in a way that is entirely consistent not only with our law but with the laws of each of those countries, and it will be so in Nicaragua.

Indeed, as we were told by former President Jimmy Carter when he visited the capital recently, Daniel Ortega says he has no problem with the United States providing support in the form called for in this legislation as long as it is consistent with Nicaraguan law, which it is.

European and Latin American countries donated several million dollars in equipment and training toward the $25 million estimated to be the cost of operating the election. The democratic opposition wants and needs this money and has said so publicly.

We are not forcing this money upon the opposition candidates. They are requesting this support as a critical part of our ability to sustain some competitive position in the February election.

The opposition knows that they need help if they are to stand half a chance against a totalitarian government that controls everything. Just two examples, Mr. President.

The Sandinistas command television in Nicaragua. They have been running numerous ads on channel 6. The opposition gets 10 minutes twice a week on channel 2, the other state-owned station which has a signal so weak that it is rarely viewed even in Managua.

Another example: The August accords signed between the Sandinistas and the opposition forbids using government buildings for campaigning. But the Sandinistas' recent nominating convention took place in the state-owned arena and was given gavel-to-gavel coverage on state television.

Those are examples of the type of control that the opposition is up against.

It is inexplicable to me why we, the United States of America, cannot support a democratic process in Nicaragua. What will this money go for? Let me reemphasize. It will go to support NED activities that we have already supported in Poland, Chile, Paraguay, and elsewhere. The money will be spent on party building, poll watching, public outreach, civic outreach, on how, when, and where to vote. It will support a national monitoring network including an establishment of a parallel vote count. It will support the purchase of office equipment and vehicles.

Let me also point out that this bill is not $9 million for UNO, the opposition. It includes nearly $3 million that may have to be paid to the Supreme Electoral Council for purposes of operating the election process. It includes more than $1 million for observers and training efforts by Americans and Costa Ricans.

Only $5 million will be for direct grants to political alliances, labor, media, business, and civic and professional groups. Only a portion of that $5 million will go to the National Opposition Union.

As with all NED programs, there are abundant safeguards and accountability. AID must report to the Congress before funds are obligated. All grants must be approved by NED's board of directors which includes distinguished Americans, such as Charles Manatt, DANTE FASCELL, and Lane Kirkland.

Any funds through the National Institute for International Affairs must be approved by the board of directors, which includes Walter Mondale, Paul Kirk, JOHN LEWIS, and Geraldine Ferraro.

I believe we can trust these Americans to make the right decision on how the money will be spent. They have participated in elections. They know a fair election when they see one. And they will know an unfair election should they see one.

In making their decisions they will follow the NED charter which will prohibit funds for campaign staff or for the purchase of television and radio time for UNO or for campaign paraphernalia.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to quickly approve this program. As modest as it is, it is the best that we have available to us to influence this election toward a positive democratic conclusion.

But in so doing, let us not lose sight of two other larger issues. Within the region of Central America, we need to understand that this election is part of what should be a comprehensive United States policy. That policy must include elements for economic incentives. It must include elements for debt relief. It must include helping develop the next generation of leadership through educational assistance, scholarships, and other forms of aid.

For too long, in the region of Central America, the United States, Mr. President, has seen our policy as being strictly reacting. We now must shift to a policy that underscores our long-term, our sustained interest and commitment to this region and which recognizes the diversity of interest that we must be prepared to support and influence if our own interests are to be properly advanced.

Second, Mr. President, there is even a larger picture than Central America and our future relationship there. On the world stage, we are seeing a change in what constitutes global competition. For almost half a century, competition has been defined in largely military terms, East versus West, the United States versus the Soviet Union. That has been the context in which much of the last decade in Nicaragua has been fought out.

Today, the competition is beginning to shift. Whether it is in Managua, or whether it is in Warsaw or Berlin or Budapest, increasingly the competition is going to be focused on the specifics of an individual nation and the region in which that nation lies. It is going to be focused less on military confrontation and more on the political and diplomatic and economic context.

Mr. President, I believe that we as Americans should take great pride and comfort in that shift because on those grounds the United States is fighting from a stage in which it has the most advanced position, in which we have the greatest confidence in our values and our goals and objectives and the greatest assurance that those values, goals, and objectives are shared by men and women around the world who seek to have a better life in a democratic society.

It would be ironic if, after hundreds of millions of dollars had been poured into Nicaragua by the Soviet Union and its surrogates, and smaller amounts by the United States, that now, at the time we are about to see a shift from the military to a democratic resolution for the future of Nicaragua, that we should be timid.

Mr. President, I urge that we avoid that timidity, that we quickly move on this legislation, and that we use this as an important building block toward a sustained United States policy in Central America and a sustained United States judgment to support democracy around the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). The Senator from Wisconsin has remaining 13 minutes, and the Senator from Vermont, 4 minutes and 48 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and I ask that it not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we have heard a lot of debate on the subject and I would be willing to support a reasonable amount of money to help neutral, nonpartisan observers guarantee the fairness of the election process but I will not be party to an attempt to buy the outcome of a freely contested election. Thinly veiled attempts by the administration to disguise its true purpose should be rejected by the Congress.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on the quorum be divided equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. May I ask how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina controls 11 minutes, and the Senator from Vermont controls 3 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, wants to make a statement. I do not want the time to run out before he can get here. In common courtesy to him, I ask that the quorum call I am about to request not be charged to either side.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I will not, of course; I understood 20 to 30 minutes ago the distinguished Republican leader would be here in a minute. Would he in any way have his rights jeopardized if, because the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is filling in for the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, we on both sides were to yield back the remainder of our time, go into a quorum and the leader would still have his leadership time which he could use to talk about this matter? We are not going to vote on this matter today or for several days.

I wonder if that might be a way to free up several Senators and several staff who have been waiting for the last half hour for that 1-minute time.

Mr. HELMS. The distinguished Senator from Vermont would understand that I want to check with my leader.

Mr. LEAHY. I understand.

Mr. HELMS. Suppose we let the quorum call go and the time not being charged and I will check and see if I can encourage him to come to the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum on the basis I just stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. If we yield back the remainder of our time, at that point what would be the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Wisconsin were to yield back all of his time, the majority leader would then be in a position to file a cloture motion and, after that, we would then go to reconciliation.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, further parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator will yield. If we were in a quorum call, of course, nothing would happen?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a cloture petition to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on H.R. 3385, an act to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua. Signed by 18 Senators as follows:

George J. Mitchell, Bob Kerrey, Harry Reid, Bob Dole, John H. Chafee, Bob Kasten, Terry Sanford, T. Daschle, Dennis DeConcini, Frank R. Lautenberg, Connie Mack, Richard G. Lugar, John Heinz, Mitch McConnell, Bill Cohen, Al Simpson, Bill Armstrong, Lloyd Bentsen.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that under the previous order, the reconciliation bill is now the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Under the previous order the clerk will now report the reconciliation bill.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1750) entitled The "Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1989."

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

RECESS UNTIL 2:30 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 2:30, and that the time during the recess be counted against the 20 hours of debate under the reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none. It is so ordered. The Senate stands in recess until 2:30.

Whereupon, at 2:01 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:31 p.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending business is the reconciliation measure, S. 1750.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, today we begin consideration of the 1990 reconciliation bill. The measure was favorably reported to the Senate floor by the Budget Committee this morning, and I think it is fair to say—it is a radical understatement to say that this is of the essence here today, because if we do not finish our work on the reconciliation bill by Monday evening at 11:59 we will trigger a sequester of the Federal budget under the terms of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

The simple truth of the matter is that following a week of strenuous efforts to get a clean reconciliation vehicle that might in fact be acted upon quickly, we find ourselves facing a drop-dead date with no consensus, and no way of avoiding a contentious capital gains debate.

In short, we are here today under a very high probability that sequester cannot be avoided.

It really did not have to be this way. In fact, I doubt that any Senator on this floor today, given the budget resolution that we passed last spring, would have predicted then that we would face sequester here this October. I remind my colleagues that at that time Senator after Senator took the floor of this body to offer the view the bipartisan budget agreement simply did too little. It did not reduce the deficit enough; we were not being truly serious about this country's fiscal crisis.

Now, some 4 days from sequester, with much of the bipartisan agreement in rubble about us, we have to ask ourselves: How did this happen? Why do we find ourselves here, at the 11th hour, in danger of failing to implement the very modest, and I emphasize very modest budget resolution that we passed this year—earlier, in fact, than we passed any budget resolution in recent memory? I daresay it was earlier than we passed any budget resolution in the decade of the 1980's.

Mr. President, I submit the answer to that question speaks volumes about the difficulty we have had dealing with this Nation's fiscal responsibility during the decade of the 1980's. Certainly there are going to be charges and recriminations for some time if we end up with a sequester. I submit the American people could not care less about those charges or recriminations or finger-pointing.

As I said a week ago on the floor of this Chamber, a fundamental obligation of government is to establish order in human affairs. That really, essentially, is what government is all about. And if we have a sequester, then we have chaos. And the American people will know who is responsible.

The plain fact is this year's budgetary failure is a continuation of a conflict that has plagued us for the better part of a decade. Once again, the executive branch of this Government has insisted, in the view of this Senator, on subordinating the Nation's fiscal stability to an economic philosophy that holds that tax cuts will still work somehow to raise enough revenues sufficient to reduce the deficit. Once again, we have the threat of budgetary gridlock because that perverse economic philosophy keeps getting substituted for serious deficit reduction.

Since 1981, we have been dealing with the debris and ash of the supply side experiment. Many of us had hoped to put that sorry period behind us. That was one of the primary reasons for the bipartisan budget agreement that was solidly entered into between the administration and the leadership on both sides of the aisle in this Congress. But this year, the same issues have slowly, destructively, invaded the budget debate.

Mr. President, I spoke a moment ago about the problems dating back to 1981 and the dust and debris of the supply side experiment. I call to my colleagues' attention now a study put forward by the Office of Management and Budget dated January 19, 1988, which indicates that during the period from 1981 through fiscal 1989, the so-called Economic Recovery Act of 1981, the Kemp-Roth tax cut, has deprived this Government of $1.441 trillion in revenues; $1.441 trillion in revenues, from 1982 through fiscal 1989.

What have we been engaged in during that period? Trying to come in with nickel and dime efforts to stem this hemorrhage in revenues. If we add up all of the revenues this Government raised since that time, including the surplus building up in Social Security, we still have a net loss, including interest, from 1982 through 1989, as a result of the Economic Recovery Act of 1981, of $1.190 trillion. That, I say to my colleagues, is the germ of the gargantuan budget deficits this Government of the United States has run up during the decade of the 1980's.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this document from the Office of Management and Budget be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, a former Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Dave Stockman, participated in the drafting of the Economic Recovery Act of 1981, once called the supply side experiment, a Trojan horse. I submit that this year's edition, the capital gains gambit, is a Trojan pony, with the same forces hiding inside and the same consequences for the Treasury looming in the future. I know others will disagree.

I believe very strongly that we have acted with dispatch to pass our appropriations bills and to meet our reconciliation deadline, and we could have done so if the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate had not been thrown at the 11th hour into a contentious capital gains debate during the reconciliation process.

The reconciliation process is difficult enough without having something as contentious and divisive as capital gains superimposed upon it at the 11th hour. Even as late as last week, we had a chance to move quickly on a lean bill, the kind of bill that has been endorsed by the leadership of both parties in both the U.S. Senate and in the House of Representatives.

But, alas, the administration has simply been unwilling to debate the capital gains issue in a reasonable context without the protections of the budget reconciliation bill or some other privileged vehicle.

I submit, Mr. President, that such a fundamental change in the 1986 Tax Reform Act, which many of my colleagues are so proud of, should not be changed on a highly privileged vehicle which limits debate.

Unfortunately, we now face extended debate in this body on capital gains, with the likelihood of continued controversy in conference over capital gains and many other provisions, I might add, that are deemed extraneous. But, Mr. President, we can still act to minimize that contentiousness. Along with the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, I will be moving later on during this process to strip extraneous matter from this bill before us. I am hopeful that we can reach quick agreement on what is to go and what is to stay, but I am also hopeful that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will see the virtue of holding our debate on this bill down to the bare necessities.

The components of the bill have been reported by the respective committees of jurisdiction. The Budget Committee has determined that these respective components are in compliance with the reconciliation instructions incorporated into the budget resolution earlier this year.

I submit there is simply no good reason for extended debate with sequester on October 16 staring us in the face. The issue before us this afternoon is meeting the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets. The issue before this body is reducing the deficit. That is the reason for a budget reconciliation bill.

The issue before us, I submit to my colleagues, is not the relative merits of a capital gains tax or the relative merits of countless other extraneous matters that have been attached to this reconciliation bill. We simply must act as expeditiously as we possibly can, either to avoid a sequester outright, which I know will be difficult, which some say is impossible at this stage of the game, or to mitigate the negative impact of a sequester as much as possible. The longer that we delay, the more threatening the situation becomes.

I do not agree with those who are saying that the October deadline is merely tactical, that we can easily undo the damage of an additional sequester order. The fact is that we have not been able, through an entire budget cycle, to resolve the issues that have created this paralysis that brings us here on the eve of sequester. I submit that the conflicts will not be easier to resolve after we pass the deadline date.

In fact, we all know that deadline dates are typically the only mechanisms that we seem to have for imposing discipline these days. I ask my colleagues, what external constraint can we rely on after October 16?

As most of us know, there have already been some negative consequences of the stall in the reconciliation process. Several mandatory programs have already begun withholding funds, among them the Guaranteed Student Loan Program and the Commodities Credit Corporation disaster funds.

Admittedly, damage is relatively slight in dollar terms and could, indeed, be quickly mitigated. But before we start minimizing the dangers posed by missing the October 16 deadline, I urge every Senator to consider what can happen if we find ourselves in continued deadlock in the conference.

I do not suppose that many Americans understand what a sequester really is, but on Tuesday morning some of them are going to find out. These are some of the consequences, as stated in the Office of Management and Budget report dated August 21, 1989, if sequester occurs:

For the Defense Department: The Defense sequester, if carried through to a conclusion, could result in the reduction of active-duty military personnel of 160,000 men and women, roughly equivalent to the combined manpower of one Army division, 25 naval vessels, and two Air Force wings. A sequester would cripple our war against drugs. We could have an immediate personnel freeze in the Drug Enforcement Agency; no new drug enforcement agents to carry out the war on drugs or to enlarge it because of sequester. State and local drug task force programs would be severely reduced, and the purchases of the sophisticated anticrime equipment, such as the sophisticated radio equipment and other secure communications that the police forces and others who are engaged in this war against the insidious drug threat, would be affected.

We have stated in this country that we want to improve the quality of education for our young people, and in the campaigns of last year, President Bush indicated that he wanted to be the education President. I applaud that desire, but a sequester could reduce budget authority for Pell grants by $4.4 billion, depriving countless thousands of young Americans the chance for a college education. It will eliminate Pell grants for 1 million students and reduce them for another 500,000.

Finally, a sequester could result in some 35 million Americans receiving a 2-percent cut in their Medicare benefits, a cut, I remind my colleagues, that would occur precisely at a time when we have been striving manfully to reduce what some consider to be the onerous burden of the catastrophic surtax.

Admittedly, Mr. President, this is a worst-case scenario. But, frankly, I believe we would be foolhardy not to keep that bleak picture in the forefront of our minds as we proceed today, because I want to say to my colleagues we cannot say for an absolute certainty today that the worst case will not become a reality. Indeed, there are some among us today who believe that it is in the best interest of the country that we take the bitter consequences of sequester, and, frankly, they can make an eloquent and sometimes persuasive case in that regard.

But I ask my colleagues, is a continued capital gains debate really worth risking these kinds of dire consequences? Do we really want these extraneous provisions on the budget reconciliation that badly? Do we really want to wager our national security, our war on drugs, our pursuit of a better education system, the health care system for the elderly, do we really want to wager the stability of those programs when the only tangible gain that this Senator can see is a tax cut for a very small percentage of Americans?

My answer would be a clear and unequivocal no. I would add that many other provisions which might well be worthy in some other contest pale to insignificance next to the potential results of unnecessary delay.

So I urge my colleagues again, we must keep our focus on the objectives of the reconciliation process. We must work toward a quick passage of a bill that meets the reconciliation targets and put off all extraneous debate to another day.

The 1990 reconciliation bill provides some $14.1 billion in deficit reduction. Many of my colleagues said this spring, "That's not enough. That's a drop in the bucket." But I say to them, it is a reduction in the Federal deficit of some $14.1 billion. All eight of our committees in the Senate have met their instructions, and I commend the chairmen of the eight committees and the ranking members for the diligent work they have done, and the staffs that have assisted them in making these very difficult decisions.

The bill provides for some $5.6 billion in revenues, the figure that was agreed upon at the bipartisan summit.

I might say categorically, Mr. President, there has been some conversation that capital gains was one of the revenue measures that was agreed upon in the bipartisan summit. If that is the case, it certainly escaped the attention of this participant in that summit. It certainly escaped the attention of the Speaker of the House, Mr. THOMAS FOLEY. It certainly escaped the attention of Mr. LEON PANETTA, the chairman of the House Budget Committee, because we were of the opinion the agreement was that the $5.6 billion in additional revenues would be raised in a way that was mutually agreeable with both the administration and the leadership of the Congress and the chairmen of the respective tax-writing committees.

The bill contains $3.1 billion in spending restraint in the Medicare Program. The remaining $5.8 billion in spending reductions is allocated among the other seven authorizing committees that were given reconciliation targets. Five of those committees met their targets before the August recess. The Budget Committee has attempted to observe, as much as possible, the various jurisdictions of the Senate committees. All of those committees, with the exception of Finance and Governmental Affairs, were given unspecified reconciliation instructions. In turn, these committees have met their responsibilities. For example, the Banking Committee extended the current national flood insurance program. The Commerce Committee imposed some $460 million in user fees that came under their jurisdiction. The Veterans' Committee extended the provisions under the current law for veterans' housing loan fees and vendee loan sales.

Mr. President, I think it is worthy to note that the Senate Finance Committee deserves special mention. Under the able leadership of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], and in a long and arduous session, the committee developed their $5.3 billion revenue package and also met their Medicare spending reductions of some $3.1 billion.

With that capsule summary, Mr. President, I offer the work product of many of my colleagues in the Senate and their staffs who have diligently and conscientiously, I believe, weighed the difficult policy decisions involved in bringing together this year's reconciliation bill.

As we said at the time we were negotiating the budget resolution, perhaps this is a very modest deficit reduction package. Indeed, there is no doubt about that. Clearly, it does not boldly address the deficit problem. We all knew that going in. But we know that the deficit problem appears to have drifted out from under the spotlight of public scrutiny in recent days, even as the number for next year with regard to deficit reduction has become more and more imposing.

Some have said this has been a year of gimmickry and shell games, of off-budget entities, shifted pay dates, rosy assumptions, and perhaps they are right. But the simple fact remains that we have before us today a package that constrains spending, a package that reduces the deficit. It was the package that was agreed to in the spring by a bipartisan negotiating team, a package that was agreed to by the leadersip of the House of Representatives, by the leadership of the Senate, and by the President of the United States.

I well remember that day we all went down to the White House to announce this agreement. I remember going out into the Rose Garden, Mr. President—beautiful spring weather. We thought this initiated a new era of good feeling between the Congress and the Executive, an era of good feeling that was going to bring an end to nearly a decade of bitter partisan debate, and this Senator thought, nearly a decade of irresponsible budgetary priorities.

As I stand here today, all that early promise is largely cinder and ash, but we nonetheless have the opportunity to meet our responsibilities, to do our duty as is presented to us today to pass this bill, and to move toward rapid action in conference.

I say to my colleagues that the bottom line is very simple: We owe the American people something better than governmental deadlock over irrelevancies.

I say to my colleague that he simply must keep the footnote here from displacing the full text. We have to prevent the tail from wagging the dog.

We will work together to try to eliminate the elements that are clearly extraneous under our rules. The capital gains threatens to freeze us altogether. In my view, capital gains is not deficit reduction. It is deficit addition.

The Joint Tax Committee estimates that the Jenkins-Bush capital gains tax cut will begin losing substantial sums of revenue in fiscal 1994. By the end of the decade, it will add some $21.5 billion to the Federal deficit. Surely that has no business on a budget reconciliation bill that should be presented for the sole purpose of deficit reduction. That loss from capital gains will offset every dime of deficit reduction that is contained in this bill. If we add the Jenkins-Bush capital gains component, we will be undoing every positive thing we have been able to do during the whole budget process this year.

Let me restate that so there will be no misunderstanding: If the capital gains proposal that was presented in the House of Representatives prevails this year, we will not have made a single penny's worth of progress against the Federal deficit. All of our work will have been for naught. That I believe states the alternative very clearly. Deficit reduction, or do we burden it down with the tax break for those who need it least? We cannot afford to deal with both the deficit reduction and capital gains on the same reconciliation legislative vehicle.

So we must act quickly. We must act quickly on this bill if we are to fulfill our duty to the American people.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I will defer now.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Budget Committee sent reconciliation instructions to eight committees. All of these committees met their numerical targets. That is the good news.

I regret to report to the Chair that those same committees gave us back a lot more than we asked for. Quite frankly, there are numerous extraneous materials in this bill that in my view have no place in a deficit reduction bill. Inasmuch as I personally approve of many of these provisions as worthy, as many of these provisions are, they have no place on a reconciliation bill.

I will demonstrate to my colleagues how these extraneous provisions have weighed down this reconciliation bill. Indeed, one of my colleagues joked today that he was going to send his pickup truck over to the Budget Committee office to pick up the reconciliation bill because it was so laid down with extraneous matters.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SASSER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. How large would the bill be if it really dealt only with genuine reconciliation matters? We have this enormous bill here. Here it is. What is it; how many pages? Does the Senator know?

Mr. SASSER. I think it is about 1,000 pages.

Mr. SARBANES. If we just did what we are supposed to do, narrowly defined, how big would this bill be?

Mr. SASSER. This reconciliation bill, as presented, consists of 1,376 pages. If this reconciliation bill was concerned solely with reconciliation matters soley with deficit reduction, it would be approximately 100 pages in length. So you can see the extent of the extraneous material in here.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I along with the distinguished President pro tempore, Mr. BYRD, and I hope with my colleagues across the aisle—and I have reason to hope they will cooperate with us—will offer a point of order to strip the material which is extraneous under the Byrd rule. In my view, we have simply to return to the budget process and to the reconciliation bill its original purpose; that is, to reduce the deficit.

If I may be permitted to comment, Mr. President, at the rate we are moving here in this body, it will soon be that every piece of legislation moves on either the budget reconciliation bill or the debt limit. I submit that we are perverting the legislative process by doing that, and certainly we are perverting the Budget Act and the reconciliation process.

Mr. President, before yielding to the distinguished Senator from Colorado, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate permit the presence of small electronic calculators on the floor of the Senate during the consideration of the reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time by which Senate committees be required to submit their reconciliation recommendations to the Committee on the Budget pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget, House Concurrent Resolution 106, be changed to 5 o'clock in the afternoon on Wednesday, October 11.

Mr. ARMSTRONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I withhold that unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws his request.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the staff of the Committee on the Budget and its members be allowed to remain on the floor during consideration of the reconciliation bill, and I send to the desk a list of these staff members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, materials submitted by the reconciled committees were unveiled yesterday for insertion in the RECORD. We now have those materials. I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, United States Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter and the attachments constitute the submission of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry to meet its reconciliation instruction under H. Con. Res. 106. The Committee met on September 14, 1989 and unanimously approved its submission. Our recommended changes are highlighted in the attachments.

Our reconciliation submission meets the Agriculture Committee's instruction as set for H. Con. Res. 106. Outlays are reduced by $1.0255 billion in Fiscal Year 1990 as scored by the Congressional Budget Office. These reconciliation proposals help to reduce this year's deficit, prevent future farm program spending from accelerating and maintain the basic principles of the 1985 Food Security Act.

We look forward to working with you to insure the adoption of the Committee's legislative proposals as part of the reconciliation bill.

Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman.
RICHARD LUGAR,
Ranking Minority Member.

Title I—Agriculture

BRIEF EXPLANATION

H. Con. Res. 106 provided budget reconciliation instructions to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry. These instructions required fiscal year 1990 savings totaling $1.100 billion in budget authority and $1.025 billion in outlays from the level of spending expected as of January 1989. The Committee has met those targets.

This title provides for legislative changes recommended by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry in order to achieve the required budgetary savings. These changes are in four main farm program areas: direct payments to support farm income, additional planting flexibility for oilseeds and oats, acreage reduction program for cotton, and other minor adjustments in the implementation of the production adjustment programs.

This title also contains mandated limits on expenditures under two export assistance programs and contains other modifications to current agricultural trade programs. The title provides for the prepayment of, and interest rate adjustments to, federal financing bank loans made to rural electrification and telephone systems. Research into new commercial products from natural plant materials is authorized. The Farm Credit System Financial Assistance Corporation's funding mechanism would be amended. The title also provides for risk-based reductions in insurance premiums paid to the Farm Credit System Insurance Corporation.

This title also provides for the implementation and modification of several commodity marketing and promotion programs.

In total, the legislative changes incorporated in this title are projected to reduce outlays in fiscal year 1990 by $1.025 billion, thereby meeting the Committee's reconciliation instructions. A short list of the items contained in the bill follows.

LIST OF RECONCILIATION ITEMS

	Millions
1. "Sequester" of advance deficiency payments	$232
2. S. 553—Adjustment of butter/powder prices (P.L. 101-7)	25
3. Further adjustment of butter/powder prices	20
4. Mandate flexible planting provisions for oilseeds as included in Disaster Assistance Act of 1988	116

	Millions
5. Provide Secretary discretion to increase the maximum Cotton ARP by 5% if stocks are projected above 7 million bales	45
6. Reduce EEP by $150 million	108
7. Reduce TEA funding by $100 million	40
8. REA interest rate adjustment penalty	30
9. Various commodity promotion and programs funded through checkoffs and amendments to market orders (cost)	0.5
10. Earmark of EEP funds to offset European meat subsidies at U.S. commissaries in Europe.	None
11. Amend the cost-savings provisions of the 1985 farm bill	None
12. Delay the effective date of Bumpers-Pryor amendment until October 1, 1992, and provide annual interest payments	420
13. Provide the Secretary with the ability to offer no set-aside program for oats without building base	None
14. Prohibit both duty drawback and export promotion assistance on commodity exports	None
15. Authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct research in new products developed from natural plant materials	None
16. Modify procedures for calculating Farm Credit System insurance premiums (cost)	2

BACKGROUND

A HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

The major changes in government outlays on agriculture over the past are due in large part to the commodity programs. Commodity program outlays change due to several factors. In the short run, fluctuations in market prices are the major source of change. Over the long run however, policy actions on income and price support levels, stock management and export competitiveness determine overall budget exposure. Outlays for commodity programs peaked in fiscal year 1986 at $25.8 billion. Since then, outlays for function 350 have fallen significantly as displayed in figure 1.

[Charts not reproducible in the RECORD.]

In fiscal year 1988, commodity program outlays totaled $12.0 billion, a decline of more than 50%. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimates outlays to increase slightly in fiscal year 1989 to $12.6 billion. In its January budget estimates, CBO projected fiscal year 1990 outlays for agriculture of $9.8 billion.

Much of the reduction in outlays was caused by policies embodied in the Food Security Act of 1985 (the "1985 Act") and by actions taken by the Agriculture Committees in past reconciliation legislation. Some of the reduction in outlays since fiscal year 1986 for agriculture are due to the meteorological disasters of 1988 and 1989. These emergencies sharply reduced government and free stocks of most grains and fibers. The decline in stocks strengthened prices, thereby reducing the level of direct income support provided by the federal government.

Target prices will decline under the 1985 Act by 10 percent for the 1985 through 1990 crops. This 10% decline in target prices has reduced potential budget exposure by nearly $4.6 billion.

In September 1987, stocks carried over from earlier crops totaled more than 8 months of corn use. As recently as September 1988, corn stocks totaled 4,259 million bushels—over six months of use. Since that time, large acreage reduction programs, aggressive use of commodity certificates to market grain, and adverse weather have reduced corn and wheat stocks substantially.

Over the life of the 1985 Act, over 300 million acres will be idled under various production control and conservation programs. In many cases, idling this land translates into a direct reduction in producer income. Since producers' fixed production costs do not decline and consequently must be allocated among fewer units of production, per-bushel production costs rise whenever acreage reduction programs are in effect.

The budgetary effects of production controls are substantial. The August 1987 CBO baseline for corn estimated farm prices of $1.58 per bushel for the 1991 crop. The August 1989 CBO baseline estimates 1991 corn prices at $1.99 per bushel. As prices are strengthened, agricultural outlays are reduced. A ten cent rise in the price of corn reduces federal outlays by roughly $550 million.

A similar but even more dramatic comparison can be made in the case of wheat. The difference between the August 1987 and the August 1988 CBO baseline projections for wheat prices is over $1.00 per bushel. Every ten cent rise in wheat prices translates to outlay reduction of more than $175 million.

The export promotion programs and aggressive pricing policies contained in the 1985 Act have also contributed to deficit reduction. Since fiscal year 1986, the value of agricultural exports has increased 50 percent, partly because of those promotion programs and partly because of other factors, such as currency fluctuations and production shortfalls in other countries.

THE LONG TERM VIEW

Agriculture, as has been pointed out in several of the past views and estimates submitted by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry to the Budget Committee, is a long term industry.

Investments made by producers extend over several years. Producers need a sound basis for expected revenues when making those decisions. The target prices in the 1985 Act helped provide that basis.

The stock management initiatives contained in the 1985 Act were also long-term measures. Reducing corn stocks to manageable levels in a single year, such as in 1987, would have required idling nearly half of all acreage previously planted to corn. The proper management of stock levels is obviously a long term proposition.

Export markets also take time to develop. Producers in other countries act and make investments that result in strong, lasting competition. Consumer demand overseas is also developed over a number of years through product promotion, consumer education, and availability of dependable supplies. Furthermore, it takes several years to complete trade negotiations and to implement any decisions made.

Whether the concern is the level of U.S. agricultural income, depressed commodity prices, or the trade balance, forcing short-run changes on agriculture can be counterproductive.

BUDGET CONCERNS FOR THE FUTURE

In the past, both CBO and the Office of Management and Budget have assumed that target prices, incorporated in the 1985 Act, would continue to decline beyond the life of that Act. In December of 1988 and early 1989, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry and the Budget Committee, determined that an assumption of continued target price declines was not consistent with the 1985 Act. The August baseline, developed by CBO assumes target prices frozen at 1990 crop year levels for fiscal years 1991 through 1995. It is the opinion of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry that this is the correct assumption for long-term budget planning.

PURPOSE AND NEED

SUBTITLE A.—AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY PROGRAMS

Subtitle A contains amendments to agricultural commodity programs, including a reduction in direct payments to support farm income, additional planting flexibility for oilseeds and oats, a change in the acreage reduction program for the 1990 crop of cotton, and other minor adjustments in the implementation of the production adjustment programs.

A brief discussion of those provisions follows.

Cotton acreage reduction program

This section would amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, if cotton stocks are projected to exceed 7 million bales as of July 31, 1991, to establish a maximum acreage limitation program of 30 percent for the 1990 crop of upland cotton. Current law provides for a maximum acreage limitation percentage for the 1990 crop of 25 percent.

By providing the Secretary of Agriculture this additional flexibility to respond to an oversupply of upland cotton, the bill would decrease expenditures $45 million dollars in fiscal year 1990 from the January 1989 baseline.

Feed grain acreage limitation program

Currently, the Secretary establishes an acreage reduction program for a crop of feed grains based on an estimate of the stocks of all feed grains. The Agricultural Act of 1949 does not provide the Secretary with great discretion in establishing different acreage limitation percentages for corn and barley, for example.

However, due to a shortage of oats, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 provided that the Secretary could not establish an acreage reduction percentage for oats of more than 5 percent for the 1988 through 1990 crops, although the Secretary may waive this ceiling for the 1990 crop if stocks of oats are excessive.

Projections of the supply of oats during 1990 indicate that the United States is still not producing enough oats to meet domestic demand. There are several reasons for this shortfall, although competition from corn and barley, commodities with relatively higher target prices, is a primary cause.

The Committee is concerned that the domestic supply of oats may continue to be short throughout 1990. Modifications to the 1989 wheat program announced by the Secretary of Agriculture on September 13, 1989, could cause some producers to shift potential oat production into wheat.

Therefore, the bill amends the Agricultural Act of 1949 to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture may determine not to establish an acreage reduction program for the 1990 crop of oats. However, the Secretary may require that, as a condition of eligibility for loans and deficiency payments for oats, producers may not plant oats in excess of their crop acreage base. This provision does not reduce expenditures relative to the January 1989 baseline, but should provide savings in future years by averting base-building and by marginally shifting acreage from crops such as corn and barley, where budget exposure is great.

Adjustment of purchase price for butter and non-fat dry milk

The amount of butter produced in the United States far exceeds current demand. Due to a relatively low market price for butter, a large percentage of all dairy product purchases by the Commodity Credit Corporation under the milk price support program are in the form of butter. Conversely, non-fat dry milk prices are at relatively high levels. There is not enough non-fat dry milk being produced to meet current demand adequately.

Early in 1989, Congress attempted to address this problem by passing S. 553, (P.L. 101-7) which provided for adjustments of the purchase price for non-fat dry milk and butter. By further adjusting the prices the Commodity Credit Corporation pays for purchases of butter and non-fat dry milk under the price support program, this bill provides more market-oriented signals to the dairy industry. The changes in purchase prices for butter and non-fat dry milk contained in P.L. 101-7 and in this bill will decrease federal expenditures from the dairy price support program by $45 million in fiscal year 1990 relative to the January 1989 baseline.

The provision in this bill establishes the Commodity Credit Corporation purchase price of butter during 1990 at $1.10/lb and establishes the purchase price of non-fat dry milk at $0.8475/lb. The Secretary is authorized to modify the relative purchase prices as necessary to ensure the savings level estimates. The provision also eliminates the Secretary's authority to reduce dairy support prices on January 1, 1990.

Reduction of deficiency payments for 1990 crops

In order for the Committee to meet its budget reconciliation requirements, 1990 crop deficiency payments will be reduced by an amount sufficient to reduce expenditures by $232 million during fiscal year 1990. It is the intention of the Committee to have this reduction in payments effectuated similar to reductions in expenditures carried out under the Emergency Balanced Budget and Deficit Reduction Act (popularly known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act).

Under the bill, deficiency payments would be reduced as follows:

2.3 cents per bushel for corn (and a comparable amount for other feed grains, as determined by the Secretary);

2.3 cents per bushel for wheat;

0.51 cents per pound for upland cotton; and

5.1 cents per hundredweight for rice.

The bill provides that, to the extent practicable, the Secretary shall apply the deficiency payment reduction against any advance deficiency payment made available to producers of the 1990 crops under section 107C of the Agricultural Act of 1949. This provision ensures that necessary budget savings will occur in fiscal year 1990.

It is the intent of the Committee that the 1990 reduction in deficiency payments should not affect long-term budget forecasting and that the statutory target price levels for the 1990 crops remain the same as those in the 1985 Act.

Planting of soybeans, sunflowers, and safflowers on permitted acreage

This section amends the Agricultural Act of 1949 to mandate the continuation of additional planting flexibility for oilseeds for the 1990 crop. The oilseed flexibility provision was mandated for the 1989 crop but is currently discretionary for the 1990 crop.

By requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to continue to operate this planting flexibility program, this provision will reduce federal expenditures by $116 million in fiscal year 1990 relative to the January 1989 budget estimate.

This section amends section 504(e) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1464(e)) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture shall permit producers on a farm to plant soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers on a portion specified by the producer (but in any event no more than 25 percent) of the producers' 1990 wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, and rice permitted acreage, as determined by the Secretary.

Similarly to the program implemented during 1989, the Secretary must establish a sign-up period during which producers will state their intentions regarding use of the increased planting provision, thereby allowing the Secretary to estimate the price effect of any increased plantings. The Secretary shall then estimate whether, based on the anticipated additional soybean, sunflower, and safflower plantings for the crop, the average market price for the 1990 crop of soybeans will be below 115 percent of the loan rate established for the 1989 crop of soybeans, or $5.21 per bushel.

The Committee remains concerned about any potentially detrimental effects on soybean producers' incomes if additional plantings cause soybean prices to fall below the trigger level. The Committee believes that if, after implementing the program, soybean prices fall below 120 percent of the loan rate established for the 1989 crop of soybeans, or $5.43 per bushel, the Secretary of Agriculture should promote the export of vegetable oil through the Export Enhancement Program in order to boost the demand for oilseeds.

If it is determined that the average market price for the 1990 crop of soybeans will be below 115 percent of such loan rate, the percentage of permitted acreage on the farm that may be planted to soybeans, sunflowers, and safflowers shall be reduced to the extent necessary to ensure to the extent practicable that the average soybean market price does not fall below such level. If the Secretary restricts planting flexibility under this provision, the Secretary must provide an explanation for the restriction to the House and Senate Agriculture Committees.

Producers who take advantage of this flexibility provision will not suffer any loss in acreage base for the substituted crop, will not be eligible to receive wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, or rice program benefits on the acreage planted to the oilseed crop, and will not be able to increase the farm's crop acreage base as a result of this provision.

This section also modifies the 1990 crop feed grain program provisions by changing the minimum and maximum acreage reduction percentages that the Secretary may implement if 1990 corn stocks are estimated to be 2,000,000,000 bushels or less.

Under the bill, if 1990 corn stocks are estimated to be less than 2,000,000,000 bushels but more than 1,800,000,000 bushels, the Secretary shall provide for an acreage limitation program requiring a percentage reduction of not less than 10 percent nor more than 12½ percent.

The section also provides that if 1990 corn stocks are estimated to be 1,800,000,000 bushels or less, the Secretary may provide for an acreage limitation program requiring a percentage reduction of not more than 10 percent.

Current law provides that if 1990 stocks are estimated to be less than 2,000,000,000 bushels, the Secretary may provide for an acreage limitation program of no more than 12½ percent.

Cost reduction options

This section amends section 1009(d) of the Food Security Act of 1985 to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture may allow producers holding price support loans or producer reserve loans to redeem such loans at less than the principal amount of such loans if doing so would yield benefits to the Federal government due to—

(1) receipt of a portion rather than none of accumulated interest on the loan;

(2) avoidance of default; or

(3) elimination of storage, handling, and carrying charges on the forfeited commodity.

Replanted acreage

This section would amend the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 to clarify the implementation of section 110 of that Act. Section 110 of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 was intended to prevent producers from receiving windfall profits on replanted acreage as a result of receiving both disaster payments and receipts from a crop planted to replace the crop for which disaster payments are received. The Committee is concerned that implementation of that section may go beyond the original intention of preventing windfall profits, hurting some producers due to low second-crop yields. The costs of planting and cultivating the second crop are in many cases more substantial than is implied by the Department of Agriculture's implementation of the original section 110.

The amendment would provide that the reduction in disaster payments required by section 110 would only be applied against payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted, and not against disaster payments due with respect to acreage that was not replanted.

The amendment alters the calculation of the value of the replacement crop. The amendment provides that in reducing disaster payments made to a farmer on replanted acreage, the Secretary shall only consider production from the second crop in excess of 40 percent of the county average yield. The Secretary shall then reduce the value of the second crop production above that level by 25 percent before decreasing the disaster payment.

The Committee was also concerned that implementation of this provision could delay disaster payments to producers, even though only a small portion of the producers' acreage may have been replanted. Therefore, the amendment provides that the Secretary shall consider separately disaster payments due with respect to acreage that was not replanted and disaster payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted.

In carrying out these amendments, the Secretary should determine disaster payments due to producers on a farm on a per acre basis. Payments due with respect to acreage not replanted can be immediately made to producers. Payments due with respect to replanted acreage can be made as soon as the value of the replacement crop is established.

SUBTITLE B—AGRICULTURAL TRADE PROGRAMS

Subtitle B contains amendments to agricultural trade programs. The bill would achieve budget savings by setting limits on expenditures under two export assistance programs. Other modifications to current agricultural trade programs are also included.

Export enhancement program

This section provides limits on, and earmarks a portion of, Export Enhancement Program funds for the 1990 fiscal year. The Committee believes that the projected level of expenditures under this program ($800,000,000) was in excess of the funds necessary to maintain export competitiveness during the 1990 fiscal year. A minor reduction funding for this program should not substantially alter its effectiveness.

The bill will limit expenditures under the Export Enhancement Program during the 1990 fiscal year to $650,000,000. This provision reduces outlays by $108 million relative to the January budget estimates.

In making this modification, the Committee notes that it has made no changes to the Secretarial discretion provided for in section 4301 of the Agricultural Competitiveness and Trade Act of 1988. This section provides the Secretary with the ability to expand use of the Export Enhancement program if satisfactory progress in the multilateral trade negotiations is not being made.

In addition to the limitations on Export Enhancement funds, the title earmarks $14 million in funds or commodities in fiscal year 1990, $9.3 million in fiscal year 1991, and $4.6 million in fiscal year 1992 to promote the export of United States meat, including poultry products, to United States commissaries on military installations in the European Community. These funds are to come out of expenditures under the Export Enhancement Program. Therefore, no additional cost is associated with this provision.

Funds or commodities are to be made available under this provision only to the extent that funds are made available by the Department of Defense for the costs of transporting the meat to the commissaries.

Targeted export assistance

This provision limits federal expenditures under the Targeted Export Assistance Program to $225 million in fiscal year 1990, down from the currently authorized level of $325 million. This reduction is projected to reduce expenditures by $40 million relative to the January budget estimates which assumed expenditures under this program of $325 million. This limitation, however, does allow expenditures under this program to increase by $25 million from 1989 levels.

Prohibition on duty drawback claims by exporters who use certain export promotion programs

Under this provision, a person shall be ineligible for participation in—(1) export programs established under title I or title III of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (P.L. 480); (2) in any export credit, credit guarantee, bonus, or other export program administered by the Commodity Credit Corporation; or (3) any export program carried out with funds made available pursuant to section 32 of the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1935, with respect to the export of any agricultural commodity or product by such person if that export is used as the basis for a claim of a duty drawback refund pursuant to section 313(j)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930. Exports of processed commodities (other than vegetable oil) would not be covered by this provision if the imported commodity for which the duty was paid was in a raw, or significantly different form.

Further, a person shall be ineligible for the export programs listed above with respect to the export of any vegetable oil used as the basis for a claim of duty drawback under section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, whether or not the imported and exported commodity are significantly different.

Persons applying to use these export programs must certify that they have not violated this section. The Committee intends for the Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Customs Service to work together in implementing this provision.

This section will not be applied retroactively. The provision will not apply to quantities of agricultural commodities and products with respect to which an exporter has entered into a contract prior to the effective date of the Act.

SUBTITLE C—GENERAL PROVISIONS

This subtitle includes provisions concerning prepayment and interest rate adjustments of federal financing bank loans made to rural electrification and telephone systems; research on new products from natural plant materials; refunds of stock purchases of Financial Assistance Corporation stock by Farm Credit System institutions; and the calculation of insurance premiums paid to the Farm Credit System Insurance Corporation.

Prepayment and interest rate adjustment of Federal financing bank loans made to rural electrification and telephone systems

This provision would amend the Rural Electrification Act to permit rural electrification and telephone systems to prepay their Federal Financing Bank loans or to obtain interest rate adjustments on such loans. Any system choosing to obtain an interest rate adjustment would be required to pay a penalty, based on the total difference between the annual percentage interest rate in effect on the loan and the Federal Financing Bank rate in effect at the time the interest rates is to be adjusted.

Under the bill, a borrower will be allowed to prepay such loan or loan advances at any time or times without limitation by paying the outstanding principal balance due (plus accrued interest) on such loan or loan advances. A borrower would only be allowed to prepay if—

(1) private capital, with the existing loan guarantee, is used to replace the loan, or, at the option of the borrower, private capital (including internally generated funds), is used to prepay the loan; and

(2) the borrower certifies that any savings from such prepayment will be—

(A) passed on to its customers;

(B) in a case of financial hardship, used to improve the financial strength of the borrower; or

(C) used to mitigate future rate increases.

This section would also allow borrowers to adjust the interest rates on their outstanding loans with the Federal Financing Bank. The Committee notes that several of these loans were initiated during periods of high interest rates. Subsequently, interest rates have fallen, placing several of the borrowers at a financial disadvantage. This can force the borrowers to charge higher rates to their customers. By allowing the borrowers to adjust the interest rates on their outstanding loans and loan advances, the Committee intends to help rural electrification systems to remain competitive.

It is important to note that the adjustment of the interest rate is not a refinancing or a new loan. All terms and conditions of the old loan shall remain in place, with the exception of the adjustment in interest rates.

Any guarantee of a loan used to make a prepayment may be transferred to any loan subsequently used to refinance the loan used to make the prepayment.

The penalty already described for interest rate adjustments shall be applied each time the borrower obtains an interest rate adjustment. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to issue regulations that will carry out these provisions.

Research into new commercial products from natural plant materials

This provision authorizes the Department of Agriculture to conduct fundamental and applied research related to the development of new commercial products derived from natural plant materials for industrial, medical and agricultural applications, and to participate with universities, other Federal agencies and the private sector in conducting such research.

Financial assistance board

The bill would delay the effective date of amendments made to the Farm Credit Act of 1971 by section 646 of the Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1989 until October 1, 1992. Until October 1, 1992, the Financial Assistance Corporation shall pay (in annual payments), out of the Trust Fund established under section 6.25 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971, to each of the institutions of the Farm Credit System that purchased stock in the Financial Assistance Corporation an amount determined by multiplying—

(1) the amount that would have been refunded to the institution under section 646 of the Rural Development Appropriations Act of 1989, less

(2) the amount of Financial Assistance Corporation stock the institution would have been required to purchase after September 1, 1989, through the end of each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992 had the amendments contained section 646 of the Rural Development Appropriations Act of 1989 been effective as of October 1, 1989, by

(3) a percentage equal to the average rate of interest received by the Financial Assistance Corporation during each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992 respectively.

Calculation of premiums by farm credit system insurance corporation

This provision modifies the procedure used in calculating the premiums Farm Credit System banks (including Agriculture Credit Associations) pay for insurance under the insurance program established by the Agriculture Credit Act of 1987. The provision would provide for risk-based reductions in premiums for insurance on loans that are guaranteed by the Federal Government, as appropriate on an actuarial basis, to more accurately reflect the low risks associated with federally guaranteed loans.

SUBTITLE D—PROMOTION PROGRAMS

The Committee has included several promotion related matters in this legislation. These matters were included because of their broad support in the Committee. They were also included in order to offset the impact of program payment reductions on farm income.

Marketing of U.S. agricultural products has become an ever more difficult challenge. Consumers are shifting away from traditional diets to non-traditional commodities. As this shift occurs, the competition for a space on the consumer's plate will become even more intense.

Generic promotion of agricultural commodities, financed in part by producer generated funds have been effective in increasing consumer demand. The Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Agriculture Information Bulletin Number 565 (July 1989) stated that "Studies have shown a positive relationship between advertising expenditures and sales for a wide range of commodities including milk, cheese, grapefruit juice, and orange juice."

One of the difficulties in operating a generic promotion program is the so called "free-rider" effect. Unless all producers are required to provide funds for the promotion effort, those producers who do not contribute to the fund receive the benefits of the promotion, without facing any of the costs. The same applies to foreign producers and processors who sell product in the U.S. market. Cotton products are an example of foreign goods taking advantage of a strong promotion program operated and funded by domestic producers and processors.

This title provides for the establishment of, or modification to, seven different promotion programs. Further, the title also modifies the current marketing order arrangements for several fruits as well as the egg promotion order. It also modifies marketing agreements for peanuts and provides an explicit definition of Vidalia onions.

The programs, as included in this legislation, are significantly different than the underlying legislation as originally introduced. For example, in light of the budgetary problems faced by the agricultural community and the Department of Agriculture, the Committee has insisted that the cost of implementing the programs be borne by the promotion programs themselves. In addition to this principle, the Committee has developed other standards for promotion programs that it expects to include in future promotion programs it considers.

For example, the Committee has required that a referendum be held when significant program changes are made. The Committee has also included a requirement of notice and comment before significant program changes are made. Further, escrow accounts are included where delayed referenda are permitted to provide assurance that there will be a source of refunds if the referenda are defeated. Consistent limitations on lobbying and similar activities and common enforcement procedures are also included. As mentioned above the principle that the promotion program, and not the taxpayer should pay the administrative costs of the programs, was also applied to each program.

The Committee intends to apply these basic principles to future promotion legislation. The Committee is aware that past promotion legislation did not consistently apply these principles and that there are precedents for many different elements in promotion programs. However, the Committee intends that these basic principles should serve as a model for future promotion legislation.

The Committee notes that it has received the assurances of the Department that it will implement the cost recovery provisions in a reasonable, gradual manner as it has in the past. The Committee has included the cost recovery provisions in each of the statutes based on that assurance and expects the Department to work out cost recovery plans with the programs in a manner that will not cripple existing programs or effectively preclude the start up of new plans.

Soybean Promotion, Research and Consumer Information Act

This chapter would establish a national promotion and research program for soybeans to be funded by an assessment of all producers.

This chapter would authorize the United Soybean Board to conduct promotion activities, including paid advertising, technical assistance, and trade servicing activities, to enhance the image or desirability of soybeans and soybean products in domestic and foreign markets. In addition, the bill authorizes activities designed to communicate to consumers, importers, processors, wholesalers, retailers or government officials, information relating to the positive attributes of soybeans and soybean products or the benefits of importation, utilization, or distribution of U.S. produced soybeans and soybean products.

It is the intent of the Committee in authorizing the promotion activities as defined in this section, to permit the United Soybean Board to conduct activities which will improve the competitive position of soybeans and soybean products and maintain and stimulate increased sales of soybeans and soybean products both domestically and in foreign countries. Included in this definition are traditional promotion activities such as paid advertising and media relations activities.

It is the intent of the Committee that, to the extent practicable, the Secretary of Agriculture should avoid conducting any referendum required under this chapter during or near the harvest season, in order to maximize participation in, and awareness of, referenda by farmers.

The Committee recognizes the heavy reliance on exports of the domestic soybean industry. If the domestic industry is to maintain and expand its export opportunities, it must provide importing nations with technical assistance relating to the storage, use, or distribution of soybeans or soybean products and other trade servicing activities similar to those being conducted by industry organizations through the cooperator program implemented in conjunction with the Foreign Agricultural Service of the Department of Agriculture.

In addition, the Committee acknowledges that the United Soybean Board must, in certain situations, conduct activities designed to communicate information to those persons that have an influence on purchases, importation, utilization or distribution of soybeans or soybean products. In many instances, those persons include officials of foreign governments. Therefore, the United Soybean Board must be able to communicate with government officials of foreign countries relating to the positive attributes of soybeans or soybean products, or their importation, utilization or distribution or to develop information regarding the effects of existing or proposed impediments to trade or utilization.

The Committee recognizes the potential problems associated with the United Soybean Board engaging in foreign trade activities that may be viewed as establishing or conflicting with the conduct of the official policies of the U.S. Government. A balance must be struck which will allow the United Soybean Board to conduct those activities necessary to facilitate exports, while not authorizing the United Soybean Board to negotiate foreign trade policies on behalf of the U.S. Government. It is not the intent of the committee that the United Soybean Board independently conduct negotiations with, or represent U.S. Government or domestic soybean producer industry positions to, foreign government officials advocating the removal or modification of tariffs, quotas, or other import barriers.

This would not preclude the United Soybean Board from providing technical assistance to the U.S. Government during negotiations or discussion. Trade negotiations are a function of the United States Trade Representative's Office. However, the United Soybean Board must be able to promote its products to those who have an influence on consumption and provide information to consumers, importers, processors, wholesalers, retailers and, as deemed appropriate by the Secretary of Agriculture, foreign government officials relating to the effects of existing or proposed impediments to trade or utilization of soybeans or soybean products.

It is the intent of the Committee that all plans and projects conducted by the United Soybean Board are to be approved by the Agricultural Marketing Service of the Department of Agriculture. The Committee believes that this review process will preclude any activities by the United Soybean Board that could run counter to or obviate other official ongoing or planned trade-related activities of the United States Government. The Agricultural Marketing Service in approving any projects which involve interaction with foreign government officials, shall consult with and obtain the views and comments of the Foreign Agricultural Service and the United States Trade Representative's Office.

Section 1405(h)(2) of the bill would provide that the national soybean promotion board shall ensure that all plans or projects implemented within a program area are implemented by a single national, nonprofit producer-governed organization that represents soybean producers. The Committee intends that the "program areas" under the Order comprise at least the following: research; promotion; consumer information; industry information; and producer information. Thus, under the law, the national soybean promotion board could not simultaneously contract with more than one organization in each of these areas; and the number of separate program areas could not be less than those enumerated. Of course, nothing precludes the board from contracting with the same organization to implement more than one program area.

The bill would also provide, in section 1405(j)(4) that each soybean producer who can establish that he or she is contributing to a qualified state soybean board for a state soybean checkoff program will receive a credit for such contributions of up to one-quarter of one percent of the net market price of soybeans or the equivalent thereof. Also, section 1410(a) of the bill would provide that, with certain very limited exceptions, the bill should not be construed to preempt or supersede the state soybean checkoff programs.

These provisions are designed to ensure that the national soybean checkoff program under the bill does not adversely affect or interfere with the operations of state soybean checkoff programs. Existing state programs, some of which have been in operation for decades, have done important work in their own right in assisting soybean producers in marketing their product and otherwise promoting the interests of producers and their product. The Committee strongly supports continuation of this traditional work of existing state checkoff programs.

It is the intent of the Committee that the Department of Agriculture, in developing regulations and administering the national program under the bill, take steps to facilitate the qualification of existing state soybean checkoff entities as qualified state soybean boards. In that regard, it also is the intent of the Committee that, to the extent practicable, the Department's regulations and administrative actions related to the qualifications of existing state boards not force states to revise current programs that use soybean checkoff funds or their administration of such programs as a condition for qualifying as a state soybean board, so long a state use of checkoff funds falls generally within the scope of the bill.

Cotton Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989

This chapter amends the current cotton research and promotion act to include importers. In addition to assessments that are now charged to domestic producers of cotton, assessments would be expanded to include importers of cotton and cotton products.

Pecan Promotion and Research Act

This chapter establishes a national promotion and research program for pecans to be funded by an assessment charged to all producers, shellers, handlers and importers of pecans.

Fresh Mushroom Promotion, Research and Consumer Information Act

This chapter establishes a national promotion and research program for fresh mushrooms. The program is funded by an assessment of all producers and importers of fresh mushrooms.

Fresh Lime Research, Promotion and Consumer Information Act

This chapter establishes a national promotion and research program for fresh limes. The program will be funded by an assessment charged to all producers, handlers, producer-handlers and importers of fresh limes.

Potato Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989

This chapter of the bill would amend the Potato Research and Promotion Act to provide for assessments on all producers and importers of potatoes for promotion purposes. The Committee expects that the Department will enter into an agreement with the U.S. Customs Service for collection of assessments on imports. The Customs Service currently collects assessments for beef, pork and other assessment programs.

Honey Research, Promotion and Consumer Information Act Amendments of 1989

This chapter amends the honey research, promotion and consumer information act to include assessments and refunds. Exporters and importers are eligible for receipt of refunds in so far as refunds to importers do not exceed the amount of refunds made to domestic producers as a percentage of the funds collected from domestic producers.

Kiwifruit and other fruit

This chapter amends section 8e(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This provision would add kiwifruit, nectarines and plums to the list of imported commodities that must meet the same minimum quality standards of domestically produced fruits, vegetables and specialty crops currently covered under market orders.

The Committee has agreed at this time not to add peaches and pears to the section 8e(a) authority. However, the Committee does so with the understanding that the Department of Agriculture will consider the effect of including these commodities within the section 8e(a) authority at a later time. The Committee may consider the inclusion of these commodities during reauthorization of the farm bill.

Papayas

This chapter amends section 8e(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This provision would add papayas to the list of imported commodities that must meet the same minimum quality standards as domestically produced fruits covered under market orders.

Eggs

This chapter amends the Egg Products Promotion Act by changing the definition of a commercial egg producer contained in the Egg research and consumer information act to 30,000 layers instead of the current definition of 3,000.

Peanuts

All handlers of peanuts would be required to meet inspection and quality requirements established under marketing agreements entered into between handlers of peanuts and the Secretary of Agriculture. Currently, shellers who do not sign a marketing agreement with USDA are not required to have their peanuts inspected for aflatoxin, for example. Acceptance of this provision will require that all peanuts undergo inspection for aflatoxin and other quality factors. Sellers of uninspected peanuts will be subject to a fine.

Vidalia onions

This chapter amends Federal Marketing Order No. 955 so that only onions produced within the "production area" defined by the order will be eligible to be labeled as "Vidalia onions".

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

The Committee met on September 14, 1989 in order to discuss and report out of Committee the Committee response to its reconciliation instructions. After reviewing a staff proposal which met the required savings level, the Committee approved the proposal by voice vote. No other votes concerning the package were taken.

SUBCOMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

On July 14, 1989, the Subcommittee on Domestic and Foreign Marketing and Production Promotion of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry met to hear testimony on research and promotion legislation.

A statement was presented by Mr. Kenneth C. Clayton, Acting Administrator, Agricultural Marketing Service, United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). The first witness panel consisted of Mr. Howard Lyman, Legislative Analyst, National Farmers Union, Washington, DC; Mr. Andrew Whisenhunt, President, Arkansas Farm Bureau, Bradley, Arkansas; Mr. David Senter, National Director, American Agriculture Movement, Inc., Washington, DC; and the Honorable William S. Cohen, United States Senator from Maine, Washington, DC.

Sitting on the second witness panel were Mr. Fred Beshears, President, Federated Pecan Growers, Monticello, Florida; Mr. Dennis Zensen, Chairman, Mushroom Council, Qunicy, Florida; Mr. James Lee Adams, Jr., President, American Soybean Association, Camilla, Georgia; Mr. Arnold Roach, Member, National Potato Council, Smyrna Mills, Maine; and Mr. Bruce Heiden, President, National Cotton Council, Buckeye, Arizona.

Mr. Clayton reported that the USDA has no objection to the enactment of the bills under consideration if they are amended to address the concerns outlined in the Department's reports and in his testimony. He stated that the long run interests of the industry and the general public would be best served if the research, promotion and education programs contained certain features, including a nationwide scope; implementation through an up front referendum of a majority of qualified persons voting; equitable treatment of domestic and imported commodities; importer representation on the boards and in referenda; and compliance with international trade agreements.

Mr. Clayton continued by asking that the Secretary of Agriculture be given direct enforcement authority and the power to appoint board members, as well as the authority to suspend or terminate a program if the Secretary determines that the program no longer carries out the policy of the authorizing statute. Mr. Clayton emphasized that a provision should be made for the Department to cover costs incurred by the Secretary in implementing and administrating such programs, pointing out that the Department has previously not been provided full reimbursement for costs incurred until after issuance of the final order.

Mr. Clayton noted that the soybean proposal authorizes the Soybean Program Coordinating Committee to develop plans or projects relating to market access activities, stating that international trade activities are and should continue to be confined to those Executive Branch agencies responsible for formulating and conducting the trade policy of the United States. He added that the Justice Department has raised concerns of unconstitutionality regarding the soybean proposal. Mr. Clayton concluded his testimony by urging modifications of the assessment of imported potatoes and cotton and cotton products to ensure the same coverage for imports as for domestic products.

Mr. Lyman outlined six points that the Farmers Union will require of checkoff legislation in order to give its approval. First, the checkoff program must be needed to encourage consumer loyalty to the commodity in question. Second, there must be a potential for new markets so that programs can be expanded. Third, checkoffs must be voluntary and the consumer must be able to get his money back at the first point of sale. Mr. Lyman asked that board members be elected by the people who are paying the bills, and that a referendum require a two-thirds vote of the producers that are voting. Finally, Mr. Lyman stated that the current practice in some states of lobbying with checkoff money must be eliminated to ensure that the producer's money is directed to the program for which he wishes to pay.

Mr. Whisenhunt, speaking on behalf of the Arkansas Farm Bureau Federation (AFBF), stated that it is imperative that commodity specific checkoff programs be structured to provide producer control and safeguards against the program's misuse of funds or engagement in inappropriate activity. Mr. Whisenhunt detailed the requirements of the Farm Bureau's policy regarding checkoff programs; approval by producer referendum prior to implementation of the program; referendum procedures which protect voting rights, uniform voting procedures and encouragement of maximum participation by producers; producer control over the program through a periodic referendum to determine continuation of termination of the program; producer control of the board administering the program; and limitations of the use of funds for promotion, market development and research only.

In addition, Mr. Whisenhunt outlined the changes in the proposed soybean checkoff that are needed to conform the program to the Farm Bureau's policy. One, include a recall provision that would require a referendum if 10 percent of the soybean farmers signed a petition for a referendum on continuation. Two, provide a mandatory reconfirmation vote every five years. Three, make a refund option available to producers until the approval of the initial referendum. Four, prohibit the use of funds collected by the board for the purpose of influencing governmental action or policy. Five, audit United Soybean Board funds and projects at least annually. Six, agree upon specific definitions of promotion, research, consumer information and industry information to help eliminate concern over the use of funds. Seven, establish mechanisms of collection on soybeans under CCC loan, whereby a second checkoff of the assessment would not be allowed. Mr. Whisenhunt asserted that with these changes the AFBF would support the Senate Bill 919 and the House Resolution 2209. Mr. Whisenhunt concluded his testimony by requesting changes in proposed legislation for commodity research programs for cotton, pecans, potatoes, mushrooms and limes that would align them with the Farm Bureau's policy that he outlined earlier.

Mr. Senter, speaking on behalf of the American Agriculture Movement (AAM), stated that AAM generally supports checkoff programs and hopes that the Committee will begin to put in place basic criteria to ensure consistency among different commodity checkoff programs. AAM does not see commodity checkoff programs as a substitution for price, but believes checkoff programs work well to promote the program and build market access. Mr. Senter said that AAM supports producer referendums and that the program should be voluntary, so that the refund provision continues to be a check and balances in the program.

AAM believes that appropriate uses for promotion funds should be defined, and that these funds should be prohibited from use in political or lobbying activities domestically or abroad, by either national or state programs. Mr. Senter called for a commodity checkoff that would apply at all points of sale to fairly distribute the cost of promotion over all those who benefit. Finally, Mr. Senter requested that each of the five largest general farm organizations be allowed to nominate a soybean farmer to the board.

Senator Cohen briefly summarized the three provisions of the Potato Research and Promotion Act amendments of 1989. First, the potato research and promotion program would be voluntary. Second, the program would apply to foreign exporters, who also benefit from domestic promotion. Third, the requirement for an automatic referendum would be waived, with a provision that the Secretary could call for a referendum if so desired by ten percent of the participants.

Mr. Beshears, President of the Federated Pecan Growers of the United States, cited recent financial losses by the pecan industry and pointed to an anticipated increase in the pecan supply from Mexico. In light of the fact that as much as $15 million and $10 million per year is being spent for research and promotion of almonds and walnuts, respectively, the Federated Growers recognize a need for a national pecan marketing and research program. Mr. Beshears stated that a basic plan for such a program is included in Senate Bill 962, and emphasized that the passage of this legislation would be the first step toward restoring the financial health of the pecan industry.

Mr. Zensen explained that the mushroom industry, because it is comprised of a few large and many smaller producers, is fragmented and disorganized with respect to its ability to speak with one voice and to achieve a more orderly marketing environment. The research and promotion order would help greatly in both of these regards. Citing declining retail shelf space and a decrease in the number of family farms, Mr. Zensen encouraged the committee's support of Senate Bill 962.

Mr. Adams spoke on behalf of the American Soybean Association (ASA), pointing out that while the United States' share of the world soybean market has been falling rapidly over the past few years, there are good opportunities in the industry for the United States as the demand for soybeans rises. New uses of soybean products, including partial replacement of petroleum products, and soybean genetic engineering are examples of the research areas that need funding.

The ASA, based on hearings and polls conducted around the country, has developed a research and promotion program under which contributions from all who benefit would be mandatory, and farmers would be given control of the program. Mr. Adams suggested that such a program be voluntary for a trial period of two years, after which time a referendum would be held to decide the future of the program. Mr. Adams finished this testimony by reiterating that opportunities exist for the expansion of the domestic and foreign soybean market, and that the ASA looks forward working with the Committee to pass legislation to that end.

Mr. Roach praised the contributions of the Potato Research and Promotion Act of 1971, and asked that it be amended to meet two sorely needed goals. First, the Potato Board should have the authority to assess potatoes that are imported into the United States, which would make the program compatible with such programs as beef and pork. Second, the refund provisions in the current law should be revoked to ensure that all who benefit from the program contribute equally. Mr. Roach requested that these changes, which two previous referenda have shown to be desired by a large majority of farmers, be put into effect without a costly referendum. Mr. Roach concluded by reporting that Canadian farmers have asked to participate in the program, which they admire and which to emulate.

Mr. Heiden spoke on behalf of the National Cotton Council, pointing out that the future holds both problems and opportunities. He stated that a majority of the farmers who request refunds from the program do so not from dissatisfaction with the program but rather because of financial difficulties, because other farmers in the areas are collecting refunds or because importers are benefiting from the research and promotion program.

Proposed legislation would address the two last complaints by eliminating refunds and assessing imports at a rate equal to that of domestic products. Mr. Heiden stated that cotton producers need and would support a well-managed, adequately-financed and effective research and promotion program and that the cotton industry respectfully requests the support of the committee for the opportunity to expand its proven program.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SUBTITLE A—AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY PROGRAMS

Section 1101. Cotton Acreage Reduction Program

This section would amend section 103A(f)(2)(A) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (the "1949 Act") by striking "(not to exceed 25 percent)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(not to exceed 25 percent or, if the Secretary projects a 1990 carryover of more than 7 million bales as of July 31, 1991, not to exceed 3 percent for the 1990 crop)."

Section 1102. Feed Grain Acreage Limitation Program

This section would amend section 105C(f)(2)(G) of the 1949 Act to provide that, effective for the 1990 crop of feed grains, the Secretary may establish an acreage reduction percentage for the 1990 crop of oats of less than 5 percent. If the Secretary does not establish a percentage reduction requirement for oats, the Secretary shall ensure that the crop acreage bases established for the farm and the farm acreage base are not increased as a result of this provision.

This section amends section 105C(d)(1) of the 1949 Act to provide that the national crop acreage provisions contained in subsection (d) would not apply to the 1990 crop of oats.

The section also amends section 105C(f)(1) to provide that as a condition of eligibility for loans, purchases, and payments for the 1990 crop of oats, the producers of oats on a farm may not plant oats in excess of the crop acreage base for the farm.

Section 1103. Adjustment of purchase price for butter and non-fat dry milk

This section would amend section 201(d) of the 1949 Act to provide that, in carrying out the price support program for milk during the 1990 calendar year, the Secretary is directed to establish the purchase price of butter at not less than $1.10 per pound and the purchase price for non-fat dry milk at not less than $0.8475 per pound. The Secretary is authorized to allocate the rate of price support between the purchase prices for nonfat dry milk and butter in such manner as the Secretary determines will result in the lowest level of expenditures by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The 50 cent reduction in the support price of milk now provided for in section 201(d)(1)(D)(i) of the 1949 Act is removed for the 1990 calendar year.

Section 1104. Reduction of deficiency payments for 1990 crops

Subsection (a) would amend the 1949 Act by adding a new section 425 to provide that the amount of deficiency payments made available to producers of the 1990 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under sections 107D(c), 105C(c), 103A(c), and 101A(c) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 shall be reduced as follows:

(1) 2.3 cents per bushel for wheat;

(2) 2.3 cents per bushel for corn (and a comparable amount for other feed grains, as determined by the Secretary);

(3) .51 cents per pound for upland cotton; and

(4) 5.1 cents per hundredweight for rice.

The section provides that to the extent practicable, the Secretary shall apply this reduction in payments to any advance deficiency payment made available to producers of the 1990 crops under section 107C of the Agricultural Act of 1949.

Subsection (b) would amend section 107C(a)(2)(G) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 to provide that in calculating any refund that might be owed by a producer under that section, the Secretary shall take into consideration any reduction in the payment made under section 425.

Section 1105. Planting of soybeans, sunflowers, and safflowers on permitted acreage

Subsection (a) would amend subsection (e) of section 504 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1464(e)) to provide for the planting of soybeans, sunflowers and safflowers on permitted acreage for the 1990 crop. Producers are permitted to plant up to 25 percent of their permitted acreage of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton and rice permitted acreage to the selected oilseeds.

In providing producers with the option to plant selected oilseeds on permitted acreage, the Secretary is directed to establish a signup period during which producers on a farm participating in the 1990 crop wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, extra long stable cotton or rice price support and production adjustment programs must state their intentions regarding the use of the selected oilseeds planting provision.

After the end of the signup period, the Secretary shall estimate whether, based on producer participation in the selected oilseeds planting provision, the average market price for the 1990 crop of soybeans will be below 115 percent of the loan rate established for the 1989 crop of soybeans. If the Secretary estimates that the average price will be below 115 percent of such loan rate, the Secretary is directed to reduce the percentage of permitted acreage on the farm that may be planted to soybeans, sunflowers and safflowers to a level, or prohibit such plantings as is necessary to ensure that the average soybean market price does not fall below 115 percent of such loan rate.

In making such determination, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a statement setting forth the reasons for any reduction in the permitted planting percentage, or prohibition on such plantings, udner this paragraph.

In order to preclude any future adjustment in a participating producers farm acreage base or the crop acreage base for the farm, any acreage on the farm on which soybeans, sunflowers or safflowers are planted under this section shall be considered to be planted to the program crop for which soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers are substituted.

The Secretary may not make program benefits, other than soybean or sunflower seed price support loans and purchases available to producers with respect to acreage planted to soybeans, sunflowers or safflowers under this subsection and shall ensure that the crop acreage bases established for the farm and the farm acreage base are not increased due to such plantings.

Subsection (b) would amend section 105C(f)(1)(C) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1444e(f)(1)(C)) to provide that in the case of the 1990 crop of feed grains, if the Secretary estimates, not later than September 30, 1989, that the quantity of corn on hand in the United States on the first day of the marketing year for that crop (not including any quantity of corn of that crop) will be—

(1) more than 2,000,000,000 bushels, the Secretary shall provide for an acreage limitation program under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not less than 12½ percent nor more than 20 percent;

(2) less than 2,000,000,000 bushels but more than 1,800,000,000 bushels, the Secretary shall provide for an acreage limitation program (as described in paragraph (2)) under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not less than 10 percent nor more than 12½ percent; or

(3) 1,800,000,000 bushels or less, the Secretary may provide for an acreage limitation program (as described in paragraph (2)) under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not more than 10 percent.

Section 1106. Cost reduction options

This section would amend section 1009(d) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308a(d)). It would authorize the Secretary to allow a producer to repay a non-recourse or a producer reserve storage loan at less than the full principle of the loan if the Secretary determines that there would be benefits to the federal government.

Section 1107. Replanted acreage

This section would revise section 110 of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 by changing the provisions concerning the valuation of a crop planted to replace a crop lost or damaged by damaging weather in 1988 or 1989.

The revised section 110 would provide that, in determining the value of the replacement crop, the Secretary shall—

(1) only consider any production of the second crop that is in excess of 40 percent of the country average yield for such crop;

(2) base the value of the excess second crop production on average market prices for the second crop during a representative period; and

(3) further reduce the value of the replacement crop by 25 percent.

In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall take into account the historical cropping patterns of producers. The reduction provided for in section 110 shall only be applied against payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted.

The section further revises section 110 to provide that in determining disaster payments under subtitle I of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989, the Secretary shall consider separately payments due on acreage that was not replanted and payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted.

SUBTITLE B—AGRICULTURAL TRADE PROGRAMS

Section 1201. Export Enhancement Program

Subsection (a) would provide that, during fiscal year 1990, except to the extent provided for under section 4301 of the Agricultural Competitiveness and Trade Act of 1988, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall not make available to exporters, processors, or foreign importers under the authority of section 5(f) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714c(f)) more than $650,000,000 in commodities of the Commodity Credit Corporation to enhance the export of United States commodities by making the price of such commodities competitive in the world market.

Subsection (b) would provide that during each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall, in carrying out the export enhancement program established pursuant to section 5(f) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, promote the export of United States meat, including poultry products, to commissaries on military installations in the European Community. The Commodity Credit Corporation shall make available for such purposes not less than $14,000,000 (of the $650,000,000 referred to in subsection (a)) in funds or Commodities for fiscal year 1990, not less than $9,000,000 in funds or commodities for fiscal year 1991, and not less than $4,600,000 in funds or commodities for fiscal year 1992. Funds or commodities would be made available under this subsection only to the extent that funds are made available by the Department of Defense for the costs of transporting the meat to the commissaries. The subsection also provides that section 4 of the Act of July 16, 1943 (15 U.S.C. 713a-9) shall not apply to services performed, losses sustained, operating costs incurred, or commodities purchased or delivered by the Commodity Credit Corporation pursuant to the provisions of this section.

Section 1202. Targeted export assistance

This section would amend section 1124(a) of the Food Security Act of 1985 by limiting the amount of funds of, or commodities owned by, the Commodity Credit Corporation available for the Targeted Export Assistance program to no more than $225,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

Section 1203. Prohibition on duty drawback claims by exporters who use certain export promotion programs

Subsection (a) would provide that a person shall be ineligible for participation in any export program established under title I or title III of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), or in any export credit, credit guarantee, bonus, or other export program carried out through, or administered by, the Commodity Credit Corporation or carried out with funds made available pursuant to section 32 of the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1935 (7 U.S.C. 612c) with respect to the export of any agricultural commodity or product that has been or will be used as the basis for a claim of a refund, as drawback, pursuant to section 313(j)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930, of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

Subsection (b) would provide that a person shall be ineligible for participation in any export program listed in subsection (a) with respect to the export of vegetable oil or a vegetable oil product that has been or will be used as the basis for a claim of a refund, as drawback to section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to issue regulations necessary to carry out this section.

Subsection (c) would require any person applying to export any agricultural commodity or product under the export programs described in subsection (a) to certify that none of the commodity or product has been or will be used as the basis of a claim for any refund of duty drawback specified in subsection (a) (or in the case of an export of vegetable oil, of duty drawback specified in subsection (b)).

This section shall not apply, however, to quantities of agricultural commodities and products with respect to which an exporter has entered into a contract, prior to the effective date of this section, for an export sale.

SUBTITLE C—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Section 1301. Prepayment and interest rate adjustment of Federal financing bank loans made to rural electrification and telephone systems

This section would amend section 306A of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 936A) to provide for prepayment of outstanding loans made by the Federal Financing Bank and Guaranteed by the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration. A borrower would be allowed to prepay such loans or loan advances, or any portion thereof, at any time or times without limitation as to dollar amount by paying the outstanding principal balance due on such loans or loan advances, or any portion thereof, being prepaid, if—

(1) private capital, with the existing loan guarantee, is used to replace the loan, or, at the option of the borrower, private capital (including internally generated funds), is used to prepay the loan; and

(2) the borrower certifies that any savings from such prepayment will be—

(A) passed on to its customers;

(B) in a case of financial hardship, used to improve the financial strength of the borrower; or

(C) used to mitigate future rate increases.

If on the date of enactment of this section a borrower has an outstanding loan made by the Federal Financing Bank and guaranteed by the Administrator under section 306, the interest rate on any of its existing Federal Financing Bank loans or loan advances, or portion thereof, shall, at the option of the borrower, be adjusted from its present rate to the Federal Financing Bank rate then in effect for new Federal Financing Bank loans of a maturity equal to the remaining life of such Federal Financing Bank loans or loan advances, or portion thereof.

Such Federal Financing Bank rate shall include a fee of .00126, consistent with the calculation of Federal Financing Bank rates to borrowers under this Act during fiscal year 1989.

An adjustment in an interest rate shall not be considered a prepayment of an existing loan. Such existing loan shall remain in place and none of the terms of such loan may be amended other than such adjustment in the interest rate and the payment of a fee is provided for in this subsection.

Any guarantee of a loan used to make a prepayment may be transferred to any loan subsequently used to refinance such loan without condition and shall be available for the remaining term originally agreed to by the Administrator.

A penalty, as provided by this subsection, shall be paid to the Federal Financing Bank by the borrower at the time of prepayment or interest rate adjustment. If the interest rate is adjusted on a loan or loan advance or any portion thereof, the borrower shall pay a one time penalty determined by multiplying—

(1) the principal balance of each Federal Financing Bank loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, with respect to which the interest rate is adjusted; by

(2) the difference between the annual percent interest rate on loans or loan advances undergoing such interest rate adjustments and the annual percent interest rate at the time of the interest rate adjustment of new Treasury borrowings of the same maturity as the average maturity on the Federal Financing Bank loans or loan advances, or portion thereof, undergoing interest rate adjustment.

If prepayment or interest rate adjustment of a loan (or advance) is made under this section no sums in addition to the payment of the outstanding principal of the loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, being prepaid, plus accrued interest and the penalty assessed for interest rate adjustment already described shall be charged, as the result of such prepayment or interest rate adjustment, against—

(1) the borrower;

(2) the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund; or

(3) the Rural Electrification Administration.

Not later than 30 days after the enactment of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

In issuing such regulations, the Secretary shall—

(1) facilitate prepayment and interest rate adjustments of loan advances;

(2) provide for full processing of each prepayment request within 30 days of its submission to the Rural Electrification Administration;

(3) provide for full processing of each interest rate adjustment request within 10 days of its submission to the Rural Electrification Administration; and

(4) except as provided in section 306A of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, impose no restriction that increases the cost to borrowers of obtaining private financing for prepayment or inhibits the ability of the borrower to enter into prepayment and interest rate adjustment arrangements pursuant to this section.

The amendment made by this section would become effective 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Section 1302. Research into new commercial products from natural plant materials

This section would amend the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 by inserting a new section 1473E allowing the Secretary to conduct research related to new commercial product development. Specifically, the section would provide that the Secretary may relate to the development of new commercial products derived from natural plant materials for industrial, medical, and agricultural applications; and in doing so participate with colleges and universities, other Federal agencies, and private sector entities in conducting such research.

Section 1303. Purchases of Financial Assistance Corporation stock by Farm Credit System institutions

Subsection (a) would provide that notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amendments to section 6.29 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 U.S.C. 2278b-9) made by section 646 of the Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1989 (Public Law 100-460; 102 Stat. 2266) shall become effective on October 1, 1992.

Subsection (b) provides that the Financial Assistance Corporation shall pay, out of the Trust Fund established under section 6.25 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971, to each of the institutions of the Farm Credit System that purchased stock in the Financial Assistance Corporation under section 6.29 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971, four annual payments as provided in this subsection.

The annual payments provided for by this section shall be made available as soon as practicable after October 1 of each of the calendar years 1989 through 1992.

The first annual payment made available under this section would be in an amount equal to—

(1) a percentage equal to 1.5 times the average rate of interest received by the Financial Assistance Corporation from March 30, 1988 through September 30, 1989; times

(2) the difference between $177,000,000 and 4.4 percent of the amount of the cumulative amount of the bonds issued by the Financial Assistance Corporation September 30, 1989.

The second, third, and fourth payments made available under this subsection shall be in an amount equal to—

(i) a percentage equal to the average rate of interest received by the Financial Assistance Corporation during each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992; times

(ii) the difference between $177,000,000 and 4.4 percent of the amount of the cumulative amount of the bonds issued by September 30 of each of such fiscal years.

Annual payments due under this subsection shall be made available to each institution described in paragraph (1) in an amount equal to the total amount of annual payments to be made available times the ratio of the amount of stock each institution purchased divided by $176,000,000.

Section 1304. Calculation of premiums by Farm Credit System Insurance Corporation

This section would amend section 5.55 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 U.S.C. 2277a-4(a)) by revising the procedure used in calculating the premiums Farm Credit System banks pay for insurance under the insurance program established under the Farm Credit Act of 1987.

The section provides that until the aggregate of amounts in the Farm Credit Insurance Fund exceeds the secure base amount, the annual premium due from any insured system bank for any calendar year shall be equal to the sum of—

(1) the annual average principal outstanding (as adjusted below) for such year on loans made by the bank that are in accrual status multiplied by 0.0015; and

(2) the annual principal outstanding (as adjusted below) for such year on loans made by the bank that are in non-accrual status multiplied by 0.0025.

The Corporation under procedures and criteria established by regulation, shall adjust downward the annual average principal outstanding for a bank during a year to exclude all or a portion of any principal outstanding on Government-guaranteed loans made by the bank and loans made by associations serviced by such bank, as appropriate on an actuarial basis to more accurately reflect the reduced risks associated with such loans for the holders of insured obligations of insured System banks.

As used in this section, the term "Government-guaranteed loan" means a loan, or portion of a loan, made by an insured system bank that carries a full faith and credit performance or loss guarantee or surety or an unconditional guarantee of the United States Government or any state government or of any department, agency, bureau, board, commission, or establishment thereof or any corporation wholly owned directly or indirectly by the United States or any state.

The amendments made by this section are to become effective on January 1, 1989.

SUBTITLE D—PROMOTION PROGRAMS

Chapter 1—Soybeans

Section 1401. Short title

This section provides that the chapter may be cited as the "Soybean Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act."

Section 1402. Findings and declaration of policy

This section sets forth the findings of Congress with respect to the importance of soybeans in the human diet and as a feedstuff for livestock, and in the economy, and the need to maintain and expand existing soybean markets and to develop new soybean markets; and the finding that soybean and soybean products move in or directly burden or affect interstate commerce. This section also includes a declaration of Congress that it is in the public interest to authorize the establishment of an orderly procedure for developing, financing—through assessments—and implementing a program of soybean promotion, research, and consumer information.

Section 1403. Definitions

This section provides definitions for words and phrases used in the chapter, including "first purchaser," which is defined as any person buying or otherwise acquiring from a producer soybeans produced by such producer, or if soybeans are pledged as collateral for a loan issued under a Federal price support loan program, the Commodity Credit Corporation. Also defined in this section are such terms as "net market price", "producer", and "qualified state soybean board."

Section 1404. Issuance of orders

This section will require the Secretary of Agriculture to publish a proposed soybean promotion, research, and information order for public comment within 30 days after receipt of the proposal for the order from the industry. The final order is to be issued no later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

Section 1405. Required terms in orders

This section sets forth the required provisions of the soybean promotion, research, and information order, including the establishment of the United Soybean Board appointed by the Secretary from nominations submitted by qualified state soybean boards, or if no qualified state soybean board exists in a geographic unit, from nominations submitted in the manner prescribed by the Secretary. This section also describes the powers and duties of the United Soybean Board.

Section 1405(e) will require the establishment of the Soybean Program Coordinating Committee to assist in the administration of the order. The Committee will be composed of 10 members and officers of the United Soybean Board, and nine producers elected by the national, nonprofit soybean producer-governed organization that promotes soybeans as a cooperator with the Foreign Agricultural Service. The powers and duties of the Soybean Program Coordinating Committee are set out in this section, including responsibility for the development of plans and projects for soybean promotion, research, consumer information, and industry information, and for the development of budgets for such plans and projects which will be submitted to the United Soybean Board and the Secretary of Agriculture for their approval.

Section 1405(j) describes the assessment collection process under this chapter. Each first purchaser of soybeans from a producer will collect assessments from the producer and remit them to the United Soybean Board. Qualified state soybean boards will be used to collect assessments in states where such boards exist. The rate of assessment will be one half of one percent of the net market price of such soybeans sold by the producer to the first purchaser.

The order also is to make provision for producers to demand and receive refunds of their assessments both during the period prior to the initial referendum on the continuation of the order and (if supported by producers) during the operation of the order after the initial referendum. Producer support for continued refunds after the initial referendum will be determined through a polling and referendum process conducted by the Secretary. The Secretary will be reimbursed for the costs of administration, polling and referenda, except for a referendum conducted under paragraph (2)(F)(iv).

Producers will receive credits against assessments for contributions made to a qualified state soybean board of up to one quarter of one percent of the net market price; and qualified state soybean boards will receive credits on collected assessments sufficient to maintain their assessment income at reasonable levels.

Section 1406. Referenda

This section provides that no earlier than 18 months or later than 36 months following the issuance of the soybean promotion, research, and information order, the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a referendum among soybean producers to determine whether the order is to be continued. The order will continue in effect if approved by a majority of the producers voting in this initial referendum. Five years after the conduct of each referendum, and every five years thereafter, the Secretary is to offer an opportunity for producers to request additional reconfirmation referenda.

Section 1407. Petition and review

This section will require that challenges to the soybean promotion, research, and information order be first brought before the Secretary of Agriculture for hearing and a ruling, and then for review of the Secretary's ruling in the United States district courts.

Section 1408. Enforcement

This section will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue cease and desist orders and assess civil penalties for violations of the soybean promotion, research, and information order. The United States district courts will be authorized to enforce such orders and penalties, and the United States courts of appeals may review such orders and penalties.

Section 1409. Investigations; power to subpoena and take oaths and affirmations; aid to courts

This section will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make such investigations as are necessary to administer and enforce the chapter, and provide the Secretary with the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths and affirmations, and otherwise obtain records and evidence. The courts of the United States are authorized to enforce the subpoenas issued by the Secretary through use of their contempt power.

Section 1410. Administrative provisions

This section provides that the chapter is not to supersede or preempt any state soybean promotion program, except that (1) states may not conduct certain referenda on the continuation of their programs from the time of the issuance of the order until 18 months after the referendum under this Act and (2) state limits on assessment rates will not prohibit qualified state soybean boards from recovering the full amount authorized under the chapter.

Section 1411. Authorization of appropriations

This section will authorize the appropriation of such funds as are necessary to implement the chapter and the soybean promotion, research, and information order, although appropriated funds may not be used by the United Soybean Board or the Soybean Program Coordinating Committee to pay their administrative expenses.

Section 1412. Regulations

This section will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue regulations to carry out the chapter.

Chapter 2—Cotton

Section 1501. Short title

Section 1501 provides that the bill may be cited as the "Cotton Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989".

Section 1502. Legislative findings and declaration of policy

Section 1502 would amend Section 2 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act to provide that it is the policy of the Congress and the purpose of the Act to authorize assessments on all cotton marketed in the United States including imports of cotton.

Section 1503. Alternative order

Section 1503 would amend the Cotton Research and Promotion Act by requiring the Secretary to issue a new order, substantially the same as the existing order, except that it will require the assessment of imports and end the present practice of refunding assessments to domestic producers who request them.

Subsection (a)(1) requires the Secretary to issue an alternative order within 60 days of request by a producer or producer organization.

Subsection (a)(2) specifies that the alternative order shall include terms and conditions as prescribed in the section and shall terminate the Cotton Board's authority to process refunds.

Subsection (a)(3)(A) specifies that certain provisions of the existing order will be incorporated into the alternative order. Subsection (a)(3)(B) provides that incumbent members of the Cotton Board shall continue to serve their full term.

Subsection (b)(1) provides that the alternative order will authorize establishment and selection of a Cotton Board by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Subsections 2(b)(A)-(D) provide that the alternative order shall define the powers and duties of the Cotton Board.

Subsection (b)(3) provides for the composition of the Cotton Board. Subsection (b)(3)(A)(i) provides that the Secretary's selection should be from nominations made by eligible producer organizations or in certain cases nominations submitted to the Secretary in a prescribed manner and that representation on the board should reflect each state's proportion of total upland cotton marketings. Subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii) provides that the Secretary shall also appoint an appropriate number of importers to the Board. Subsection (b)(3)(B) provides that each cotton producing state shall have one representative on the Board. Subsection (b)(3)(C) provides that the Secretary shall consult with certified importer organizations when identifying importer candidates for the Board. Subsection (b)(3)(D) provides that the Secretary may appoint consumer advisors to the board and reimburse certain expenses.

Subsection (c) provides that the Cotton Board must prepare and submit a plan covering proposed activities to the Secretary for review and approval.

Subsection (d) provides that the Cotton Board must prepare and submit a detailed budget to the Secretary for review and approval.

Subsections (e)(1)(A)-(C) require that the alternative order provide that a producer shall pay to the handler of cotton an assessment in the manner prescribed by the regulations; that the handler shall collect and pay the assessment to the Cotton Board; and the importer shall pay the prescribed assessment to the Cotton Board on imports of cotton.

Subsections (e)(2) and (e)(2)(A)-(B) provide for establishment of a reasonable reserve and require that the board reimburse the Secretary up to $300,000 for each referendum and for administrative costs of up to 5 employee years after an order or amendment has been made effective.

Subsection (e)(3) provides that agencies of Government assisting in administering the import provisions will be reimbursed for a reasonable amount of expenses.

Subsection (e)(4) provides that different classes of handlers and importers may be established to facilitate collections and payment of assessments, provided not more than one assessment may be collected on each bale.

Subsection (e)(5) provides that the per bale assessment to be prescribed in the alternative order shall be $1.00 plus a supplemental amount not to exceed 1 percent of the value as determined by the Cotton Board.

Subsection (e)(6) prohibits advertisements or solicitation of votes under authority of this Act.

Subsection (e)(7) (A)-(C) provides that the Secretary may file suit against a person subject to the alternative order for collection of the assessment in any district court and that this authority is in addition to other remedies.

Subsections (e)(8)(A)-(C) provide that the rate of assessment on imports of cotton should be determined in the same manner as the rate of assessment on domestically produced cotton; the value placed on cotton imports for the purpose of collecting the assessment should be established by the Secretary in a fair and equitable manner so that the assessment on imports will be as near as possible to that paid on an equivalent volume of domestically produced cotton; and that the Secretary is authorized to reduce the assessment on imported cotton to reflect the re-importation of domestically produced cotton in the form of value-added products.

Subsection (f) provides that the alternative order require the Cotton Board to maintain certain books and reports for the Secretary and that an appropriate accounting system be utilized to track receipts and disbursements.

Subsections (g)(1)(A) and (B) provide authority for the Cotton Board to enter into contracts with the Secretary's approval, to carry out authorized activities and to pay such contracts with assessments collected under the order.

Subsection (g)(2) provides that an organization or association is eligible to enter into a contract with the Cotton Board if such organization or association consists of cotton producers selected by the cotton producer organizations certified by the Secretary in such manner as to ensure representation proportionate to cotton marketing in each cotton producing state.

Subsection (g)(3) provides that a contractor shall develop and submit an annual program and budget to the Cotton Board for review and making recommendations to the Secretary and that such program of projects shall become effective on approval by the Secretary.

Subsection (g)(4) provides that contractors shall keep accurate records and make an annual report to the Cotton Board of activities carried out and funds received and expended.

Subsection (h) prohibits use of assessment income to influence governmental policy or action except as specifically authorized by subsection (b)(2)(D).

Section 1504. Referenda requirements for alternative order

Subsection (b)(1) of section 1504 would amend Section 8 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act by requiring that the Secretary, within one-hundred twenty days after publication of the proposed alternative order, will issue the alternative order after notice and opportunity for public comment.

Subsection (b)(2) of section 1504 provides that the Secretary, within eight months of enactment of the Cotton Research and Promotion Amendments Act of 1989, shall conduct a referendum and the alternative order would become effective on an interim basis if approved by a majority of producers voting.

Subsection (b)(3) of section 1504 requires, if the alternative order is approved, the publication of regulations implementing the alternative order for an interim period pending results of a subsequent referendum and final regulations.

Subsections (c)(1)-(5) of section 1504 provide that, if the first referendum is approved, the Secretary shall conduct another referendum, within fifteen to thirty months of enactment of the Cotton Research and Promotion Amendments Act of 1989, among producers and importers and, within ninety days of publication of the results of the referendum, the Secretary shall issue final regulations implementing the alternative order unless disapproved by a majority of producers and a majority of importers of cotton voting in the referendum, in which case the Secretary shall issue an order terminating the alternative order.

Subsection (c)(6) of section 1504 provides that 10 percent of assessments collected from importers and producers would be held in escrow pending results of the referendum in which importers participate and would be refunded, after deduction of a proportion of expenses incurred by Government agencies, if the alternative order is disapproved, upon demand by the importer or producer that paid the assessment in accordance with regulations and within a time prescribed by the Cotton Board. If the alternative order is approved, the escrow account would be released on publication of the final regulations by the Secretary.

Subsections (d)(1)-(5) of section 1504 provide that if the foregoing referendum occurs, once every five years thereafter, producers and importers may request another referendum to determine whether the alternative order should continue, of if it is not then in effect, whether the alternative order should become effective. The alternative order would be subject to referendum if ten percent of producers and importers request the referendum, provided, not more than twenty percent of the persons making the request represent producers from any one state or importers of cotton. The alternative order would be effective unless disapproved by a majority of producers and a majority of importers voting.

Subsection (e) of section 1504 provides that disapproval of any amendment to an order issued under this Act shall not be deemed to invalidate such order.

Section 1505. Producer refunds; termination

Section 1505 will amend section 11 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act by providing for termination of the Cotton Board's authority to process applications for refunds if the alternative order is approved in a referendum.

Section 1506. Definitions

Subsection (1) of section 1506 will amend Section 17(c) of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act to provide that "cotton" means all upland cotton harvested in the United States and imports of upland cotton, including the upland cotton content of the products derived thereof (other than industrial products as defined by the Secretary). Under subsection (2) the Secretary is authorized to provide an exemption for (1) any entry of cotton, including the cotton content of cotton products, that has a value or weigh less than a de minimis figure established by the Secretary, and (2) all entries by an importer during a calendar year if they total less than a de minimis amount established by the Secretary. The de minimis amounts established by the Secretary shall be levels designed to minimize the administrative burden but provide for maximum participation of imports in the assessment provisions of the Act.

Subsection (3) of section 1506 will amend section 17(d) of the Act to provide that the definition of handler includes, for the purposes of sections 3, 6 (c), and 13, any person who imports cotton as defined in clauses (A) and (B) of subsection (c).

Subsection (3) of section 1506 will also amend section 17 of the Act by adding a definition of "importer" as any person who enters, or withdraws from warehouse, cotton for consumption in the customs territory of the United States and defines the term "import" as any such entry.

Chapter 3—Pecans

Section 1601. Short title

This section would provide that this chapter may be cited as the "Pecan Promotion and Research Act of 1989".

Section 1602. Findings, policy, and construction

This section lists findings relating to the nutritional and economic importance of pecans as well as the need to expand the market for pecans. No limit is placed on any producer's right to grow pecans.

Section 1603. Definitions

This section establishes definitions for the terms "board", "Conflict of interest", "Department", "district", "first handler", "grower", "grower-sheller", "handle", "importer", "inshell pecan", "marketing year", "member", "pecan", "person", "promotion", "research", "Secretary", "shell", "shelled pecan."

Section 1604. Authority to issue orders

This section would provide that the Secretary shall issue and from time to time amend orders applicable to growers, shellers, first handlers and importers of pecans. Any such order shall be national in scope. Not more than one order shall be in effect under this chapter at any one time.

Section 1605. Notice and hearings

This section would provide that the Secretary may propose the issuance of an order under this chapter or an association of pecan growers or grower-shellers or any other person that will be affected by this chapter may request the issuance of an order. Not later than 60 days after the receipt of a request and proposal by an interested person for an order or when the Secretary determines to propose an order, the Secretary shall publish the proposed order and give due notice and opportunity for public comment on the proposed order.

Section 1606. Findings and issuance of orders

This section would provide that after notice and opportunity for public comment are given, the Secretary shall issue the order, taking into consideration the comments received and including in the order provisions necessary to ensure that the order is in conformity with the requirements of this chapter. Such order shall be issued and become effective not later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

Section 1607. Regulations

This section would provide that the Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

Section 1608. Required terms in orders

This section provides for the establishment of a Pecan Marketing Board which will serve the entire domestic pecan industry and will promote only generic pecans.

The membership of the board shall consist of 15 members including eight growers, four shellers, one first handler who receives over 50 percent of the members income from buying and selling pecans and one importer, nominated by the board and one member representing the general public. At the option of the board a consultant or advisor representing a pecan producing country other than the United States who may be chosen to attend board functions as a nonvoting member.

The section also specifies geographic distribution of membership on the board. Each member on the board shall have an alternate with the same qualifications as the member such alternate would replace. There shall be no more than one member from each State in each district, except that the State of Georgia may have two growers from such State representing the district that it is in.

The Secretary may approve regulations submitted by the board, at least once each 3 years and not more than once each 2 years, to reapportion a district in order to more accurately reflect changes in production and import patterns. Nominations to the board shall be provided to the Secretary only after reasonable publicity to interested parties.

Members of the board shall serve for 3-year terms, except that members appointed to the initial board shall serve for terms of 1, 2, and 3 years as determined by the Secretary. Board members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of duties for the Board.

The bill would establish the duties of the board including the preparation of a budget, the recommendation on the amount of the assessment rate, the development of programs, and the keeping of records. The bill would also establish those expenses which may be paid with board funds, including implementation, administrative, and referendum costs, and sets a limit on the Board's administrative costs.

No funds collected by the board shall in any manner be used for the purpose of influencing legislation or governmental action, other than recommending to the Secretary amendments to this chapter.

The section describes the record keeping requirements for first-handlers, grower-shellers, and importers. These requirements include submitting reports and making books and records available for inspection when it is considered necessary by the Secretary to ensure compliance with this chapter. Any information obtained shall be kept confidential unless certain exceptions apply.

Section 1609. Permissive terms in orders

This section would require that the order provide authority to exempt from the order pecans used for nonfood uses and provide authority for the board to require safeguards against improper uses of such exemptions. The order may provide authority to designate different payment and reporting schedules for growers, grower-shellers and importers to recognize differences in marketing practices and procedures utilized in different production areas.

The order may provide for the establishment of appropriate programs or projects for the advertising and sales promotion of pecans and for the disbursement of necessary funds for such purposes except that any program shall be directed toward increasing the general demand for pecans and such activities shall comply with other restriction on the use of funds that are established in this chapter.

The order may provide for research and development projects and studies so that marketing and utilization of pecans may be encouraged.

The order may provide authority to accumulate reserve funds from assessments collected under this chapter to permit an effective and continuous program of research, development advertising and promotion in years when production and assessment income may be reduced, except that the total reserve fund may not exceed the amount budgeted for the operation of this chapter for 2 years. The order may provide authority to use funds collected under this chapter with the approval of the Secretary for the development and expansion of pecan sales in foreign markets.

Section 1610. Assessments

This section would provide for the assessment of all pecans produced in, or imported into, the United States. Assessments will be deducted from the payment made to a grower when the pecans are sold to a first handler. No lot of pecans shall be assessed more than once. Assessments shall be collected and remitted to the board by first handlers and grower-shellers. Importers shall pay the assessment when the pecans enter the United States.

Assessment rates shall be recommended by board and approved by the Secretary. Prior to the referendum, the maximum assessment shall be one-half cent per pound inshell or the equivalent. After the referendum is conducted, the maximum assessment shall be two cents per pound.

In addition to the maximum assessment rate prescribed in this paragraph, an additional one-quarter cent special state assessment may be remitted to the board in a manner prescribed by the Secretary for the purpose of utilizing such funds by the state board for research projects to promote pecans conducted pursuant to state law.

During the period beginning on the effective date of this chapter and ending on the date the referendum is conducted, an escrow account shall be established into which ten percent of the assessments collected shall be placed. If the referendum fails, producers and importers which paid assessments but do not support the program can receive a one-time refund. If the amount in escrow is insufficient to refund the eligible requests, the Board shall prorate the refunds among all eligible producers and importers demanding a refund.

Section 1611. Petition and review

This section provides that a person subject to an order established under this chapter may file a petition with the Secretary stating that the order or any provision or obligation imposed in connection with the order is not in accordance with law and requesting a modification to or exemption from the order. The petitioner shall be given the opportunity for a hearing on the petitions. After such hearing the Secretary shall make a ruling on the petition. Such ruling shall be final if in accordance with law.

The district courts of the United States in any district in which such person is an inhabitant or carries on business are vested with jurisdiction to review such ruling if a complaint for that purpose is filed within 20 days after the date of entry of such ruling.

Section 1612. Enforcement

This section would authorize the Secretary, following notice and hearing, to issue cease and desist orders and assess civil penalties for violations of any provision of this chapter. The United States district courts are authorized to enforce such orders and penalties, and the United States courts of appeals may review orders and penalties. The facts relating to any civil action authorized to be brought under this section shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action. Certain exceptions to this provision apply.

Any person who violates any provision of this chapter may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each violation. In addition or in lieu of, such civil penalty, the Secretary may issue a cease and desist order to prevent an individual from continuing such action.

A review process is established whereby an individual may appeal the findings of the Secretary.

Section 1613. Investigations and power to subpoena

The Secretary is authorized to make such investigations as are necessary to administer and enforce the chapter. The chapter provides the Secretary with the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths and affirmations, and take evidence.

Section 1614. Requirement of referendum

This section would provide that, not later than 24 months after the effective date of this chapter, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among growers, grower-shellers and importers, who during a representative period determined by the Secretary have been engaged in the production or importation of pecans for purpose of ascertaining whether the industry favors continuation, termination or suspension of the order.

If, as a result of any referendum conducted under this chapter, the Secretary determines that suspension or termination of an order is favored by a majority of the growers, grower-shellers, and importers voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall suspend or terminate collection of assessments under the order and suspend or terminate activity under the order in an orderly manner as soon as practicable.

The Secretary shall be reimbursed from any assessments collected by the board for any expenses incurred by the Department in connection with the conduct of any referendum under this chapter, except for the salaries of government employees.

A pecan grower, grower-sheller, or importer who chooses to vote in any referendum conducted under this chapter shall register in person prior to the voting period at the appropriate local ASCS office after receiving notice for the office concerning such referendum.

A pecan grower, grower-sheller, or importer who votes in any referendum shall vote in person at the appropriate local ASCS office. Each ASCS office shall notify all pecan growers and grower-shellers in the area at least 30 days prior to a referendum conducted under this chapter. Such notice shall explain the procedure established under this subsection.

Section 1615. Termination of the plan

This section provides that if the Secretary determines that the program established by this chapter or any provision of such program obstructs the purpose of this chapter, the Secretary shall terminate or suspend the operation of any such plan or provision.

The Secretary may conduct a referendum at any time, but must conduct a referendum upon the request of ten percent or more of the growers. The referendum shall be decided by a majority of the pecan producers and importers voting.

Section 1616. Amendments

This section would provide that the provisions of this chapter applicable to plans shall be applicable to amendments to plans.

Section 1617. Authorization of appropriations

This section provides that there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter. The funds so appropriated shall not be available for payment of the expenses or expenditures of the board in administering any provision of any order issued under this chapter.

Chapter 4—Mushrooms

Section 1701. Short title

This section provides that the chapter may be cited as the "Fresh Mushroom Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act."

Section 1702. Findings and declaration of policy

This section sets forth the findings of Congress with respect to the importance of fresh mushrooms and the need to maintain and expand existing markets and uses, and to develop new markets and uses, of fresh mushrooms; and that fresh mushrooms move in or directly burden interstate commerce. It also contains a declaration of Congress that it is in the public interest to authorize the establishment of an orderly procedure for developing, financing—through assessments—and carrying out a program of promotion, research, and consumer information for fresh mushrooms.

Section 1703. Definitions

This section provides definitions for words and phrases used in the chapter, including "mushrooms," which are defined as all varieties of cultivated mushrooms commercially grown or imported into the United States for the fresh market, except those that are to be processed. The term "first handler" will be defined to mean any person who acquires mushrooms from a producer and prepares for marketing or markets such mushrooms, including mushrooms of the person's own production. The order itself will describe the various entities that will be considered handlers.

Section 1704. Issuance of orders

This section will require the Secretary of Agriculture to publish a proposed fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order for public comment within 60 days after receipt of the proposal for the order from the industry. Subject to referendum, the final order shall be issued by the Secretary no later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

Section 1705. Required terms in orders

This section sets forth the required provisions of the fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order, including the establishment of a Mushroom Council (appointed by the Secretary from nominations submitted by producers and importers and the powers and duties of the Mushroom Council.

Section 1705(g) describes the assessment collection process under the order. Each first handler of mushrooms for the domestic fresh market produced in the United States will collect assessments from producers and remit them to the Mushroom Council. Importers and persons directly marketing mushrooms of their own production will pay assessments directly to the Mushroom Council. The rate of assessment is not to exceed one quarter cent per pound in the first year of the order, one half cent per pound in the second year of the order, and one cent per pound in the third and following years of the order. Beginning with the fourth year of the order, the order may be amended to permit assessments of up to two cents per pound. However, any such amendment that increases the assessment rate above one cent per pound will become effective only if approved in a referendum of producer and importers.

Producers and importers of less than 500,000 pounds annually will be exempted from the assessment.

Section 1705(h) will prohibit the Mushroom Council from using assessment funds to influence legislation or government action or policy, with the exceptions of: (1) recommending amendments to the order; and (2) developing voluntary grade and quality standards for mushrooms (which would be submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for promulgation under the separate authority of the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1946). These grades and standards would be administered by the Department of Agriculture on a user fee basis.

Section 1706. Referenda

This section provides that no later than 60 days prior to the effective date of the fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order, the Secretary of Agriculture must conduct a referendum among producers and importers to determine whether the order shall go into effect. The order will become effective if approved by a majority of the producers and importers voting if that majority produces and imports more than 50 percent of the fresh mushrooms produced and imported by all those voting in the referendum. Effective three years after the order has been in effect, if at least 30 percent of the fresh mushroom producers and importers request it, a reconfirmation referendum may be held by the Secretary. Further, a reconfirmation referendum must be conducted five years after the order becomes effective. In a reconfirmation referendum, the order will be suspended or terminated if such is favored by a majority of producers and importers voting and if that majority produces and imports more than 50 percent of the fresh mushrooms produced and imported by all those voting in the referendum.

Section 1707. Petition and review

This section will require that challenges to the fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order under this chapter be first brought before the Secretary of Agriculture for hearing and a ruling, and then if necessary in the United States district courts for review of the Secretary's ruling. Assessments will continue to be collected during the pendency of any such challenge.

Section 1708. Enforcement

This section will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, following notice and hearing, to issue cease and desist orders and assess civil penalties for violations of the fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order under this chapter. The United States district courts will be authorized to enforce such orders and penalties, and the United States courts of appeals may review such orders and penalties.

Section 1709. Investigations; power of subpoena and administer oaths and affirmations; aid of courts

This section will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make such investigations as are necessary to administer and enforce the chapter, and provide the Secretary with the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths and affirmations, and otherwise obtain records and evidence. The district courts will be authorized to enforce the subpoenas issued by the Secretary through use of their contempt power.

Section 1710. Savings provision

This section provides for the continued operation of current state mushroom promotion, research, or information programs.

Section 1711. Authorization of appropriations

This section will authorize the appropriation of such funds as are necessary to implement the chapter and the fresh mushroom promotion, research, and information order, although appropriated funds could not be used by the Mushroom Council to pay its administrative expenses.

Section 1712. Amendments

This section provides that the provisions of this chapter applicable to orders will be applicable to amendments to orders.

Section 1713. Authorization

This section authorizes such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

Chapter 5—Limes

Section 1801. Short title

This section provides that the bill may be cited as the "Fresh Lime Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act" (the "Act").

Section 1802. Findings; purposes; and limitations

This section highlights the need for improved domestic and foreign markets for limes and the increase in lime imports in recent years. This section also provides that the purpose of the Act is to establish an effective program for research, promotion, and consumer information regarding limes which will treat domestic and foreign limes equitably, and authorizes procedures for the development and financing of such a program. Major limitations are that the Act does not require quality standards or production controls for limes and that nothing in this Act shall be construed as a trade barrier.

Section 1803. Definitions

This section provides definitions of "consumer information," "research," "promotion," "producer," "importer," and other terms used throughout the Act.

Section 1804. Lime research promotion and consumer information order

This section gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to issue and amend lime orders and provides for submission, notice and public comment of orders. This section further requires that the Secretary act within 30-days after an initial proposal for an order if order is received and that the Secretary shall issue the order or amendment subject to such notice and public comment if the order or amendment will further the purposes of the Act. Additionally, Section 4 provides that an order shall be effective on the date issued.

Section 1805. Required terms of an order

This section specifies the composition of the Lime Board and provides that the Secretary shall appoint the board members. This section further provides that the seven members who are producers shall be appointed from individuals nominated by lime producers and that the three members who are importers shall be appointed from individuals nominated by lime importers. The one public representative is to be appointed from nominations of the Board. Should the producers and importers fail to nominate individuals, the Secretary is given discretion to appoint members as provided for in the order. A failure of the board to nominate a public representative allows such a member to be appointed by the Secretary without a nomination.

This section also provides that the Secretary shall appoint an alternate for each board member who is absent from a meeting or who becomes disqualified. Such alternate shall serve in the same manner as the member the alternate replaces. The terms of board members shall be for three years, with the terms of members first appointed to be staggered. This section also provides that if an alternate or a member ceases to be a member of the group for which he or she was appointed, the alternate or member shall be disqualified from serving. All board members serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel expenses.

This section enumerates the powers and duties of the board which include administering orders issued by the Secretary and prescribing rules and regulations to enforce the orders. This section provides that an order include annual budgets and plans as well as provide for the imposition and collection of assessments at a rate not to exceed $.01 per pound of fresh limes. The order provides a procedure for the collection of assessments and provides an exemption for producers, producer-handlers, or importers who produce, handle, or import less than 35,000 pounds of limes in a particular year and who submit an application to the Board.

Asssessments may be used for research, promotion, consumer information, and for reimbursing the Secretary for expenses incurred in conducting referenda. The assessment shall not be used for promotions which make false claims nor for the purpose of influencing government policy. This section further provides that individuals responsible for collecting assessments shall maintain books and records for inspection by the Secretary, that the board maintain books and records regarding funds received by it, and that the board submit an annual report to the Secretary and other reports as the Secretary may require. The information contained in such reports and records shall be kept confidential by all officers and employees of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the board unless the information is used in a suit or an administrative hearing. The issuance of general statements which do not identify the information furnished by any person and the publication of the identity of persons who violate the order is permitted under this section.

Section 1806. Permissive terms and provisions

This section provides authority to the board with approval of the Secretary to exempt limes exported from the United States and provides authority for payment to the board of that portion of an assessment under the Act which is greater than any assessment currently paid (under an existing marketing order). The board is also given the authority under this Act with approval of the Secretary to adjust schedules to recognize differences in marketing practices and procedures, to convene working groups, to accumulate reserve funds from assessments, and to use funds for the development and expansion of lime sales in foreign markets.

Section 1807. Petition and review

This section permits a person subject to the order to petition the Secretary stating that the order is not in accordance with the law and requesting a modification of the order. Provisions for a hearing and a ruling by the Secretary are also contained in this section. A person aggrieved by the ruling may obtain a review within 20-days in the district court within the jurisdiction in which he or she carries in lime-related business. Other procedures for service of process and remand to the Secretary are included in this section. Finally, this section provides that ongoing petition and review proceedings shall not impede the enforcement of regulations and orders promulgated under the Act.

Section 1808. Enforcement

This section vests the district courts with jurisdiction to enforce the orders or regulations issued under the Act. The Secretary is given discretion to refer civil actions involving enforcement of the Act to the Attorney General. Civil penalties for the violations of any provision of the order shall range between $500 and $5,000. Each violation is to be considered a separate offense. The Secretary may also issue cease and desist orders under this section to persons violating provisions of the Act. Notice of and an opportunity for a hearing must precede both a civil penalty assessment and a cease and desist order.

The penalty as well as the cease and desist order may be reviewed by the Court of Appeals in which the person resides or carries on business or in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The Secretary shall file the record with the court and findings of fact contained in the record shall be considered conclusive if supported by substantial evidence in the record taken as a whole. Any person who fails to obey a final and unappealable cease and desist order or who fails to obey an order after a final judgment is rendered in favor of the Secretary shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $500 for each offense. An opportunity for hearing and judicial review shall be afforded before the assessment of a civil penalty.

A similar failure to pay assessments shall result in referral to the Attorney General for recovery of the assessment. The final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

Sec. 1809. Investigations and subpoena power

This section gives the Secretary the power to undertake necessary investigations and issue subpoenas.

Section 1810. Initial referendum

This section requires the Secretary to conduct a referendum not later than two years after the date on which he first issues an order to determine whether the issuance of an order is approved or favored by a majority of producers, handlers, producer-handlers, and importers. Ballots shall be kept confidential in the referendum.

Section 1811. Suspension and termination

This section gives the Secretary the authority to suspend or terminate an order or a provision of an order if he determines that the order or provisions of the order do not effectuate the purposes of the Act. This Section also grants the Secretary authority to conduct referenda periodically to determine whether any order should remain in effect.

The Secretary is required to hold a referendum if the board requests one, if not less than 10 percent of the producers, producer-handlers, and importers submit a petition requesting a referendum, and whenever the Secretary conducts a referendum pursuant to an order issued under Section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c) reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

The Secretary shall suspend or terminate the order at the end of the marketing year if suspension or termination is favored by not less than a majority of those voting in a periodic referendum and if a majority of those voting in the periodic referendum produce and import more than 50 percent of the volume of limes produced and imported by those voting in the required referendum.

Section 1812. Amendments.

This section requires that provisions of this chapter applicable to orders will be applicable to amendments to orders.

Section 1813. Authorization

This section authorizes such funds as are necessary to carry out the chapter.

Section 1814. Regulation

This section provides the Secretary the power to issue necessary regulations.

Chapter 6—Potatoes

Section 1901. Short title

This section would provide a short title to the proposed legislation, entitled the "Potato Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989".

Section 1902. Findings and declaration of policy

This section would amend section 302 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act to include foreign countries in the declaration of policy regarding potatoes.

Section 1903. Definitions

This section will amend section 303 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act by adding importers to the list of definitions.

Section 1904. Authority to issue plans

This section would amend section 304 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act to make potatoes produced in foreign countries subject to any plan issued by the Secretary.

Section 1905. Alternative plan

This section would amend the Potato Research and Promotion Act by inserting a new section 308A. This new section will require the Secretary to issue a new plan which is substantially the same as the present plan except that it will assess importers and preclude refunds. Subsection (a) requires that the Secretary publish the proposed alternative plan required by this section within 60 days of the receipt of a request from a producer or producer organization to implement such a plan. Each board member that is sitting on the effective date of the alternative plan shall continue to serve the full term of appointment of the member.

Subsection (b) provides for the establishment by the Secretary of a National Potato Promotion Board. The board shall have powers to administer such plan, to make rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and conditions of such plan, to receive, investigate and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of such plan and to recommend to the Secretary amendments to such plan. The board is to be composed of representatives of producers and up to five representatives of importers and the public appointed by the Secretary. Representatives of producers and importers shall be nominated by producers and importers. Public representatives shall be nominated by the Board.

If producers, or importers fail to select nominees for appointment, the Secretary may appoint persons. Inclusion of public representatives on the board shall not be subject to approval in a referendum. Board members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for reasonable expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the board. The alternative plan provides that the board shall prepare and submit to the Secretary for approval of the Secretary a budget of the anticipated expenses and disbursements of the board in administering the plan.

Subsection (c) provides that the board under the alternative plan will recommend assessment levels to the Secretary. The Secretary shall fix the assessment rate at not more than 2 cents per 100 pounds of potatoes handled, except that if approved by producers and importers, the rate of assessment shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent of the immediate past 10-calendar year United States average price received for potatoes by growers. Funds collected by the board shall be used for research, development, advertising or promotion of potatoes and potato products as well as administration, maintenance and function of the board, including any referendum and administrative costs incurred by the Department.

Payment to the Department of Agriculture for any referendum and administrative costs shall not be subject to producer or importer approval in a referendum. No advertising or sales promotion program shall make any reference to private brand names or use false or unwarranted claims in behalf of potatoes or their competing products. No funds collected by the board shall be used for the purpose of influencing any government policy or action, except to recommend amendments to the alternative plan. The alternative plan shall not provide for a refund of funds collected by the board.

Subsection (d) provides that the alternative plan shall provide that the board shall, subject to the rate and use specified in this section, develop and submit to the Secretary for approval any research, development, advertising or promotion program or projects for approval by the Secretary before becoming effective.

The Board, under the alternative plan, shall have the authority to enter into contracts or agreements with the approval of the Secretary for carrying out any research, development, advertising or promotion program or projects. These programs shall be paid for out of funds collected under this chapter.

The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall maintain books and records and shall submit to the Secretary such reports from time to time as may be prescribed for appropriate accounting and shall cause a full audit report to be submitted to the Secretary at the end of each fiscal period.

Subsection (g) provides that during the period beginning on the effective date of the alternative plan and ending on the date of the referendum on the alternative plan, the board shall establish an escrow account and place 10 percent of all collected funds in such account.

During the period prior to the referendum and subject to proper submission of demand, and proof of payment, producers and importers may request a refund of their assessments from the escrow account provided that the producer was responsible for submitting the payments, that the producer did not support the program and that the alternative plan was not approved under a referendum. In providing such refund, if the amount of funds held in the escrow account are not sufficient to refund the total amount of assessments demanded by all eligible producers and importers and if the alternative plan is not approved, the board shall prorate the amount of such refunds among all eligible producers and importers who demand such refund. The alternative plan shall apply to all 50 states.

Section 1906. Assessments

This section amends section 310 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act by providing an assessment on imported tablestock, frozen, or processed potatoes for ultimate consumption by humans and seed potatoes. The assessment shall be established by the board so that the effective assessment rate shall equal that established on domestic production and shall be paid by the importer to the Potato Board at the time of entry into the United States. Each importer shall maintain a separate record indicating the total quantity of tablestock, frozen, or processed potatoes for ultimate human consumption or seed potatoes imported that are included under the terms of the plan and such other information as may be prescribed by the board.

Importers responsible for payment of assessments shall maintain and make available for inspection by the Secretary such books and records as are required by the plan, shall file reports at the times prescribed by the plan and shall make such information available to the board and Secretary as is appropriate. Assessments collected under this section shall be used to reimburse the Secretary for costs incurred by the Secretary for implementing and administering the amendments made by this act.

Section 1907. Referendum requirement for alternative plan

This section would amend section 314 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act by requiring that not later than 120 days after the publication of the proposed alternative plan the Secretary will issue the proposed plan. Not later than 24 months after the effective date of these amendments, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among producers and importers, who during a representative period determined by the Secretary have been engaged in the production or importation of potatoes. The alternative plan shall be continued only if the Secretary determines that the alternative plan has not been disapproved by a majority of the producers and importers voting in the referendum. If such a plan is not approved, the Secretary shall terminate such alternative plan and the original plan issued under section 308 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act.

Chapter 7—Honey

Section 1921. Short title

This section would provide a short title to the proposed legislation.

Section 1922. Definitions

This section would amend section 3 of the Honey, Research, Promotion and Consumer Information Act to provide that the term "exporter" shall be defined as a person who exports honey or honey products from the United States.

Section 1923. Required terms of order

This section would amend section 7(b) of the Honey Research, Promotion and Consumer Information Act (the "Honey Act") by providing that each state association would nominate one person from the state to serve on the national Honey Nominations Committee and that the Committee would nominate one person for each member or alternate position on the Honey Board.

Subsection 7(c) of the Honey Act would be amended to permit one of the two seats on the Honey Board currently allotted to importers to be filled by an exporter. The field of qualified importers is limited and when the current members and alternates must step down at the end of their terms, replacing them will be difficult. Also, imports have been reduced since the marketing loan program was instituted and exporters have been increased so that it would be appropriate to substitute an exporter for an importer on the board if necessary. Imports have been reduced from a high of 138.2 million pounds in 1985 to 55.9 million pounds in 1987.

Subsection 7(c) of the Honey Act also would be amended to permit a member of the board or an alternate to serve out that person's term if, as a result of redistricting, the residence of the member or alternate is no longer in the region from which the person was appointed. Producer districts are reviewed every five years and may be redrawn as a result of the review. The amendment assures continuity on the Board. A person is selected for a three year term and under the amendment would serve an area in which he no longer resided for a relatively brief period.

Subsection 7(e) of the Honey Act would be amended to provide that those producers or producer-packers who produce, or produce and handle, less than 6,000 pounds of honey per year and those importers who import less than 6,000 pounds of honey per year would qualify for the assessment exemption only if the honey were consumed at home by such person, or donated or distributed directly through retail outlets by the producer, producer-packer or importer. The amendment simplifies administration of the exemption by eliminating the exemption where honey is sold to handlers or is placed under a price support loan. Once honey moves into the normal stream of the commerce, the assessment is automatically collected and the Honey Board must later make reimbursement upon request.

The amendment clarifies current law with regard to assessment collections from producers/importers of less than 6,000 pounds. Such producers would be eligible from exemption payments only if the honey was not placed in the stream of commerce.

A new subsection (k) would provide that patents, copyrights, inventions, product formulations, or publications developed with board funds will be the property of the board and any income derived therefrom to inure to the benefit of the board to be used for program purposes. This amendment would clarify existing law.

Section 1924. Collection of assessments; refunds

This section would amend section 9 of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act to provide for the assessment to be deducted any time a disbursement of loan funds is made under the Honey Price Support Loan Program and for the producer promptly to receive a statement of the deduction of assessments made instead of receiving such proof after the loan is redeemed. It also provides for the producer to be responsible for payment of the assessment if the Department of Agriculture should fail to make the deduction.

This amendment and the changes made by Section 1923 are designed to enable a producer who received a price support loan promptly to receive a statement of the assessments deducted from the loan and to qualify for a refund, even though final settlement had not been made. Currently refunds cannot be made until final settlement of the loan. Refunds cannot even be made when portions of the money under loan are redeemed. The current law effectively delays refunds for a number of months, often until the maturity date of the loan.

Also the amendment makes clear that the producer is responsible for payment of the assessment if the Commodity Credit Corporation should fail to collect the assessment, as has occurred on occasion.

Paragraph 3 would amend section (h)(1) to provide that each importer will be eligible for refunds up to an amount that represents the same percentage of assessments collected from that importer as the percentage of refunds collected from producers.

At present the percentage limitation on refunds to importers is construed as applying collectively to refunds received by all importers, rather than to refunds that may be made to each importer. This results in importers who file early for a refund receiving a refund of all assessments paid by them; while those who delay filing may not qualify at all for a refund if the overall limitation on importer refunds had been reached. The amendment would clarify the intent of existing law and would result in all importers being treated the same.

Section 1925. Investigations and power to subpoena

This section would provide that the Secretary may make such investigations as necessary for the administration of the bill. In conducting those investigations he may subpoena witnesses and undertake related activities.

Section 1926. Effective date

This section would provide that the amendments made by this bill would become effective upon issuance of implementing regulations after notice and public comment, without the necessity for a referendum of producers.

Chapter 8—Kiwifruit and Other Fruit

This section amends section 8e(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act by adding kiwifruit, nectarines and plums to the list of the products covered by that section. Section 8e(a) requires that imported products meet the domestic product standards during appropriate periods in certain markets.

Chapter 9—Papaya

This section adds papayas to the products listed under section 8e(a) as discussed with regard to Chapter 8.

Chapter 10—Eggs

Section 1961. Eggs

This section will amend section 12 of the Egg Research and Consumer Information Act to provide that producers with fewer than 30,000 laying hens shall be exempt from payment of egg research and promotion order assessments under that Act, an increase from the current exemption level of 3,000 laying hens.

The amendment also provides that the number of laying hens owned by relatives or business partners of, or other entities closely related to, a producer will be attributed to the producer for purposes of determining whether the producer is exempt from the payment of assessments.

The Secretary will be required to propose an amendment to the egg research and promotion order issued under the Act within 30 days after enactment to reflect the changes made by this amendment. Public notice and comment will be required. The amendment will become effective without the conduct of a referendum of the producers.

Chapter 11—Peanuts

This section would amend section 8b of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, reenacted with amendments by the Agricultureal Marketing Agreement Act of 1937. It would require the inspection of all peanuts whether or not a person has entered into the marketing agreement. All peanuts, whether produced by a signer or a non-signer of the marketing agreement, must meet the quality requirements of the agreement. Violation of the subsection will result in a penalty equal to 140 percent of the support price of quota peanuts.

Chapter 12—Vidalia Onions

This section will prohibit the use of the label "vidalia onions" if the onions are produced outside the production area as defined in Federal Marketing Order No. 955. Such misbranding will be a violation of paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 2 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act.

Subtitle A—Agricultural Commodity Programs

SEC. 1101. COTTON ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM.

Effective only for the 1990 crop of upland cotton, section 103A(f)(2)(A) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1444-1(f)(2)(A)) is amended by striking "(not to exceed 25 percent)" and inserting "(not to exceed 25 percent or, in the case of the 1990 crop, if the Secretary projects a carryover of more than 7,000,000 bales (as of July 31, 1991) of upland cotton, not to exceed 30 percent)".

SEC. 1102. OAT ACREAGE LIMITATION PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Effective only for the 1990 crop of feed grains, section 105C(f)(2)(G) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1444e(f)(2)(G)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(i)" after the subparagraph designation; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(ii) In the case of the 1990 crop of oats, the Secretary may establish a percentage reduction for oats in accordance with paragraph (1) of less than 5 percent. If the Secretary does not establish a percentage reduction requirement for oats, the Secretary shall ensure that the crop acreage bases established for the farm and the farm acreage base are not increased as a result of this clause.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Effective only for the 1990 crop of feed grains, section 105C of such Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (d)(1), by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) This subsection shall not apply to the 1990 crop of oats."; and

(2) in subsection (f)(1), by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) As a condition of eligibility for loans, purchases, and payments for the 1990 crop of oats, the producers of oats on a farm may not plant oats in excess of the crop acreage base for the farm.".

SEC. 1103. PURCHASE PRICE FOR NONFAT DRY MILK AND BUTTER.

Section 201(d)(1) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (C)—

(A) in clause (ii), by inserting after "Except as provided in" the following: "clause (iii) and"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) In carrying out this paragraph during calendar year 1990, the Secretary shall offer to purchase butter and nonfat dry milk for not less than $1.10 per pound for butter and $0.8475 per pound for nonfat dry milk, except that the Secretary may allocate the rate of price support between the purchase prices for nonfat dry milk and butter in such manner as the Secretary determines will result in the lowest level of expenditures by the Commodity Credit Corporation and shall notify the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate of such determination."; and

(2) in subparagraph (D)(i), by striking "each of the calendar years 1988 and 1990" and inserting "calendar year 1988".

SEC. 1104. REDUCTION OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS FOR 1990 CROPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title IV of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 425. REDUCTION OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS FOR 1990 CROPS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amount of deficiency payments made available to producers of the 1990 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under sections 107D(c), 105C(c), 103A(c), and 101A(c), respectively, shall be reduced by—

"(1) in the case of wheat, 2.30 cents per bushel;

"(2) in the case of corn, 2.30 cents per bushel (and a comparable amount for other feed grains, as determined by the Secretary);

"(3) in the case of upland cotton, .51 cents per pound; and

"(4) in the case of rice, 5.1 cents per hundredweight.

"(b) APPLICATION TO ADVANCE DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.—To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall apply the reduction required under subsection (a) to any advance deficiency payment made available to producers of the 1990 crops under section 107C.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Effective only for the 1990 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice, section 107C(a)(2)(G) of such Act (7 U.S.C. 1445b-2(a)(2)(G)) is amended by inserting after "subsection" the following: "(taking into consideration any reduction in the payment made under section 425)".

SEC. 1105. PLANTING OF SOYBEANS, SUNFLOWERS, AND SAFFLOWERS ON PERMITTED ACREAGE.

(a) PLANTING OF SOYBEANS, SUNFLOWERS, AND SAFFLOWERS ON PERMITTED ACREAGE.—Effective only for the 1990 crops, subsection (e) of section 504 the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1464(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(1) Effective for the 1990 crops, the Secretary shall, subject to paragraph (2), permit producers on a farm to plant soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers on a portion specified by the producer (but in any event not more than 25 percent) of the producers' 1990 wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, and rice permitted acreage, as determined by the Secretary.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall establish a sign-up period during which the producers on a farm, participating in the 1990 crop of wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, or rice price support and production adjustment program, must state their intentions regarding use of the increased planting provision under paragraph (1).

"(B) After termination of the sign-up period under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall estimate whether, based on the anticipated additional soybean, sunflower, and safflower plantings of the crop, the average market price for the 1990 crop of soybeans will be below 115 percent of the loan rate established for the 1989 crop of soybeans.

"(C) If the Secretary estimates that the average market price for the 1990 crop of soybeans will be below 115 percent of such loan rate, the Secretary shall reduce the percentage of permitted acreage on the farm that may be planted to soybeans, sunflowers, and safflowers to a level, or prohibit such plantings, as is necessary to ensure, to the extent practicable, that the average soybean market price does not fall below 115 percent of such loan rate.

"(D) The Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a statement setting forth the reasons for any reduction in the permitted planting percentage, or prohibition on such plantings, under this paragraph.

"(3)(A) For the purposes of determining the farm acreage base or the crop acreage bases for the farm, any acreage on the farm on which soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers are planted under this subsection shall be considered to be planted to the program crop for which soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers are substituted.

"(B) The Secretary may not make program benefits other than soybean or sunflower seed price support loans and purchases available to producers with respect to acreage planted to soybeans, sunflowers, or safflowers under this subsection and shall ensure that the crop acreage bases established for the farm and the farm acreage base are not increased due to such plantings.".

(b) FEED GRAIN ACREAGE LIMITATION PROGRAM.—Effective only for the 1990 crop of feed grains, section 105C(f)(1)(C) of such Act (7 U.S.C. 1444e(f)(1)(C)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(C)", "1990", "(i)", and "(ii)" and inserting "(C)(i)", "1989", "(I)", and "(II)", respectively; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(ii) In the case of the 1990 crop of feed grains, if the Secretary estimates, not later than September 30, 1989, that the quantity of corn on hand in the United States on the first day of the marketing year for that crop (not including any quantity of corn of that crop) will be—

"(I) more than 2,000,000,000 bushels, the Secretary shall provide for an acreage limitation program (as described in paragraph (2)) under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not less than 12½ percent nor more than 20 percent;

"(II) less than 2,000,000,000 bushels but more than 1,800,000,000 bushels, the Secretary shall provide for an acreage limitation program (as described in paragraph (2)) under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not less than 10 percent nor more than 12½ percent; or

"(III) 1,800,000,000 bushels or less, the Secretary may provide for an acreage limitation program (as described in paragraph (2)) under which the acreage planted to feed grains for harvest on a farm would be limited to the feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not more than 10 percent.".

SEC. 1106. COST REDUCTION OPTIONS.

Section 1009(d) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308a(d)) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "nonrecourse loan program" the following "(including the program authorized by section 110 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445e))";

(2) by striking "savings" and inserting "benefits"; and

(3) by striking "forfeited commodity," and all that follows through the period at the end of the sentence and inserting "forfeited commodity.".

SEC. 1107. REPLANTED ACREAGE.

Section 110 of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 (Public Law 101-82; 7 U.S.C. 1421 note) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 110. NO DOUBLE PAYMENTS ON REPLANTED ACREAGE.

"(a) REDUCTION OF DISASTER PAYMENTS.—Effective only for producers on a farm who receive disaster payments under this subtitle for a crop of a commodity, the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce such payments by an amount that reflects the value (as determined under subsection (c)) of any crop such producers plant for harvest in 1989 to replace the crop for which disaster payments are received.

"(b) REPLACEMENT CROPS.—For purposes of subsection (a), a crop shall be considered to be planted to replace the crop for which disaster payments are received if (because of loss or damage to the first crop due to damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989) the second crop is planted on acreage on which the producers planted, or were prevented from planting, the first crop.

"(c) ADMINISTRATION.—

"(1) DETERMINATION OF VALUE.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) only consider any production of the second crop that is in excess of 40 percent of the county average yield for such crop;

"(B) base the value of the excess second crop production on average market prices for the second crop during a representative period; and

"(C) reduce the value of such excess second crop production by 25 percent.

"(2) HISTORICAL CROPPING PATTERNS.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall take into account the historical cropping patterns of producers.

"(3) REDUCTION ONLY APPLICABLE TO REPLANTED ACREAGE.—The reduction provided for in this subsection shall only be applied against payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted.

"(d) SEPARATE CONSIDERATION OF PLANTED AND REPLANTED ACREAGE.—In determining disaster payments under this subtitle, the Secretary shall consider separately payments due on acreage that was not replanted and payments due with respect to acreage that was replanted.".

Subtitle B—Agricultural Trade Programs

SEC. 1201. EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM.

(a) REDUCTION OF EXPENDITURES.—During fiscal year 1990, except to the extent provided for under section 4301 of the Agricultural Competitiveness and Trade Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-418; 7 U.S.C. 1446 note), the Commodity Credit Corporation shall not make available to exporters, processors, and foreign importers under the authority of section 5(f) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714c(f)) more than $650,000,000 in commodities of the Commodity Credit Corporation to enhance the export of United States commodities by making the price of such commodities competitive in the world market.

(b) PROMOTION OF UNITED STATES MEAT EXPORTS.—

(1) COMMISSARIES.—During each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall, in carrying out the export enhancement program established pursuant to section 5(f) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714c(f)), promote the export of United States meat, including poultry products, to commissaries on military installations in the European Community.

(2) FUNDING.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Commodity Credit Corporation shall make available to carry out paragraph (1) not less than $14,000,000 (of the amount referred to in subsection (a)) in funds or commodities for fiscal year 1990, not less than $9,300,000 in funds or commodities for fiscal year 1991, and not less than $4,600,000 in funds or commodities for fiscal year 1992.

(B) TRANSPORTATION COSTS.—Funds or commodities shall be made available under this subsection only to the extent that funds are made available by the Department of Defense for the costs of transporting the meat to the commissaries.

(3) REIMBURSEMENT OF CORPORATION.—Section 4 of the Act of July 16, 1943 (57 Stat. 566, chapter 241; 15 U.S.C. 713a-9) shall not apply to services performed, losses sustained, operating costs incurred, or commodities purchased or delivered by the Commodity Credit Corporation pursuant to this subsection.

SEC. 1202. TARGETED EXPORT ASSISTANCE.

Section 1124(a) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1736s(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2); and

(2) by striking paragraph (3) and inserting the following:

"(3) for the fiscal year 1989, the Secretary shall use under this section not less than $325,000,000 of the funds of, or commodities owned by, the Corporation; and

"(4) for the fiscal year 1990, the Secretary shall use under this section not less than $225,000,000 of the funds of, or commodities owned by, the Corporation.".

SEC. 1203. PROHIBITION ON DUTY DRAWBACK CLAIMS BY EXPORTERS WHO USE CERTAIN EXPORT PROMOTION PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A person shall be ineligible for participation in any export program established under title I or title III of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1691 et seq.), or in any other export credit, credit guarantee, bonus, or other export program carried out through, or administered by, the Commodity Credit Corporation or carried out with funds made available pursuant to section 32 of the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1935 (7 U.S.C. 612c) with respect to the export of any agricultural commodity or product that has been or will be used as the basis for a claim of a refund, as a drawback, pursuant to section 313(j)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1313(j)(2)), of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

(b) VEGETABLE OIL.—A person shall be ineligible for participation in any of the export programs referred to in subsection (a) with respect to the export of vegetable oil or a vegetable oil product that has been or will be used as the basis for a claim of a refund, as a drawback, pursuant to section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

(c) CERTIFICATION.—A person applying to export any agricultural commodity or product under the export programs referred to in subsection (a) shall certify that none of the commodity or product has been or will be used as the basis of a claim for any refund specified in subsection (a), except that a person applying to export any vegetable oil or vegetable oil product under such programs shall certify that none of the vegetable oil or vegetable oil product has been or will be used as the basis of a claim for any refund specified in subsection (b).

(d) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations to carry out this section.

(e) APPLICABILITY.—This section shall not apply to quantities of agricultural commodities and products with respect to which an exporter has entered into a contract, prior to the effective date of this section, for an export sale.

Subtitle C—General Provisions

SEC. 1301. PREPAYMENT AND INTEREST RATE ADJUSTMENT OF FEDERAL FINANCING BANK LOANS MADE TO RURAL ELECTRIFICATION AND TELEPHONE SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 306A of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 936A) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 306A. PREPAYMENT AND INTEREST RATE ADJUSTMENT OF FEDERAL FINANCING BANK LOANS.

"(a) PREPAYMENT.—If on the date of enactment of this section a borrower has an outstanding loan made by the Federal Financing Bank and guaranteed by the Administrator under section 306, the borrower may prepay such loan or an advance of such loan, or any portion thereof, at any time or times without limitation as to dollar amount by paying the outstanding principal balance (plus accrued interest) due on such loan or loan advance, or any portion thereof, being prepaid, if—

"(1) private capital, with the existing loan guarantee, is used to replace the loan, or, at the option of the borrower, private capital (including internally generated funds), is used to prepay the loan; and

"(2) the borrower certifies that any savings from such prepayment will be—

"(A) passed on to its customers;

"(B) in a case of financial hardship, used to improve the financial strength of the borrower; or

"(C) used to mitigate future rate increases.

"(b) INTEREST RATE ADJUSTMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If on the date of enactment of this section a borrower has an outstanding loan made by the Federal Financing Bank and guaranteed by the Administrator under section 306, the interest rate on such loan or an advance of such loan, or portion thereof, shall, at the option of the borrower, be adjusted to the Federal Financing Bank rate then in effect for new Federal Financing Bank loans of a maturity equal to the remaining life of the Federal Financing Bank loans or loan advances, or portion thereof, being adjusted.

"(2) FEE.—Such Federal Financing Bank rate shall include a fee of .00126, consistent with the calculation of Federal Financing Bank rates to borrowers under this Act during fiscal year 1989.

"(3) ADMINISTRATION.—An adjustment in an interest rate under paragraph (1) shall not be considered a prepayment of an existing loan. None of the terms of such loan may be amended under paragraph (1) other than such adjustment in the interest rate (including the fee) as provided for in this subsection and the payment of a penalty as provided for in subsection (d).

"(c) SUBSEQUENT REFINANCING.—Any guarantee of a loan used to make a prepayment under subsection (a) may be transferred to any loan subsequently used to refinance the loan used to make the prepayment without condition and shall be available for the remaining term originally agreed to by the Administrator.

"(d) PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A penalty, as provided by this subsection, shall be paid to the Federal Financing Bank by the borrower at the time of the interest rate adjustment.

"(2) INTEREST RATE ADJUSTMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the interest on a loan or loan advance, or any portion thereof, is adjusted as provided by subsection (b), the borrower shall pay a penalty, as provided in this paragraph.

"(B) MULTIPLE ADJUSTMENTS.—Such penalty shall be paid by the borrower each time the borrower receives an interest rate adjustment on a Federal Financing Bank loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, as provided in subsection (b). If the interest rate is adjusted on the same Federal Financing Bank loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, more than once, such penalty shall be paid each time such adjustment occurs.

"(C) AMOUNT.—The amount of a penalty imposed under this paragraph shall be determined by multiplying—

"(i) the principal balance of each Federal Financing Bank loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, for which the interest rate is adjusted; by

"(ii) the difference between the annual percent interest rate on such loan or loan advance prior to adjustment and the annual percent interest rate at the time of adjustment of new Treasury borrowings of the same maturity as the average maturity on the Federal Financing Bank loans or loan advances, or portion thereof, for which the interest rate is adjusted.

"(e) NO ADDITIONAL CHARGES.—If prepayment or interest rate adjustment of a loan (or loan advance) is made under this section no sums in addition to the payment of the outstanding principal of the loan or loan advance, or portion thereof, being prepaid, plus accrued interest and the penalty assessed under subsection (d), shall be charged, as the result of such prepayment or adjustment, against—

"(1) the borrower;

"(2) the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund; or

"(3) the Rural Electrification Administration.".

(b) REGULATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than the effective date prescribed in subsection (c), the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations to carry out the amendment made by subsection (a).

(2) PREPAYMENT AND INTEREST RATE ADJUSTMENT FACILITATION.—In issuing such regulations, the Secretary shall—

(A) facilitate prepayment and interest rate adjustment of loan advances;

(B) provide for full processing of each prepayment request within 30 days of its submission to the Rural Electrification Administration;

(C) provide for full processing of each interest rate adjustment request within 10 days of its submission to the Rural Electrification Administration; and

(D) except as provided in section 306A of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, impose no restriction that increases the cost to borrowers of obtaining private financing for prepayment or inhibits the ability of the borrower to enter into prepayment and interest rate adjustment arrangements pursuant to such section.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1302. RESEARCH INTO NEW COMMERCIAL PRODUCTS FROM NATURAL PLANT MATERIALS.

The National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 is amended by inserting after section 1473D (7 U.S.C. 3319d) the following new section:

"SEC. 1473E. RESEARCH INTO NEW COMMERCIAL PRODUCTS FROM NATURAL PLANT MATERIALS.

"The Secretary may—

"(1) conduct fundamental and applied research related to the development of new commercial products derived from natural plant materials for industrial, medical, and agricultural applications; and

"(2) participate with colleges and universities, other Federal agencies, and private sector entities in conducting such research.".

SEC. 1303. PURCHASES OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE CORPORATION STOCK BY FARM CREDIT SYSTEM INSTITUTIONS.

(a) DELAYED EFFECTIVE DATE FOR STOCK PURCHASE REQUIREMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amendments to section 6.29 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 U.S.C. 2278b-9) made by section 646 of the Rural Development, Agriculture, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1989 (Public Law 100-460; 102 Stat. 2266) shall be effective on October 1, 1992.

(b) PAYMENTS.—

(1) FOUR ANNUAL PAYMENTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Financial Assistance Corporation shall pay, out of the Trust Fund established under section 6.25 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 U.S.C. 2278b-5), to each of the institutions of the Farm Credit System that purchased stock in the Financial Assistance Corporation under section 6.29 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971, four annual payments as provided in this subsection.

(2) TIMING OF PAYMENTS.—The annual payments provided for by this subsection shall be made available as soon as practicable after October 1 of each of the calendar years 1989 through 1992.

(3) CALCULATION OF FIRST PAYMENT.—The first annual payment made available under this subsection shall be in an amount equal to—

(i) a percentage equal to 1.5 times the average rate of interest received by the Financial Assistance Corporation from March 30, 1988, through September 30, 1989; times

(ii) the difference between $177,000,000 and 4.4 percent of the amount of the cumulative amount of the bonds issued by the Financial Assistance Corporation by September 30, 1989.

(4) CALCULATION OF REMAINING PAYMENTS.—The second, third, and fourth payments made available under this subsection shall be in an amount equal to—

(i) a percentage equal to the average rate of interest received by the Financial Assistance Corporation during each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992; times

(ii) the difference between $177,000,000 and 4.4 percent of the amount of the cumulative amount of the bonds issued by September 30 of each of such fiscal years.

(5) DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL PAYMENTS.—Annual payments due under this subsection shall be made available to each institution described in paragraph (1) in an amount equal to the total amount of annual payments to be made available times the ratio of the amount of stock each institution purchased divided by $177,000,000.

SEC. 1304. CALCULATION OF PREMIUMS BY FARM CREDIT SYSTEM INSURANCE CORPORATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5.55 of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 U.S.C. 2277a-(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (a) and inserting the following new subsection:

"(a) AMOUNT IN FUND NOT EXCEEDING SECURE BASE AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Until the aggregate of amounts in the Farm Credit Insurance Fund exceeds the secure base amount, the annual premium due from any insured System bank for any calendar year shall be equal to the sum of—

"(A) the annual average principal outstanding (as adjusted under paragraph (2)) for such year on loans made by the bank that are in accrual status, multiplied by 0.0015; and

"(B) the annual average principal outstanding (as adjusted under paragraph (2)) for such year on loans made by the bank that are in nonaccrual status, multiplied by 0.0025.

"(2) ADJUSTMENT OF ANNUAL AVERAGE PRINCIPAL OUTSTANDING.—The Corporation, under procedures and criteria established by regulation, shall adjust downward the annual average principal outstanding for a bank during a year to exclude all or a portion of any principal outstanding on Government-guaranteed loans made by the bank and loans made by associations serviced by such bank (as described in subsection (d)(1)), as appropriate on an actuarial basis to more accurately reflect the reduced risks associated with such loans for the holders of insured obligations of insured System banks.

"(3) DEFINITION OF GOVERNMENT-GUARANTEED LOANS.—As used in this subsection and subsection (c), the term 'Government-guaranteed loan' means a loan, or portion of a loan, made by an insured System bank that carries a full faith and credit performance or loss guarantee or surety or an unconditional guarantee of the United States Government or any State government, or of any department, agency, bureau, board, commission, or establishment thereof, or any corporation wholly owned directly or indirectly by the United States or any State.";

(2) in subsection (b), by inserting after "for the following calendar year" the following: ", as determined under subsection (a),";

(3) in subsection (c), by inserting after "at such time" the following: "(adjusted downward to exclude, from that portion of such obligations attributable to Government-guaranteed loans made by insured System banks and loans made by associations serviced by such banks (as described in subsection (d)(1)), an amount that reflects all risk-based reductions of principal outstanding on such guaranteed loans for purposes of establishing premium rates under subsection (a), as determined by the Corporation)"; and

(4) in subsection (d), by striking paragraph (1) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(1) by any production credit association or any other association making direct loans under authority transferred to it under section 7.6, that is able to make such loans because such association is receiving, or has received, funds provided through the Farm Credit Bank;".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective on January 1, 1989.

Subtitle D—Promotion Programs

CHAPTER 1—SOYBEANS

SEC. 1401. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Soybean Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act".

SEC. 1402. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) soybeans are an important source of nutritious foods that are a valuable part of the human diet and are an important feedstuff for the livestock industry;

(2) the production of soybeans plays a significant role in the economy of the United States in that soybeans are produced by thousands of soybean producers, processed by numerous processing entities, and soybeans and soybean products produced in the United States are consumed by people and livestock throughout the United States and foreign countries;

(3) soybeans and soybean products should be readily available and marketed efficiently to ensure that consumers have an adequate supply of soybean products at a reasonable price;

(4) the maintenance and expansion of existing markets and development of new markets for soybeans and soybean products are vital to the welfare of soybean producers and those concerned with marketing, using, and producing soybeans and soybean products, as well as to the general economy of the United States, and are necessary to ensure the ready availability and efficient marketing of soybeans and soybean products;

(5) there exist established State and national organizations conducting soybean promotion, research, and consumer education programs that are invaluable to the efforts of promoting the consumption of soybeans and soybean products;

(6) the cooperative development, financing, and implementation of a coordinated national program of soybean promotion, research, and consumer information are necessary to maintain and expand existing markets and develop new markets for soybeans and soybean products; and

(7) soybeans and soybean products move in interstate and foreign commerce, and soybeans and soybean products that do not move in such channels of commerce directly burden or affect interstate commerce in soybeans and soybean products.

(b) POLICY.—It, therefore, is declared to be the policy of Congress that it is in the public interest to authorize the establishment, through the exercise of the powers provided in this chapter, of an orderly procedure for developing, financing (through adequate assessments on all soybeans produced domestically), and implementing a program of promotion, research, and consumer information designed—

(1) to strengthen the position of the soybean industry in the marketplace;

(2) to maintain and expand existing domestic and foreign markets and uses for soybeans and soybean products; and

(3) to develop new markets and uses for soybeans and soybean products.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this chapter may be construed to provide for the control of production or otherwise limit the right of individual producers to produce soybeans.

SEC. 1403. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this chapter:

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the United Soybean Board established under section 1405(b).

(2) COMMERCE.—The term "commerce" means interstate, foreign, or intrastate commerce.

(3) COMMITTEE.—The term "Committee" means the Soybean Program Coordinating Committee established under section 1405(e).

(4) CONSUMER EDUCATION.—The term "consumer information" means information that will assist consumers and other persons in making evaluations and decisions regarding the purchasing, preparing, and use of soybeans or soybean products.

(5) DEPARTMENT.—The term "Department" means the United States Department of Agriculture.

(6) FIRST PURCHASER.—The term "first purchaser" means—

(A) except as provided in subparagraph (B), any person buying or otherwise acquiring after harvest from a producer soybeans produced by such producer; or

(B) in any case in which soybeans are pledged as collateral for a loan issued under any Federal price support loan program, the Commodity Credit Corporation.

(7) INDUSTRY INFORMATION.—The term "industry information" means information and programs that will lead to the development of new markets, new marketing strategies, increased efficiency, or activities to enhance the image of the soybean industry.

(8) MARKETING.—The term "marketing" means the sale or other disposition of soybeans or soybean products in any channel of commerce.

(9) NET MARKET PRICE.—The term "net market price" means—

(A) except as provided in subparagraph (B), the sales price received by a producer for soybeans after adjustments for any premium or discount based on grading or quality factors; or

(B) for soybeans pledged as collateral for a loan issued under any Federal price support loan program, the principal amount of the loan.

(10) ORDER.—The term "order" means an order issued under section 1404.

(11) PERSON.—The term "person" means any individual, group of individuals, partnership, corporation, association, cooperative, or any other entity.

(12) PRODUCER.—The term "producer" means any person engaged in the growing of soybeans who owns, or who shares the ownership and risk of loss of, such soybeans.

(13) PROMOTION.—The term "promotion" means—

(A) any action (including paid advertising, technical assistance, and trade servicing activities) to enhance the image or desirability of soybeans or soybean products in domestic and foreign markets; and

(B) any activity designed to communicate to consumers, importers, processors, wholesalers, retailers, government officials, or others information relating to the positive attributes of soybeans or soybean products or the benefits of importation, use, or distribution of soybeans and soybean products.

(14) QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARD.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "qualified State soybean board" means a State soybean promotion entity that is authorized by State law.

(B) NO STATE SOYBEAN PROMOTION ENTITY.—If no such entity exists in a State, such term means a soybean producer-governed entity that—

(i) is organized and operating within a State;

(ii) receives voluntary contributions and conducts soybean promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information programs;

(iii) meets the criteria established by the Board relating to the qualifications of such entity to perform duties under the order, as determined by the Board; and

(iv) is recognized by the Board as the soybean promotion and research entity within the State.

(15) RESEARCH.—The term "research" means any type of study to advance the image, desirability, marketability, production, product development, quality, or functional or nutritional value of soybeans or soybean products, including any research activity designed to identify and analyze barriers to export sales of soybean and soybean products.

(16) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(17) SOYBEAN PRODUCTS.—The term "soybean products" means products produced in whole or in part from soybeans or soybean byproducts.

(18) SOYBEANS.—The term "soybeans" means all varieties of Glycine max or Glycine soya.

(19) STATE AND UNITED STATES.—The terms "State" and "United States" include the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

SEC. 1404. ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To effectuate the declared policy of section 1402(b), the Secretary, subject to the procedures provided in subsection (b), shall issue orders under this chapter applicable to producers and first purchasers of soybeans. Any such order shall be national in scope. Not more than one order shall be in effect under this chapter at any one time.

(b) PROCEDURE.—

(1) PROPOSALS.—The Secretary may propose the issuance of an order under this chapter, or an association of soybean producers or any other person that will be affected by this chapter may request the issuance of, and submit a proposal for, such an order.

(2) NOTICE AND PUBLIC COMMENT.—Not later than 30 days after the receipt of a request and proposal by an interested person for an order, or whenever the Secretary determines to propose an order, the Secretary shall publish the proposed order and give due notice and opportunity for public comment on the proposed order.

(3) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—After notice and opportunity for public comment are given (as provided in paragraph (2)), the Secretary shall issue the order, taking into consideration the comments received and including in the order provisions necessary to ensure that the order is in conformity with the requirements of this chapter.

(4) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Such order shall be issued and become effective not later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

(c) AMENDMENTS.—The Secretary, from time to time, may amend any order issued under this section, consistent with the requirements of section 1410(b).

SEC. 1405. REQUIRED TERMS IN ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An order issued under this chapter shall contain the terms and conditions prescribed in this section.

(b) UNITED SOYBEAN BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The order shall provide for the establishment of, and appointment of members to, a United Soybean Board to administer the order. Members of the Board shall be soybean producers appointed by the Secretary, on a geographic basis, from State units, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3). The cumulative number of seats on the Board shall be the total number of seats to which all the units are entitled.

(2) SEATS.—The Secretary shall establish seats on the Board and appoint soybean producers to such seats from nominations received, as follows:

(A) STATE UNITS.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each whole State shall be considered as a unit.

(B) COMBINED UNITS.—A State in which average annual soybean production is less than 3,000,000 bushels shall be grouped with other States into a combined unit. To the extent practicable, each State with average annual soybean production of less than 3,000,000 bushels shall be grouped with other States with average annual soybean production of less than 3,000,000 bushels into a combined unit, in a manner prescribed in the order, and each combined unit shall group geographically contiguous States together. To the extent practicable, each combined unit shall have an average annual production of soybeans of at least 3,000,000 bushels.

(C) NUMBER OF SEATS PER UNIT.—Subject to subparagraph (E), each unit, as established under subparagraph (A) or (B)—

(i) if its average annual soybean production is less than 15,000,000 bushels, shall be entitled to one seat on the Board;

(ii) if its average annual soybean production is 15,000,000 bushels or more but less than 70,000,000 bushels, shall be entitled to two seats on the Board;

(iii) if its average annual soybean production is 70,000,000 bushels or more but less than 200,000,000 million bushels, shall be entitled to three seats on the Board; and

(iv) if its average annual soybean production is 200,000,000 bushels or more, shall be entitled to four seats on the Board.

(D) DETERMINATION OF AVERAGE ANNUAL SOYBEAN PRODUCTION.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), the Secretary shall determine average annual soybean production applicable to a crop year by using the average of the 5 previous crops of soybeans, excluding the crop in which production was the highest and the crop in which production was the lowest.

(E) REAPPORTIONMENT OF SEATS.—At the end of each 3-year period beginning with the 3-year period starting on the effective date of the order, the Secretary, if necessary, shall adjust any unit to conform with subparagraphs (A) and (B). If the Secretary makes such an adjustment, the Secretary shall reapportion the seats on the board to conform with subparagraph (C). If payment of refunds following the initial referendum conducted under section 1406(a) is authorized by producers, in making such adjustments, the Secretary shall exclude, from each State's annual soybean production, those bushels of soybeans on which such refunds are paid.

(F) ADJUSTMENT OF LEVELS OF PRODUCTION.—At the end of each 3-year period beginning with the 3-year period starting on the effective date of the order, the Board may recommend to the Secretary, to the extent the Board determines appropriate, changes in the levels of production used in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) to determine per-unit representation on the Board. The Secretary may amend the order to make such changes in levels of production used to determine per-unit representation. Any such amendment to the order shall not be subject to a referendum of producers. A unit shall not lose, under this subparagraph, Board seats to which the unit is entitled at the time the order is initially issued unless its average annual production, as determined under subparagraph (D), declines below the levels required for representation, as specified in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

(3) NOMINATIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall appoint soybean producers to seats established under paragraph (2) from nominations submitted by each unit. Each unit shall submit to the Secretary at least two nominations for each appointment to the Board to which the unit is entitled, as determined under paragraph (2).

(B) METHOD FOR OBTAINING NOMINATIONS.—

(i) INITIALLY-ESTABLISHED BOARD.—

(I) STATE UNITS.—The Secretary shall solicit nominations for each seat on the initially-established Board to which a State unit is entitled from the State soybean board in the State that submits satisfactory evidence to the Secretary that such board meets the criteria of section 1403(14). If no such organization exists in the unit, the Secretary shall solicit nominations for appointments in such manner as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(II) COMBINED UNITS.—The Secretary shall solicit nominations for each seat on the initially-established Board to which a combined unit is entitled in such manner as the Secretary determines appropriate, taking into consideration the recommendations of any State soybean board operating in the unit that submits to the Secretary satisfactory evidence that such board meets the criteria of section 1403(14).

(ii) SUBSEQUENT APPOINTMENT.—

(I) STATE UNITS.—Nominations for each subsequent appointment to a seat on the Board to which a State unit is entitled shall be made by the qualified State soybean board in the unit. If no such organization exists in the unit, the Secretary shall solicit nominations for such appointment in such manner as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(II) COMBINED UNITS.—The Secretary shall solicit nominations for each subsequent appointment to the Board to which a combined unit is entitled in such manner as the Secretary determines appropriate, taking into consideration the recommendations of any qualified State soybean board operating in the unit.

(iii) REJECTION.—The Secretary may reject any nomination submitted by a unit under this paragraph. If there are insufficient nominations from which to appoint members to the Board as a result of the Secretary rejecting the nominations submitted by a unit, the unit shall submit additional nominations, as provided in this paragraph.

(4) TERMS.—Each appointment to the Board shall be for a term of 3 years, except that appointments to the initially-established Board shall be proportionately for 1-year, 2-year, and 3-year terms. No person may serve more than three 3-year terms.

(5) COMPENSATION.—Board members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for their reasonable expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the Board.

(6) TEMPORARY APPOINTMENTS.—

(A) APPOINTMENT.—Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this subsection, the Secretary, under procedures established by the Secretary, shall appoint to the initially-established Board up to three temporary members to serve in addition to the members appointed as otherwise provided in this subsection, as the Secretary determines appropriate for transition purposes under the criteria set out in subparagraph (B). Each such temporary member shall be appointed for a single term not to exceed 3 years.

(B) REPRESENTATION OF CERTAIN STATES.—The Secretary shall make temporary appointments to the initially-established Board to ensure, to the extent practicable, that each State with a State soybean board that, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, was contributing State soybean promotion and research assessment funds to national soybean promotion and research efforts has representation on the initially-established Board that reflects the relative contributions of such State to the national soybean promotion and research effort.

(7) MEETINGS.—The order shall provide for at least one meeting of the Board annually and specify the circumstances under which additional special meetings of the Board may be held.

(c) POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE BOARD.—The order shall define the powers and duties of the Board and shall include the power and duty—

(1) to administer the order in accordance with the terms and provisions of the order;

(2) to make regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of the order;

(3) to elect members of the Board to serve on the Committee;

(4) to approve, modify, or reject budgets submitted by the Committee;

(5) to contract with appropriate persons to implement plans or projects;

(6) to receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of the order;

(7) to recommend to the Secretary amendments to the order;

(8) to provide the Secretary with prior notice of meetings of the Board at such time as to permit the Secretary to attend such meetings; and

(9) to provide at least annually a report to producers accounting for funds and describing programs implemented.

(d) BOARD VOTING PROCEDURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall establish procedures for the conduct of voting by the Board, as provided in this subsection.

(2) NUMBER OF VOTES PER MEMBER.—Each member of the Board shall be entitled, in any vote conducted by the Board, to cast the number of votes determined under the following rules:

(A) IN GENERAL.—Each member shall be entitled to cast one vote unless a rollcall vote is conducted. On a request for a rollcall vote, each member shall be entitled to cast such additional votes as are assigned to the member under subparagraph (B).

(B) ADDITIONAL VOTES.—The additional votes that each member is assigned for rollcall votes shall be computed as follows:

(i) ASSESSMENT LEVEL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), each unit shall be allotted one vote for each percent, or portion of a percent, of the total amount of assessments remitted to the Board that was remitted from the unit (net of any refunds made under subsection (j)(2)), on the average, during each of the 3 previous fiscal years of the Board.

(ii) PRODUCTION LEVEL.—

(I) FIRST FISCAL YEAR.—During the first fiscal year of the Board, each unit shall be allotted one vote for each percent, or portion of a percent, of the total production of soybeans in the United States that was produced in the unit, on the average, during each of the 3 immediately preceding crop years.

(II) SUBSEQUENT ADJUSTMENTS.—The order shall provide appropriate adjustments of the procedure for the allotment of votes under clause (i) to apply to allotments of votes during the second and third fiscal years of the Board.

(iii) DIVISION OF VOTES WITHIN UNITS.—A unit's total votes under clause (i) or (ii) shall be divided equally among all the members representing that unit. The procedures established by the order shall provide for the equitable disposition of fractional votes assigned to a member under such division of a unit's vote.

(C) PROCEDURAL CHANGES.—On or after the end of the 3-year period beginning on the effective date of the order, the Board may recommend to the Secretary changes in the voting procedures of the Board and the Secretary may amend the order to make such changes. Such changes shall not be subject to a referendum of producers.

(3) MOTIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a motion shall carry if approved by a simple majority of members of the Board casting votes.

(B) ROLLCALL VOTES.—Any member of the Board may call for a rollcall vote on any motion. Except as otherwise provided in the bylaws adopted by the Board, whenever a rollcall vote is conducted, the motion shall carry only if it is approved by a simple majority of all votes cast and a simple majority of all units voting (with the vote of each unit determined by a simple majority of all votes cast by members in that unit).

(4) COMMITTEE VOTES.—In any vote conducted by a committee of the Board, each member of the committee shall have one vote.

(5) PROXIES.—A member may not cast votes by proxy.

(e) SOYBEAN PROGRAM COORDINATING COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The order shall provide for the establishment of a Soybean Program Coordinating Committee to assist in the administration of the order, as provided in this subsection.

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—

(A) COMPOSITION.—The Committee shall be composed of—

(i) the Chairperson and Treasurer of the Board;

(ii) eight additional members of the Board elected by the Board; and

(iii) nine producers elected by the national, nonprofit soybean producer-governed organization that conducts activities on behalf of State soybean boards and that, on the date of the enactment of this Act, conducts activities to promote soybeans and soybean products as a cooperator with the Foreign Agricultural Service of the Department.

(B) CERTIFICATION.—To serve on the Committee, each producer elected by the national, nonprofit soybean producer-governed organization shall be certified by the Secretary as a producer who is duly elected by such organization as a representative to the Committee.

(3) TERMS.—Terms of appointment of the Committee shall be for 1 year. No person may serve on the Committee for more than 6 consecutive terms.

(4) COMPENSATION.—Committee members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for their reasonable expenses incurred in performing duties for the Committee.

(5) CHAIRPERSON.—The Chairperson of the Board shall serve as Chairperson of the Committee.

(6) QUORUM.—Fifteen members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum.

(f) POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMITTEE.—The order shall define the powers and duties of the Committee, which shall include the following:

(1) BUDGETS.—The Committee shall develop and submit to the Board, for approval, budgets on a fiscal year basis of anticipated expenses and disbursements, including probable costs of advertising and promotion, research, consumer information, industry information, and market development projects. The Board shall review and approve, reject, modify, or substitute a budget proposed by the Committee, and submit budgets to the Secretary for the Secretary's approval. Each such budget shall be approved or disapproved by the Secretary within 45 days after the Secretary receives the budget.

(2) PLANS AND PROJECTS.—The Committee shall review, or on its own initiative develop, plans or projects for advertising and promotion, research, consumer information, industry information, and market development activities, to be paid for with funds received by the Board. Each such plan or project shall be presented to the Board for approval. The Board may develop plans and projects on its own initiative.

(3) VOTING.—A recommendation to be presented to the Board relating to proposed budgets or proposed plans and projects shall require the concurring vote of at least 13 members present at a meeting of the Committee.

(g) ADMINISTRATION.—

(1) EXPENSES; STAFF.—The order shall provide that the Board shall be responsible for all expenses of the Board and Committee, and that the Board and Committee shall use staff and facilities of established national, nonprofit producer-governed organizations that represent soybean producers to prevent duplication and inefficient use of funds. Staff of such organizations shall not receive compensation directly from the Board, but such organizations shall be reimbursed for the reasonable expenses of their staffs, including salaries, incurred in performing staff duties on behalf of the Board and Committee.

(2) LIMIT ON ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The order shall provide that costs incurred by the Board in administering the order (not including administrative costs incurred by the Secretary) during any fiscal year shall not exceed 5 percent of the projected level of revenues to the Board (net of any refunds made under subsection (j)(2)) for that fiscal year.

(h) CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure coordination and efficient use of funds, the order shall provide that, except as provided in paragraph (4), the Board shall enter into contracts or agreements for the implementation and carrying out of the activities authorized by this chapter with established national, nonprofit producer-governed organizations that represent soybean producers (including the organization electing representatives to the Committee under subsection (e)(2)), and for the payment thereof with funds received by the Board under the order.

(2) LIMITATION ON AGREEMENTS.—To enhance coordination, the Board, when entering into contracts or agreements for the implementation and carrying out of activities under this chapter, shall ensure that all plans or projects implemented within a program area are implemented by a single national, nonprofit producer-governed organization that represents soybean producers, and there shall not be in force, at any one time, more than one contract or agreement for implementation of plans and projects for each general program area.

(3) REQUIREMENTS.—Any contract entered into under this subsection shall provide that—

(A) the contracting party shall develop and submit to the Board a plan or project together with a budget or budgets that shall disclose estimated costs to be incurred for such plan or project;

(B) the plan or project shall become effective on the approval of the Secretary; and

(C) the contracting party shall keep accurate records of all transactions, account for funds received and expended, make periodic reports to the Board of the activities it has conducted, and make such other reports as the Board or the Secretary shall require.

(4) COMMUNICATIONS TO PRODUCERS.—The order shall provide that—

(A) the Board may enter into contracts or agreements with qualified State soybean boards that apply therefor and agree to the terms thereof, for the implementation of plans or projects to coordinate and facilitate communications to producers regarding the conduct of activities under the order and for the payment of the costs of the plans or projects with funds received by the Board under the order; and

(B) to facilitate the funding of plans or projects described in subparagraph (A), if the order does not authorize the payment of refunds, the Board shall allocate for such funding each year an amount not less than the cumulative amount of all producer contributions to qualified State soybean boards during the previous year that the State boards were unable to retain, and forwarded to the Board, because producers received refunds on such State contributions, as determined by the Board based on information submitted by the qualified State soybean boards.

(5) APPORTIONMENT OF FUNDS TO QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARDS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In using the funds allocated each year under paragraph (4)(B) for payment of the costs of contracts or agreements described in paragraph (4)(A), subject to subparagraph (B), the Board shall apportion such allocated funds among States so that each qualified State soybean board receives an amount equal to the amount of such allocated funds attributable to refunds in the State during the previous year, as determined by the Board based on information submitted by the qualified State soybean boards.

(B) EXCEPTION.—The Board shall not be required to apportion funds to a qualified State soybean board, as provided in subparagraph (A), if—

(i) the qualified State soybean board has not entered into a contract or agreement with the Board for the implementation of plans or projects described in paragraph (4)(A); or

(ii) the amount to be apportioned to the qualified State soybean board is less than the cost to the Board of overseeing the use of such apportionment during the year involved, and the contract or agreement shall so provide.

(i) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require the Board to—

(A) maintain such books and records (which shall be available to the Secretary for inspection and audit) as the Secretary may prescribe;

(B) prepare and submit to the Secretary, from time to time, such reports as the Secretary may prescribe; and

(C) account for the receipt and disbursement of all funds entrusted to the Board.

(2) AUDITS.—The Board shall cause its books and records to be audited by an independent auditor at the end of each fiscal year, and a report of such audit to be submitted to the Secretary.

(j) ASSESSMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) FIRST PURCHASERS.—

(i) COLLECTION.—The order shall provide that each first purchaser of soybeans from a producer shall collect, in the manner prescribed by the order, an assessment from the producer and remit the assessment to the Board. The Board shall use qualified State soybean boards to collect such assessments in States in which such boards operate.

(ii) RATE.—The rate of assessment prescribed by the order shall be one-half of 1 percent of the net market price of soybeans sold by the producer to the first purchaser.

(iii) ONE ASSESSMENT.—No more than one assessment shall be made on any soybeans.

(B) DIRECT PROCESSING.—The order shall provide that any person processing soybeans of that person's own production and marketing such soybeans or soybean products made from such soybeans shall remit to the Board or the qualified State soybean board, in the manner prescribed by the order, an assessment established at a rate equivalent to the rate provided for in subparagraph (A)(ii).

(2) REFUNDS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The order shall provide that, during the period prior to the approval of the continuation of the order in the referendum provided for in section 1406(a), as determined by the Secretary, each producer shall have the right to demand and receive from the Board a refund of any assessment collected from such producer if—

(i) such producer is responsible for paying the assessment; and

(ii) such producer does not support the programs, projects, or activities implemented under the order.

(B) ADMINISTRATION.—Subject to subparagraph (C)(i), any demand by a producer for a refund of an assessment under this paragraph shall be made in accordance with regulations, on a form, and within the time period (not to exceed 90 days) prescribed by the Board.

(C) SUBMISSION OF REFUND DEMANDS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—In each State in which a qualified State soybean board collects assessments, as provided in paragraph (1)(A)(i), producers shall submit demands for refunds of assessments to the qualified State soybean board. Such board shall provide notice to producers, in a manner prescribed by the Board, of their right to such refunds, and shall process such submissions under procedures established by State law applicable to refunds of assessments on soybeans, except that if no refunds are allowed under State law, such submissions shall be processed under procedures established under this paragraph.

(ii) NO QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARD.—In each State in which there is no qualified State soybean board, producers shall submit demands for refunds of assessments directly to the Board.

(D) TIME LIMIT FOR MAKING REFUND.—Subject to subparagraph (C)(i), each refund to a producer of an assessment under this paragraph shall be made as soon as practicable, but in no event more than 60 days, after submission of proof satisfactory to the qualified State soybean board or the Board that the producer paid the assessment for which refund is demanded.

(E) ORDER NOT FAVORED.—If the Secretary determines that producers do not favor the continuation of the order in the referendum provided for in section 1406(a), refunds shall be made under this paragraph on collected assessments until such collections are terminated, as provided in section 1406(a).

(F) SPECIFIC PROVISIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The order shall contain provisions relating to refunds after the approval of the order in the initial referendum under section 1406 as required in this subparagraph.

(ii) AVAILABILITY.—Effective for the period beginning on the date the Secretary determines the result of the initial referendum under section 1406 and ending on a date (not later than 18 months thereafter) established by the Secretary, the Board shall make refunds available to soybean producers at the end of such period from escrowed funds, as provided for in clause (vii). Such refunds shall be made available, under the procedures specified in subparagraph (A) to the extent not inconsistent with this subparagraph, to producers who have requested refunds during such period.

(iii) POLL.—Not later than the end of the period provided for in clause (ii), the Secretary shall conduct a poll of soybean producers, using the procedures provided for in section 1406, to determine if producers support the conduct of a referendum on the continuance of the payment of refunds under the order.

(iv) REFERENDUM.—If the Secretary determines, based on the poll conducted under clause (iii), that the conduct of a referendum is supported by at least 10 percent of the producers (not in excess of one-fifth of which may be producers in any one State) who, during a representative period, have been engaged in the production of soybeans, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among all such producers for the purpose of determining whether such producers favor the continuation of the payment of refunds under the order. Such referendum shall be conducted, under the procedures provided for in section 1406, not later than 1 year after the Secretary determines, based on the poll, that the referendum is required.

(v) CONTINUED REFUNDS.—If the Secretary conducts a referendum under clause (iv), the Board shall continue to make refunds available to producers as provided for in clause (ii) during the period prior to the conduct of the referendum.

(vi) CESSATION OF REFUNDS.—If the Secretary determines, in the referendum conducted under clause (iv), that continuation of the payment of refunds is favored by a majority of the producers voting in such referendum, the Board shall continue to make refunds available to producers as provided for in clause (ii) during each 1-year period until such time as soybean producers approve an amendment to the order to eliminate such refunds. If the Secretary determines in the referendum that continuation of such refunds is not favored by a majority of producers voting in the referendum, the right to such refunds shall cease immediately.

(vii) ESCROW ACCOUNTS.—

(I) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Board and each qualified State soybean board that collects assessments shall establish escrow accounts to be used to pay refunds under clauses (ii) and, if necessary, clauses (v) and (vi).

(II) SEPARATE ACCOUNTS.—Each qualified State soybean board that collects assessments shall establish separate escrow accounts for refunds under each such clause for State funds. The Board shall establish separate escrow accounts for refunds under clauses (ii), (v), and (vi), respectively.

(III) DEPOSITS.—The Board shall deposit into its escrow accounts under clauses (ii), (v), and (vi) 10 percent of the total assessment received by the Board during the time period involved. Each qualified State soybean board shall deposit into each of its escrow accounts 10 percent of collected assessment funds retained by the State board under this subsection during the applicable time period.

(IV) REFUNDS MADE FROM ACCOUNT.—With respect to refunds handled by the Board, refunds requested by producers under clause (ii) or (if refunds are available) under clause (v) or (vi) during the time period involved shall be made from the Board's escrow account applicable to that clause. With respect to refunds handled by qualified State soybean boards, refunds requested by producers under clause (ii) or (if refunds are available) under clause (v) or (vi) during the refund period involved shall be made first from the escrow account under such clause from State funds, and only after such escrow account is exhausted, from the escrow accounts under such clause from Board funds. If the funds in a State board's account for the clause involved, are not sufficient to honor all requests for refunds made by producers from that State during the time period involved, the Board shall pay such refund requests to such producers. If the funds in the Board's escrow accounts are insufficient to honor all requests, the Board shall prorate the amount of such refunds among all producers requesting refunds. In applying this clause to refunds under clause (vi), each annual refund period shall be treated separately.

(3) USE.—The assessments (net of any refunds under paragraph (2)) shall be used for—

(A) payment of the expenses incurred in implementation and administration of the order;

(B) the establishment of a reasonable reserve; and

(C) reimbursement to the Secretary of administrative costs incurred by the Secretary to implement and administer the order, other than the referendum conducted under paragraph (2)(F)(iv).

(4) CREDIT FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARDS.—A producer who can establish that such producer is contributing to a qualified State soybean board shall receive credit, in determining the assessment due to the Board from such producer, for contributions to the qualified State soybean board of up to one-quarter of 1 percent of the net market price of soybeans or the equivalent thereof. For purposes of this chapter, there shall be only one qualified State soybean board in each State. A producer may receive a credit under this paragraph only if the contribution is to the qualified State soybean board in the State in which the soybeans are produced, except that the Board, with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize exceptions to such State-of-origin rule as are appropriate to ensure effective coordination of collection procedures among States.

(k) LOAN COLLATERAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order may establish a procedure that authorizes the reimbursement of assessments paid by producers if soybeans, pledged as collateral for a loan issued under any Federal price support loan program, are redeemed. In such case, the first purchaser of redeemed soybeans shall be responsible for collecting all assessments due and remitting the assessments in the manner prescribed in the order.

(2) SINGLE PROCESS.—The procedures in the order for the collection of assessments on soybeans that are pledged as collateral for loans issued under any Federal price support program shall ensure, to the extent practicable, that such soybeans are subject to a single process of assessment under the order.

(l) CREDIT FOR CERTAIN COSTS TO STATES.—The order shall provide that the Board may provide a credit to each qualified State soybean board of an amount not to exceed one-half of any fees paid to State governmental agencies or first purchasers for collection of the assessments if the payment of such fees by the qualified State soybean board is required by State law enacted prior to the date of enactment of this Act, except that the Board may not provide a credit to any qualified State soybean board of an amount that exceeds 2.5 percent of the amount of assessments collected and remitted to the Board under subsection (j).

(m) MINIMUM LEVEL OF ASSESSMENTS TO STATES.—

(1) PRE-REFERENDUM PERIOD.—The order shall contain provisions to ensure that, during the period prior to the conduct of the referendum provided for in section 1406(a), each qualified State soybean board receives annually an amount of funds equal to the average amount that the State board collected from assessments during each of the State board's fiscal years 1984 through 1988 (excluding the year in which such collections were the highest and the year in which such collections were the lowest), as determined by the Secretary and subject to paragraph (3).

(2) POST-REFERENDUM PERIOD.—The order shall provide, effective after the conduct of the referendum provided for in section 1406(a), subject to paragraph (3), that the Board annually shall provide a credit to each qualified State soybean board of an amount by which—

(A) the amount equal to 1 cent times the average number of bushels of soybeans produced in the State during each of the preceding 5 years (excluding the year in which the production is the highest and the year in which the production is the lowest); exceeds

(B) the total amount collected by the qualified State soybean board from assessments on producers minus the amount of assessments remitted to the Board during such year under subsection (j).

(3) LIMITATION.—The total amount of credits under paragraph (1) or (2) and assessments retained by the qualified State soybean board for a year may not exceed the total amount of assessments collected in that State under subsection (j) (net of any refunds made under paragraph (2) of subsection (j)) in that year.

(n) INVESTMENT OF FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall provide that the Board, with the approval of the Secretary, may invest assessment funds collected by the Board under the order, pending their disbursement, only in—

(A) obligations of the United States or any agency thereof;

(B) general obligations of any State or any political subdivision thereof;

(C) any interest-bearing account or certificate of deposit of a bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System; or

(D) obligations fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

(2) INCOME.—Income from any such investment may be used for any purpose for which the invested funds may be used.

(o) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS TO INFLUENCE GOVERNMENTAL ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (2), the order shall prohibit any funds collected by the Board under the order from being used in any manner for the purpose of influencing legislation or governmental action or policy.

(2) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to—

(A) the development and recommendation of amendments to the order; or

(B) the communication to appropriate government officials of information relating to the conduct, implementation, or results of promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information activities under the order.

(p) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—

(1) RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require that each first purchaser of soybeans and any person processing soybeans of that person's own production maintain and make available for inspection such books and records as may be required by the order and file reports at the time, in the manner, and having the content prescribed by the order, except that the order shall exempt small producers processing soybeans of their own production who are not required to pay assessments under the order from such recordkeeping and reporting requirements.

(B) DEFINITION OF SMALL PRODUCER.—The order shall define the term "small producer" as such term is used in subparagraph (A).

(2) USE OF INFORMATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Information obtained under paragraph (1) shall be made available to the Secretary as is appropriate for the administration or enforcement of this chapter, or any order or regulation issued under this chapter.

(B) OTHER INFORMATION.—In addition, the Secretary shall authorize the use under this chapter of information regarding first purchasers that is accumulated under a law or regulation other than this chapter or regulations under this chapter.

(3) CONFIDENTIALITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), commercial or financial information that is obtained under paragraph (1) or (2) and that is privileged or confidential shall be kept confidential by all officers and employees of the Department and agents of the Board.

(B) PERMITTED USES.—Information obtained under the authority of this chapter shall be made available to any agency or officer of the Federal Government for—

(i) the implementation of this chapter;

(ii) any investigatory or enforcement action necessary for the implementation of this chapter; or

(iii) any civil or criminal law enforcement activity if the activity is authorized by law.

(C) OTHER EXCEPTIONS.—Nothing in subparagraph (A) may be deemed to prohibit—

(i) the issuance of general statements, based on the reports, of the number of persons subject to an order or statistical data collected therefrom, which statements do not identify the information furnished by any person; or

(ii) the publication, by direction of the Secretary, of the name of any person violating any order, together with a statement of the particular provisions of the order violated by such person.

(4) PENALTY.—Any person violating this subsection, on conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, and if an agent of the Board or an officer or employee of the Department, shall be removed from office.

(q) INCIDENTAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The order shall provide such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with this chapter, as are necessary to effectuate the order, including provisions for the assessment of a penalty for each late payment of assessments under subsection (j).

SEC. 1406. REFERENDA.

(a) INITIAL REFERENDUM.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—Not earlier than 18 months or later than 36 months following issuance of an order under section 1404, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among producers who, during a representative period as determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production of soybeans for the purpose of ascertaining whether the order then in effect shall be continued.

(2) APPROVAL OF ORDER.—Such order shall be continued only if the Secretary determines that the order has been approved by not less than a majority of the producers voting in the referendum.

(3) DISAPPROVAL OF ORDER.—If continuation of the order is not approved by a majority of those voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall terminate collection of assessments under the order within 6 months after the referendum and shall terminate the order in an orderly manner as soon as practicable.

(b) ADDITIONAL REFERENDA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) REQUIREMENT.—After the initial referendum on an order, the Secretary shall conduct additional referenda, as described in subparagraph (C), if requested by a representative group of producers, as described in subparagraph (B).

(B) REPRESENTATIVE GROUP OF PRODUCERS.—An additional referendum on an order shall be conducted if requested by 10 percent or more of the producers who during a representative period have been engaged in the production of soybeans, of which group of requesting producers not in excess of one-fifth may be producers in any one State, as determined by the Secretary.

(C) ELIGIBLE PRODUCERS.—Each additional referendum shall be conducted among all producers who, during a representative period, as determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production of soybeans to determine whether such producers favor the termination or suspension of the order.

(2) DISAPPROVAL OF ORDER.—If the Secretary determines, in any referendum conducted under paragraph (1), that suspension or termination of the order is favored by a majority of the producers voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall suspend or terminate the order, as appropriate, in any orderly manner as soon as practicable after such determination.

(3) OPPORTUNITY TO REQUEST ADDITIONAL REFERENDA.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—To facilitate the periodic determination as to whether producers favor the conduct of an additional referendum under this subsection, the Secretary, 5 years after the conduct of a referendum under this section and every 5 years thereafter, shall provide soybean producers an opportunity to request an additional referendum, as provided in this paragraph.

(B) METHOD OF MAKING REQUEST.—

(i) IN-PERSON REQUESTS.—To carry out clause (A), the Secretary shall establish a procedure under which producers may request a reconfirmation referendum in person at county extension offices on a date established by the Secretary, or as provided in clause (ii).

(ii) MAIL-IN REQUESTS.—In lieu of making such requests in person, producers may make requests by mail. Mail-in requests shall be postmarked no later than the date established under clause (i) for in-person requests. To facilitate such submission of requests by mail, the Secretary may make mail-in request forms available to producers.

(C) NOTIFICATIONS.—The Secretary shall publish a notice in the Federal Register, and the Board shall provide written notification to producers, not later than 60 days prior to the date established under subparagraph (B)(i) for in-person requests, of the producers' opportunity to request the additional referendum. Such notifications shall explain the producers' rights to, and the procedure specified in this subsection for, the conduct of an additional referendum, the purpose of the referendum, and the date and method by which producers may act to request the additional referendum under this paragraph. The Secretary shall take such other actions as the Secretary determines are necessary to ensure that producers are made aware of the opportunity to request an additional referendum on the order.

(D) ACTION BY SECRETARY.—As soon as practicable following the submission of requests for a reconsideration referendum, the Secretary shall determine whether a sufficient number of producers have requested an additional referendum, and take other steps to conduct an additional referendum, as are required under paragraph (1).

(E) TIME LIMIT.—Any additional referendum requested under the procedures provided in this paragraph shall be conducted not later than 1 year after the Secretary determines that a representative group of producers, as described in paragraph (1)(B), have requested the conduct of such referendum.

(c) PROCEDURES.—

(1) REIMBURSEMENT OF SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall be reimbursed from assessments collected by the Board for any expenses incurred by the Secretary in connection with the conduct of any activity required under subsections (a) and (b), except for the salaries of Government employees.

(2) DATE.—Each referendum shall be conducted for a reasonable period of time not to exceed 3 days, established by the Secretary, under a procedure whereby producers intending to vote in the referendum shall certify that they were engaged in the production of soybeans during the representative period and, at the same time, shall be provided an opportunity to vote in the referendum.

(3) PLACE.—Referenda shall be conducted at county extension offices and provision shall be made for absentee mail ballots to be provided on request.

SEC. 1407. PETITION AND REVIEW.

(a) PETITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A person subject to any order issued under this chapter may file with the Secretary a petition—

(A) stating that such order, a provision of such order, or any obligation imposed in connection with the order is not in accordance with law; and

(B) requesting a modification of the order or an exemption from the order.

(2) HEARINGS.—The petitioner shall be given an opportunity for a hearing on the petition, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(3) RULING.—After such hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling on the petition, which shall be final if in accordance with law.

(b) REVIEW.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—The district court of the United States in any district in which such person is an inhabitant or carries on business is vested with jurisdiction to review such ruling, if a complaint for that purpose is filed within 20 days after the date of the entry of such ruling.

(2) PROCESS.—Service of process in such proceeding may be conducted by the Secretary by delivering a copy of the complaint to the Secretary under such rules or regulations as the Secretary considers necessary to facilitate such services of process.

(3) REMANDS.—If the court determines that such ruling is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand such proceedings to the Secretary with directions—

(A) to make such ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law; or

(B) to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires.

SEC. 1408. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) JURISDICTION.—The several district courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, any order or regulation made or issued under this chapter.

(b) REFERRAL TO ATTORNEY GENERAL.—A civil action authorized to be brought under this section shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action, except that nothing in this chapter shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to refer to the Attorney General a violation of this chapter if the Secretary believes that the administration and enforcement of the order or regulation would be adequately served by administrative action under subsection (c) or suitable written notice or warning to any person committing the violation.

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES AND ORDERS.—

(1) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person who violates any provision of any order or regulation issued by the Secretary under this chapter, or who fails or refuses to pay, collect, or remit any assessment or fee duly required of the person under the order or regulation, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each such violation. Each violation shall be considered as a separate offense.

(2) CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS.—In addition to, or in lieu of, such civil penalty, the Secretary may issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from continuing such violation.

(3) NOTICE AND HEARING.—No penalty shall be assessed or cease-and-desist order issued unless such person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary with respect to such violation.

(4) FINALITY.—The order of the Secretary assessing a penalty or imposing a cease-and-desist order shall be final and conclusive unless the affected person files an appeal from the Secretary's order with the appropriate United States court of appeals.

(d) REVIEW BY COURT OF APPEALS.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—Any person against whom a violation is found and a civil penalty assessed or cease-and-desist order issued under subsection (c) may obtain review of the penalty or order by—

(A) filing, within the 30-day period beginning on the date such penalty is assessed or order issued, a notice of appeal in—

(i) the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or carries on business; or

(ii) the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; and

(B) simultaneously sending a copy of the notice by certified mail to the Secretary.

(2) RECORD.—The Secretary shall promptly file in the court the record on which such violation was found.

(3) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The findings of the Secretary shall be set aside only if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence.

(e) FAILURE TO OBEY ORDERS.—Any person who fails to obey a cease-and-desist order after the order has become final and unappealable, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered a final judgment in favor of the Secretary, shall be subject to a civil penalty assessed by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing and for judicial review under the procedures specified in subsections (c) and (d) of not more than $500 for each offense. Each day during which the failure continues shall be considered as a separate offense.

(f) FAILURE TO PAY PENALTIES.—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for recovery of the amount assessed in an appropriate district court of the United States. In the action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

(g) ADDITIONAL REMEDIES.—The remedies provided in subsections (a) and (b) shall be in addition to, and not exclusive of, other remedies that may be available.

SEC. 1409. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

(a) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Secretary may make such investigations as the Secretary considers necessary for the effective administration of this chapter or to determine whether any person subject to this chapter has engaged or is about to engage in any act that constitutes or will constitute a violation of this chapter, or of any order or regulation issued under this chapter.

(b) POWER TO SUBPOENA AND TAKE OATHS AND AFFIRMATIONS.—For the purpose of such investigation, the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any records that are relevant to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States.

(c) AID OF COURTS.—In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena to, any person, the Secretary may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of records. The court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Secretary to produce records or to give testimony regarding the matter under investigation. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Process in any such case may be served in the judicial district in which such person is an inhabitant or wherever such person may be found.

SEC. 1410. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) PREEMPTION OF OTHER PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), nothing in this chapter may be construed to preempt or supersede any other program relating to soybean promotion, research, or consumer information organized and operated under the laws of the United States or any State.

(2) EXCEPTIONS.—

(A) REFERENDA ON QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARDS.—In order to ensure the proper administration of this chapter, no State may conduct a referendum relating to the continuation or termination of a qualified State soybean board during the period beginning on the date an order is issued under section 1404 and ending 18 months after the referendum on such order is conducted under section 1406(a), except that such prohibition shall not be construed to apply to a State referendum on approval of modifications to a State soybean promotion program that do not involve termination of the qualified State soybean board.

(B) ASSESSMENTS COLLECTED BY QUALIFIED STATE SOYBEAN BOARDS.—In order to ensure adequate funding of the operations of qualified State soybean boards under this chapter, whenever an order is in effect under this chapter, no State law or regulation that limits the rate of assessment that the qualified State soybean board in the State may collect from producers on soybeans produced in such State, or that has the effect of limiting such rate, may be applied to prohibit such State board from collecting, and expending for authorized purposes, assessments from producers of up to the full amount of the credit authorized for producer contributions to qualified State soybean boards under section 1405(j)(4).

(b) AMENDMENTS TO ORDERS.—The provisions of this chapter applicable to orders shall be applicable to amendments to orders.

SEC. 1411. SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION OF ORDERS.

The Secretary shall, whenever the Secretary finds that the order or any provision of the order obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this chapter, terminate or suspend the operation of such order or provision.

SEC. 1412. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The funds so appropriated shall not be available for payment of the expenses or expenditures of the Board or the Committee in administering any provision of any order issued under this chapter.

SEC. 1413. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this chapter, including regulations relating to the assessment of late payment charges.

CHAPTER 2—COTTON

SEC. 1501. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Cotton Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 1502. LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

Section 2 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2101) is amended—

(1) in the first paragraph, by striking the fourth and sixth sentences; and

(2) in the third paragraph—

(A) by striking "harvested" and inserting "marketed"; and

(B) by inserting "and on imports of cotton" after "United States" the first place it appears.

SEC. 1503. ALTERNATIVE ORDER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Cotton Research and Promotion Act is amended by inserting after section 7 (7 U.S.C. 2106) the following new section:

"SEC. 7A. ALTERNATIVE ORDER.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT TO ISSUE PLAN.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 4, 5, 7, and 8 that are inconsistent with this section, the Secretary shall publish the proposed alternative order required by this section, within 60 days of the receipt of a request from a producer or producer organization to implement such an order, if the Secretary determines that such alternative order effectuates the declared policy of this Act.

"(2) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Any alternative order issued pursuant to this section shall—

"(A) contain the terms and conditions prescribed in this section; and

"(B) terminate the authority of the Cotton Board to accept and process applications for refunds under section 11.

"(3) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER ORDER.—

"(A) PROVISIONS.—In issuing the alternative order under this section, the Secretary shall incorporate by reference the provisions of the cotton research and promotion order in effect pursuant to this Act that are not inconsistent with the amendments made pursuant to the alternative order.

"(B) BOARD MEMBERS.—Each member of the Cotton Board that is sitting on the effective date of the alternative order shall continue to serve the full term of appointment of the member pursuant to section 7.

"(b) COTTON BOARD.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The alternative order shall provide for the establishment and selection by the Secretary of a Cotton Board.

"(2) POWERS AND DUTIES.—The alternative order shall define the powers and duties of the Cotton Board, which shall include only the powers—

"(A) to administer such order in accordance with the terms and provisions of such order;

"(B) to make rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of such order, including the designation of the person responsible for collecting assessments;

"(C) to receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of such order; and

"(D) to recommend to the Secretary amendments to such order.

"(3) COMPOSITION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The alternative order shall provide that the Cotton Board shall be composed of—

"(i) representatives of cotton producers selected by the Secretary from nominations submitted by—

"(I) eligible producer organizations within a cotton-producing State, as certified pursuant to section 14; or

"(II) if the Secretary determines that a substantial number of producers are not members of or their interests are not represented by any such eligible producer organizations, from nominations made by producers in the manner authorized by the Secretary, so that the representation of cotton producers on the Board for each cotton-producing State shall reflect, to the extent practicable, the proportion which that State's marketings of cotton bears to the total marketings of cotton in the United States; and

"(ii) an appropriate number of representatives, as established by the Secretary, of persons who import cotton into the United States on which assessments are paid under this Act.

"(B) COTTON PRODUCERS.—Each cotton-producing State shall be entitled to at least one representative on the Cotton Board.

"(C) IMPORTERS.—Importer representatives under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be appointed by the Secretary after consultation with importer organizations certified by the Secretary.

"(D) CONSUMER ADVISORS.—The Secretary may appoint a number of consumer advisors to the Cotton Board not to exceed 15 percent of the membership of the Cotton Board. The Cotton Board shall reimburse the consumer advisors for expenses incurred in attending meetings of the Board in the same manner as the Cotton Board members.

"(c) PLANS AND PROJECTS.—The alternative order shall provide that the Cotton Board shall, subject to subsection (g), develop and submit to the Secretary for the approval of the Secretary any advertising or sales promotion or research and development plans or projects, and that any such plan or project must be approved by the Secretary before becoming effective.

"(d) BUDGETS.—The alternative order shall provide that the Cotton Board shall, subject to subsection (g), submit to the Secretary for the approval of the Secretary, budgets on a fiscal period basis of its anticipated expenses and disbursements in the administration of the order, including probable costs of advertising and promotion and research and development projects.

"(e) ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The alternative order shall provide that—

"(A) the producer or other person for whom the cotton is being handled shall pay to the handler of cotton designated by the Cotton Board pursuant to regulations issued under the order;

"(B) such handler of cotton shall collect from the producer or other person for whom the cotton, including cotton owned by the handler, is being handled, and shall pay to the Cotton Board; and

"(C) each importer shall pay to the Cotton Board on imports of cotton, an assessment prescribed by the order, on the basis of bales of cotton handled, for such expenses and expenditures. The provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall not apply to cottonseed and the products derived from cotton and its seed.

"(2) RESERVE.—The alternative order shall include provision for a reasonable reserve, as the Secretary finds are reasonable and likely to be incurred by the Cotton Board under the order, during any period specified by the Secretary, and for reimbursing the Secretary—

"(A) for expenses not to exceed $300,000 incurred by the Secretary in connection with any referendum conducted under section 8; and

"(B) for administrative costs incurred by the Secretary for supervisory work up to 5 employee years after the alternative order or amendment to the alternative order has been issued and made effective.

"(3) REIMBURSEMENT OF OTHER AGENCIES.—There shall also be included in the alternative order a provision for reimbursing any agency of Government that assists in administering the import provisions of the order for a reasonable amount of the expenses incurred by that agency in connection with providing such assistance.

"(4) DIFFERENT CLASSES.—To facilitate the collection and payment of such assessments, the Cotton Board may designate different handlers or importers, or classes of handlers or importers, to recognize differences in marketing practices or procedures utilized in any State or area, except that no more than one such assessment shall be made on any bale of cotton, unless specifically authorized by this subsection.

"(5) RATE.—The rate of assessment prescribed by the alternative order shall be $1 per bale of cotton handled, plus a supplemental amount not to exceed 1 percent of the value of cotton as determined by the Cotton Board and the Secretary.

"(6) REFERENDA.—No authority under this Act may be used as a basis to advertise or solicit votes in any referendum relating to the rate of assessment with funds collected under this Act.

"(7) SUITS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may maintain a suit against any person subject to the alternative order for the collection of such assessment.

"(B) JURISDICTION.—The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to entertain such suits regardless of the amount in controversy.

"(C) ADDITIONAL REMEDIES.—The remedies provided in this section shall be in addition to, and not exclusive of, the remedies provided for elsewhere in this Act or now or hereafter existing at law or in equity.

"(8) COTTON IMPORTS.—Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this subsection—

"(A) the rate of assessment on imports of cotton shall be determined in the same manner as the rate of assessment described in the preceding provisions of this subsection;

"(B) the value to be placed on cotton imports for the purpose of determining the assessment on such imports shall be established by the Secretary in a fair and equitable manner; and

"(C) the assessment on such imports shall be reduced by a percentage equivalent to the proportion that exports of cotton that were reentered into the United States in the form of cotton and products derived from such cotton bears to the total exports of cotton of all exporters in the most recent year for which statistics are available.

"(f) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—The alternative order shall provide that the Cotton Board shall maintain such books and records and prepare and submit such reports from time to time, to the Secretary as the Secretary may prescribe, and for appropriate accounting by the Cotton Board with respect to the receipt and disbursement of all funds entrusted to the Cotton Board.

"(g) CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The alternative order shall provide that the Cotton Board, with the approval of the Secretary, shall enter into contracts or agreements for—

"(A) the development and carrying out of the activities authorized under the order issued pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) of section 6; and

"(B) the payment of the costs thereof with funds collected pursuant to the order, with an organization or association described in paragraph (2).

"(2) ELIGIBLE CONTRACTING ORGANIZATIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, an organization or association is eligible to enter into a contract if the governing body of the organization or association consists of cotton producers selected by the cotton producer organizations certified by the Secretary under section 14, in such manner that the producers of each cotton-producing State will, to the extent practicable, have representation on the governing body of such organization or association in the proportion that the cotton marketed by the producers of such State bears to the total cotton marketed by the producers of all cotton-producing States.

"(3) PROJECTS; BUDGETS.—Any such contract or agreement shall provide that such contracting organization or association shall develop and submit annually to the Cotton Board, for the purpose of review and making recommendations to the Secretary, a program of research, advertising, and sales promotion projects, together with a budget, or budgets, that shall show the estimated cost to be incurred for such projects, and that any such projects shall become effective on approval by the Secretary.

"(4) RECORDS.—Any such contract or agreement shall also provide that the contracting organization shall keep accurate records of all its transactions and make an annual report to the Cotton Board of activities carried out and an accounting for funds received and expended, and such other reports as the Secretary may require.

"(h) INFLUENCING GOVERNMENTAL ACTION.—The alternative order shall provide that no funds collected by the Cotton Board under the alternative order shall in any manner be used for the purpose of influencing governmental policy or action, except as provided by subsection (b)(2)(D).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The matter preceding subsection (a) of section 6 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2105(a)) is amended by inserting after "section 7" the following "or 7A".

SEC. 1504. REFERENDA REQUIREMENTS FOR ALTERNATIVE ORDER.

Section 8 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2107) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after the section designation; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b)(1) Not later than 120 days after publication of the proposed alternative order pursuant to section 7A(a)(1) and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall issue an alternative order in accordance with section 7A. Such alternative order shall become effective as provided in this subsection.

"(2) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary shall, within a period not to exceed 8 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, conduct a referendum among persons who have been cotton producers during a representative period, as determined by the Secretary, for the purpose of ascertaining if a majority of those voting approve the proposed alternative order under section 7A. The Secretary shall promptly publish the results of the referendum.

"(3) If the alternative order is approved in the referendum, within a period not to exceed 90 days from publication of the results of the referendum, the Secretary shall publish regulations implementing the alternative order provided for in section 7A. Such alternative order shall be effective on an interim basis beginning with the date of publication and shall continue in effect pending the results of another referendum and issuance of a final regulation as provided in subsection (c).

"(c)(1) If the producers specified in subsection (b) approve the alternative order, the Secretary shall conduct another referendum no sooner than 15 but no later than 30 months after the date of the referendum conducted under subsection (b) to determine whether cotton producers and importers of cotton favor the alternative order issued under section 7A.

"(2) Such referendum shall be conducted among—

"(A) persons who have been cotton producers during a representative period, as determined by the Secretary; and

"(B) persons who are importers of cotton and who, during a 12-month period ending no later than 90 days prior to the conduct of the referendum under this section, paid an assessment on imports of cotton.

"(3) The Secretary shall promptly publish the results of the referendum.

"(4) If the alternative order is disapproved by a majority of cotton producers and a majority of importers of cotton voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall issue an order terminating the alternative order.

"(5) If the alternative order is not disapproved, within a period not to exceed 90 days from publication of the results of the referendum, the Secretary shall publish final regulations implementing the alternative order provided for in this subsection.

"(6)(A) The Board shall place in an escrow account an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying by 10 percent the assessments collected from producers and importers during the period prior to announcement of the results of the referendum provided for in this subsection. The funds shall be held in the escrow account until the results of the referendum are published by the Secretary.

"(B) If the alternative order to the order is approved, the funds in the escrow account shall be released on publication of the final regulations by the Secretary to be used for the purposes of this Act.

"(C)(i) If the alternative order is not approved in such referendum, the funds in the escrow account shall be refunded to the producers and importers who have requested a refund under clause (ii) on publication of the order terminating the alternative order, after a deduction for a proportionate amount of the expenses incurred by the Secretary and the agency of Government that assists in administering the import provisions of the order as described in section 7A.

"(ii) A producer or importer shall have the right to receive a refund—

"(I) if demand is made personally by the producer or importer, in accordance with regulations and on a form and within a time period prescribed by the Board, but in no event later than 90 days after the date of publication of the results of the referendum; and

"(II) on submission of proof satisfactory to the Board that the person or importer paid the assessment for which refund is sought and did not collect the assessment from another person.

"(iii) Any funds not refunded to producers and importers shall be released to be used to carry out this Act.

"(d)(1) If a referendum is conducted under subsection (c), once every 5 years after the date of such referendum, the Secretary shall provide producers and importers an opportunity to request a referendum to determine—

"(A) whether the producers and importers favor continuation of the alternative order to the order required under subsection (b)(1), if such alternative order is then in effect; or

"(B) if such an alternative order is not in effect, whether they favor approval of such alternative order.

"(2) Producers and importers may sign up to request such a referendum at the county office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service or the office of the county extension agent or by mailing a request on such date to the Administrator, Agricultural Marketing Service, Washington, District of Columbia.

"(3) The signup date shall be publicized by the Secretary and the Cotton Board at least 60 days prior to such date.

"(4) The Secretary shall conduct such a referendum within 12 months after such signup date if a referendum is requested by 10 percent or more of the number of cotton producers and importers voting in the most recent referendum, except that not more than 20 percent of the persons requesting the referendum may be producers from any one State or importers of cotton.

"(5) The alternative order shall not be effective if the alternative order is disapproved by a majority of cotton producers and a majority of importers of cotton voting in the referendum.

"(e) The disapproval of any alternative order or of an amendment to an alternative order issued under this Act shall not operate to invalidate the order in effect on the date of the referendum.".

SEC. 1505. PRODUCER REFUNDS; TERMINATION.

Section 11 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2110) is amended—

(1) by striking "Notwithstanding" and inserting "(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and notwithstanding"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) The authority of the Cotton Board to accept and process applications for refunds under this section shall terminate if the alternative order issued under section 7A is approved in the referendum provided for under section 8. Such authority shall terminate on the date the Secretary publishes the results of such referendum. Such authority shall be reinstated if the alternative order should be disapproved in any subsequent referendum.".

SEC. 1506. DEFINITIONS.

Section 17 of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2116) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (c) and inserting the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'cotton' means—

"(A) all upland cotton harvested in the United States, and, except as used in sections 7(e) and subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 7A(e)(1), includes cottonseed of such cotton and the products derived from such cotton and its seed; and

"(B) imports of upland cotton, including the upland cotton content of the products derived from upland cotton (other than industrial products as defined by the Secretary).

"(2) The term 'cotton' shall not include—

"(A) any entry of imported cotton by an importer that has a value or weight less than a de minimis quantity, established in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary; and

"(B) any entry by a person during a year if—

"(i) the total cotton imported by that person during the preceding year, including the upland cotton content of products derived from upland cotton (other than industrial products), was less than a de minimis quantity, established in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary; and

"(ii) such person certifies that the person intends to import less than such de minimis quantity in the current year, except that the term 'cotton' shall include all imports of cotton by such person during the current year if that person actually imports more than the de minimis quantity in the current year.

"(3) The de minimis quantities established under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2) shall be such as to minimize the burden in administering the assessment provisions of this Act but still provide for the maximum participation of imports of cotton in such provisions.";

(2) in subsection (d), by inserting after "cottonseed" the following: "or, for the purposes of sections 3, 6(c), and 13, any person who imports cotton (including cotton described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (c)(2),"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) The term 'importer' means any person who enters, or withdraws from a warehouse, cotton for consumption in the customs territory of the United States.

"(2) The term 'import' means any such entry.".

SEC. 1507. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 7(e) of the Cotton Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2106(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to cottonseed and the products derived from cotton and its seed.".

CHAPTER 3—PECANS

SEC. 1601. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Pecan Promotion and Research Act of 1989".

SEC. 1602. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) pecans are a native American nut that is an important food, and is a valuable part of the human diet;

(2) the production of pecans plays a significant role in the economy of the United States in that pecans are produced by thousands of pecan producers, shelled and processed by numerous shellers and processors, and pecans produced in the United States are consumed by millions of people throughout the United States and foreign countries;

(3) pecans must be high quality, readily available, handled properly, and marketed efficiently to ensure that consumers have an adequate supply of pecans;

(4) the maintenance and expansion of existing markets and development of new markets for pecans are vital to the welfare of pecan producers and those concerned with marketing, using, and producing pecans, as well as to the general economy of the United States, and necessary to ensure the ready availability and efficient marketing of pecans;

(5) there exist established State organizations conducting pecan promotion, research, and consumer education programs that are invaluable to the efforts of promoting the consumption of pecans;

(6) the cooperative development, financing, and implementation of a coordinated national program of pecan promotion, research, and consumer information are necessary to maintain and expand existing markets and develop new markets for pecans; and

(7) pecans move in interstate and foreign commerce, and pecans that do not move in such channels of commerce and directly burden or affect interstate commerce in pecans.

(b) POLICY.—It is declared to be the policy of Congress that it is in the public interest to authorize the establishment, through the exercise of the powers provided in this chapter, of an orderly procedure for developing, financing (through adequate assessments on pecans produced or imported into the United States), and carrying out an effective, continuous, coordinated program of promotion, research, and consumer information designed to—

(1) strengthen the pecan industry's position in the marketplace;

(2) maintain and expand existing domestic and foreign markets and uses for pecans; and

(3) develop new markets and uses for pecans.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this chapter may be construed to provide for the control of production or otherwise limit the right of individual producers to produce pecans.

SEC. 1603. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this chapter:

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Pecan Marketing Board established in section 1608(b).

(2) COMMERCE.—The term "commerce" means interstate, foreign, or intrastate commerce.

(3) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—The term "conflict of interest" means a situation in which a member or director has a direct or indirect interest or investment in an entity, corporation, business, or a company dealing directly or indirectly with the Board.

(4) DEPARTMENT.—The term "Department" means the United States Department of Agriculture.

(5) DISTRICT.—The term "district" means the four geographic subdivisions of the United States that are approximately equal in the production volume of pecans, as determined by the Board and approved by the Secretary.

(6) FIRST HANDLER.—The term "first handler" means the first person who buys or takes possession of pecans from a grower. If a grower markets pecans directly, such grower shall be considered the first handler.

(7) GROWER.—The term "grower" means any person engaged in a proprietary capacity in the production and sale of pecans.

(8) GROWER-SHELLER.—The term "grower-sheller" means a person who—

(A) shells pecans, or has pecans shelled for such person, in the continental United States; and

(9) HANDLE.—The term "handle" means receipt of in-shell pecans by a sheller or first handler, including pecans produced by such sheller or first handler.

(10) IMPORTER.—The term "importer" means any person who imports pecans from a country outside of the United States for sale in the United States.

(11) INSHELL PECAN.—The term "inshell pecan" means a pecan that has a shell that has not been removed.

(12) MARKETING.—The term "marketing" means the sale or other disposition of pecans in any channel of commerce.

(13) MARKETING YEAR.—The term "marketing year" means the 12-month period from October 1 through September 30 or such other period of the time as may be recommended by the Board and established by the Secretary.

(14) MEMBER.—The term "member" means a member of the Board.

(15) PECAN.—The term "pecan" means the nut of the pecan tree carya illinoensis, both inshell or shelled equivalent, grown within the United States, or imported into the United States, that are introduced into the channels of commerce.

(16) PERSON.—The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or any other business unit.

(17) PROMOTION.—The term "promotion" means any action taken by the Board, pursuant to this chapter, to present a favorable image of pecans to the public with the express intent of improving the competitive position of pecans in the marketplace and stimulating sales of pecans, including paid advertising.

(18) RESEARCH.—The term "research" means any type of test, study, or analysis designed to advance the image, desirability, usage, marketability, production, product development, or quality of pecans.

(19) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(20) SHELL.—The term "shell" means to remove the shell from an inshell pecan.

(21) SHELLED PECAN.—The term "shelled pecan" means a pecan kernel, or portion of a kernel, after the pecan shell has been removed.

(22) SHELLER.—The term "sheller" means any person who—

(A) shells pecans or has pecans shelled for the account of such person; and

(B) purchases more than 50 percent of the pecans such person shells or has shelled for such account.

(23) STATE AND UNITED STATES.—The terms "State" and "United States" include the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

SEC. 1604. AUTHORITY TO ISSUE ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To effectuate the declared policy of section 1602(b), the Secretary shall, subject to this chapter, issue and from time to time amend, orders applicable to growers, shellers, first handlers, and importers of pecans. Any such order shall be national in scope. Not more than one order shall be in effect under this chapter at any one time.

SEC. 1605. NOTICE AND HEARINGS.

(a) ISSUANCE OF AN ORDER.—The Secretary may propose the issuance of an order under this chapter, or an association of pecan growers or grower-shellers or any other person that will be affected by this chapter may request the issuance of, and submit a proposal for, such an order.

(b) PUBLICATION OF ORDER.—Not later than 60 days after the receipt of a request and proposal by an interested person for an order, or when the Secretary determines to propose an order, the Secretary shall publish the proposed order and give due notice and opportunity for public comment on the proposed order.

SEC. 1606. FINDINGS AND ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—After notice and opportunity for public comment are given, as provided in section 1605, the Secretary shall issue the order, taking into consideration the comments received and including in the order provisions necessary to ensure that the order is in conformity with the requirements of this chapter.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Such order shall be issued and become effective not later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

SEC. 1607. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

SEC. 1608. REQUIRED TERMS IN ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each order issued under this chapter shall contain the terms and conditions prescribed in this section.

(b) PECAN MARKETING BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The order shall establish a Pecan Marketing Board to carry out the program referred to in section 1602(b).

(2) SERVICE TO ENTIRE INDUSTRY.—The Board shall carry out programs and projects that will provide maximum benefit to the pecan industry in all parts of the United States and only generically promote pecans.

(3) BOARD MEMBERSHIP.—The Board shall consist of 15 members, including—

(A) eight members who are growers;

(B) four members who are shellers;

(C) one member who is a first handler and who derives over 50 percent of the member's income from buying and selling pecans;

(D) one member who is an importer of pecans into the United States, nominated by the Board;

(E) one member representing the general public, appointed by the Board; and

(F) at the option of the Board, a consultant or advisor representing a pecan producing country other than the United States who may be chosen to attend Board functions as a nonvoting member.

(4) REPRESENTATION OF MEMBERS.—

(A) GROWER REPRESENTATIVES.—Of the growers referred to in paragraph (3)(A), two members shall be from each of the four districts in the United States.

(B) SHELLER REPRESENTATIVES.—Of the shellers referred to in paragraph (3)(B)—

(i) two members shall be from east of the Mississippi River; and

(ii) two members shall be from west of the Mississippi River.

(C) FIRST HANDLER REPRESENTATIVE.—The first handler representative on the Board referred to in paragraph (3)(C) shall be from one of the districts.

(D) IMPORTER REPRESENTATIVE.—The importer representative on the Board referred to in paragraph (3)(D) shall be an individual who imports pecans to the United States.

(E) PUBLIC REPRESENTATIVE.—The public representative on the Board referred to in paragraph (3)(E) shall not be a grower, sheller, or first handler.

(5) ALTERNATE FOR EACH MEMBER.—Each member on the Board shall have an alternate with the same qualifications as the member such alternate would replace.

(6) LIMITATION ON STATE RESIDENCE.—There shall be no more than one member from each State in each district, except that the State of Georgia may have two growers from such State representing the district that it is in.

(7) MODIFYING BOARD MEMBERSHIP.—In accordance with regulations approved by the Secretary, at least once each 3 years and not more than once each 2 years, the Board shall—

(A) review the geographic distribution of pecan production throughout the United States and the volume of imported pecans; and

(B) if warranted, recommend to the Secretary that the Secretary reapportion a district in order to reflect the geographic distribution of pecan production and the quantity of imported pecans.

(8) NOMINATION PROCESS FOR MEMBERS.—

(A) PUBLICITY.—The Board shall give reasonable publicity to the industry for nomination of persons interested in being elected to Board membership.

(B) ELIGIBILITY.—Any person referred to in paragraph (3) shall be eligible to vote at the nomination meetings for members who represent that class of members.

(C) NOMINATION OF MEMBERS.—Each person referred to in subparagraph (B) shall have one vote. The candidates receiving the largest number of votes cast for Board positions for each class of members shall be the nominees for such positions.

(D) CERTIFICATION.—The nominations made under subparagraph (C) shall be certified by the Board to the Secretary no later than May 1 preceding the commencement of the term of office for Board membership, as established in paragraph (9).

(E) APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary shall appoint the Board members certified under subparagraph (D).

(F) INITIAL BOARD.—For the purpose of obtaining nominations for the initial Board, the Secretary shall perform the functions of the Board under this paragraph.

(9) TERMS OF OFFICE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The members of the Board shall serve for terms of 3 years, except that the members appointed to the initial Board shall serve, proportionately, for terms of 1, 2, and 3 years, as determined by the Secretary.

(B) TERMINATION OF TERMS.—Each member shall continue to serve until a successor is appointed by the Secretary.

(C) LIMITATION ON TERMS.—No member shall serve more than 2 consecutive 3-year terms as a member.

(D) VACANCIES.—

(i) SUBMITTING NOMINATIONS.—To fill any vacancy created by the death, removal, resignation, or disqualification of any member of the Board, the Secretary shall request that nominations for a successor for such vacancy be submitted by the Board.

(ii) LACK OF NOMINATIONS.—If no eligible nomination is submitted under clause (i), the Secretary shall determine the manner of submission of nominations for the vacancy.

(10) COMPENSATION.—A member of the Board shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of duties for the Board.

(c) POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE BOARD.—The order shall define the powers and duties of the Board, which shall include the power and duty—

(1) to administer the order in accordance with its terms and provisions;

(2) to make rules to effectuate the terms and provisions of the order;

(3) to meet, organize, and select from among members of the Board a chairperson and such other officers as may be necessary to select committees and subcommittees of Board members;

(4) to establish working committees of persons other than Board members;

(5) to employ such persons as the Board considers necessary and determine the compensation and define the duties of such persons;

(6) to prepare and submit for the approval of the Secretary, prior to the beginning of each fiscal period, a recommended rate of assessment under section 1610, and a fiscal period budget of the anticipated expenses in the administration of this chapter, including the probable costs of all programs and projects;

(7) to develop programs and projects, subject to subsection (d);

(8) to enter into contracts or agreements, with the approval of the Secretary, to develop and carry out programs or projects of research and development;

(9) to carry out research and development, advertising or promotion, and pay the costs of such projects with funds collected pursuant to subsection (g), subject to subsections (d) and (e) of section 1609;

(10) to keep minutes, books, and records that reflect all of the acts and transactions of the Board, and promptly report minutes of each Board meeting to the Secretary;

(11) to appoint and convene, from time to time, working committees comprised of growers, grower-shellers, first handlers, and the public to assist in the development of research and promotion programs for pecans;

(12) to refrain from engaging in any action that would be a conflict of interest;

(13) to not engage in any advertising that may be false or misleading;

(14) to invest, pending disbursement under a plan or project, funds collected through assessments authorized under this chapter, only in—

(A) obligations of the United States or any agency thereof;

(B) general obligations of any State or any political subdivision thereof;

(C) any interest-bearing account or certificate of deposit of a bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System; or

(D) obligations fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, except that income from any such invested funds may be used for any purpose for which the invested funds may be used;

(15) to receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of the order;

(16) to furnish the Secretary with such information as the Secretary may request;

(17) to recommend to the Secretary amendments to the order; and

(18) to develop and recommend such rules and regulations to the Secretary for approval as may be necessary for the development and execution of programs or projects to carry out this chapter.

(d) PLANS AND BUDGETS.—

(1) SUBMISSION TO SECRETARY.—The order shall provide that the Board shall submit to the Secretary for approval any plan or project of promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information.

(2) BUDGETS.—The order shall require the Board, prior to the beginning of each fiscal year, or as may be necessary after the beginning of such fiscal year, to submit to the Secretary for approval budgets of its anticipated expenses and disbursements in the implementation of the order, including projected costs of promotion, research, development, advertising, consumer information, and industry information plans and projects.

(3) INCURRING EXPENSES.—The Board may incur such expenses for research, development, advertising, or promotion of pecans, and other expenses for the administration, maintenance, and functioning of the Board as may be authorized by the Secretary, including any implementation, administrative, and referendum costs incurred by the Department.

(4) PAYING EXPENSES.—The funds to cover the expenses referred to in paragraph (3) shall be paid from assessments collected under section 1610 or funds borrowed pursuant to paragraph (5).

(5) AUTHORITY TO BORROW.—In order to meet the expenses referred to in paragraph (3), the Board shall have the authority to borrow funds, as approved by the Secretary, for capital outlays and startup costs.

(6) LIMITATION ON SPENDING.—Effective on the date that is 3 years after the date of the establishment of the Board, the Board shall not spend in excess of 20 percent of the assessments collected under subsection (g) for administration of the Board.

(e) CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure efficient use of funds, the order shall provide that the Board may enter into contracts or agreements for the implementation and carrying out of plans or projects of pecan promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information, including contracts with grower and grower-sheller organizations, and for the payment of the cost thereof with funds received by the Board under the order.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Any such contract or agreement shall provide that—

(A) the contracting party shall develop and submit to the Board a plan or project together with a budget or budgets that shall show estimated costs to be incurred for such plan or project;

(B) the plan or project shall become effective on the approval of the Secretary; and

(C) the contracting party shall keep accurate records of all of its transactions, account for funds received and expended, make periodic reports to the Board of activities conducted, and make such other reports as the Board or the Secretary may require.

(3) GROWER AND GROWER-SHELLER ORGANIZATIONS.—The order shall provide that the Board may contract with grower and grower-sheller organizations for any other services. Any such contract shall include provisions comparable to those provided in paragraph (2).

(f) BOOKS AND RECORDS OF BOARD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require the Board to—

(A) maintain such books and records (which shall be available to the Secretary for inspection and audit) as the Secretary may prescribe;

(B) prepare and submit to the Secretary, from time to time, such reports as the Secretary may prescribe; and

(C) account for the receipt and disbursement of all funds entrusted to the Board.

(2) AUDITS.—The Board shall cause its books and records to be audited by an independent auditor at the end of each fiscal year, and a report of such audit to be submitted to the Secretary.

(g) PROHIBITION.—No fund collected by the Board under this chapter shall in any manner be used for the purpose of influencing legislation or governmental action, other than recommending to the Secretary amendments to this chapter.

(h) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require that each first handler, grower-sheller, or importer subject to this chapter shall—

(A) maintain and submit to the Board any reports considered necessary by the Secretary to ensure compliance with this chapter; and

(B) make available during normal business hours, for inspection by employees of the Board or Secretary, such books and records as are necessary to carry out this chapter, including such records as are necessary to verify any required reports.

(2) TIME REQUIREMENT.—The records required under paragraph (1) shall be maintained for 2 years beyond the fiscal period of the applicability of such records.

(3) OTHER INFORMATION.—In addition, the Secretary shall authorize the use under this chapter of information regarding first handlers, grower-shellers, and importers that may be accumulated under a law or regulation other than this chapter or regulations under this chapter.

(4) CONFIDENTIALITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), all information obtained from books, records, or reports required to be maintained under paragraph (1) shall be kept confidential, and shall not be disclosed to the public by any person.

(B) DISCLOSURE.—Information referred to in subparagraph (B) may be disclosed to the public only if—

(i) the Secretary considers the information relevant;

(ii) the information is revealed in a suit or administrative hearing brought at the direction or on the request of the Secretary or to which the Secretary or any officer of the Department is a party; and

(iii) the information relates to this chapter.

(C) BOARD MEMBERS AND EMPLOYEES.—Any disclosure of confidential information in violation of subparagraph (A) by any Board member or employee of the Board, except as required by other law or allowed under subparagraph (B), shall be considered a violation of this chapter.

(D) GENERAL STATEMENTS.—Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit the issuance of general statements based on reports of a number of first-handlers, grower-shellers, or importers, subject to the plan if such statements do not identify the information furnished by any person.

(5) AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION.—

(A) EXCEPTION.—Except as provided in section 1612, information obtained under this chapter may be made available to another agency of the Federal Government for a civil or criminal law enforcement activity if the activity is authorized by law and if the head of the agency has made a written request to the Secretary specifying the particular information desired and the law enforcement activity for which the information is sought.

(B) PENALTY.—Any person violating this subsection, on conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, and if an officer or employee of the Board or the Department, shall be removed from office.

(6) WITHHOLDING INFORMATION.—Nothing in this subsection shall authorize the Secretary to withhold information from a duly authorized committee or subcommittee of Congress.

(i) OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The order also shall contain such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with this chapter, as necessary to effectuate this chapter.

SEC. 1609. PERMISSIVE TERMS IN ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An order issued pursuant to this chapter may contain one or more of the terms and conditions contained in this section.

(b) EXEMPTIONS.—The order may provide authority to exempt from the order pecans used for nonfood uses, and authority for the Board to require satisfactory safeguards against improper uses of such exemptions.

(c) DIFFERENT PAYMENT AND REPORTING SCHEDULES.—The order may provide authority to designate different payment and reporting schedules for growers, grower-shellers, and importers to recognize differences in marketing practices and procedures utilized in different production areas.

(d) ADVERTISING.—The order may provide for the establishment, issuance, effectuation, and administration of appropriate programs or projects for the advertising and sales promotion of pecans and for the disbursement of necessary funds for such purposes, except that—

(1) any such program or project shall be directed toward increasing the general demand for pecans; and

(2) such promotional activities shall comply with other restrictions on the use of funds that are established under this chapter.

(e) RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.—The order may provide for establishing and carrying on research and development projects and studies to the end that the marketing and utilization of pecans may be encouraged, expanded, improved, or made more efficient, and for the disbursement of necessary funds for such purposes.

(f) RESERVE FUNDS.—The order may provide authority to accumulate reserve funds from assessments collected pursuant to this chapter, to permit an effective and continuous coordinated program of research, development, advertising, and promotion in years when the production and assessment income may be reduced, except that the total reserve fund may not exceed the amount budgeted for the operation of the order for 2 years.

(g) FOREIGN MARKETS.—The order may provide authority to use funds collected under this chapter, with the approval of the Secretary, for the development and expansion of pecan sales in foreign markets.

(h) OTHER TERMS.—The order may contain such other terms and conditions incidental to and not inconsistent with the terms and conditions specified in this chapter that are necessary to effectuate the other provisions of the order.

SEC. 1610. ASSESSMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—During the effective period of this chapter, assessments shall be—

(1) levied on all pecans produced in, or imported into, the United States; and

(2) deducted from the payment made to a grower for all pecans sold to a first handler.

(b) LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENTS.—No more than one assessment may be assessed under subsection (a) on a first handler, importer, or grower-sheller for any lot of pecans handled.

(c) REMITTING ASSESSMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Assessments required under subsection (a) shall be remitted to the Board by—

(A) a first handler; and

(B) a grower-sheller who markets pecans, in the form of pecans, to consumers either directly, through retail or wholesale outlets, or for export purposes.

(2) TIMES TO REMIT ASSESSMENT.—

(A) FIRST HANDLERS.—Each first handler who is responsible for the remittance of an assessment under paragraph (1) shall remit such assessment to the Board no later than the last day of the month following the month that the pecans being assessed were purchased or marketed.

(B) GROWER-SHELLERS.—Each grower-sheller who is responsible for the remittance of an assessment under paragraph (1) shall remit such assessment to the Board, to the extent practicable, in payments of one-third of the total annual amount of such assessment due to the Board on March 31, June 30, and September 30 or such dates as may be recommended by the Board and approved by the Secretary during the fiscal year that the pecans being assessed were produced and harvested.

(3) IMPORTERS.—Importers of pecans into the United States shall pay the assessment at the time the pecans or pecan equivalents enter the United States and such assessment shall be remitted to the Board.

(d) ASSESSMENT RATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Assessment rates shall be recommended by the Board and approved by the Secretary, except that the maximum assessment shall not exceed—

(A) during the period commencing on the effective date of the issuance of the plan and ending on the date the referendum is conducted under section 1614, one-half cent per pound in-shell or the equivalent; and

(B) after such period, up to 2 cents per pound in-shell or the equivalent.

(2) ADJUSTING RATE FOR OUT-OF-SHELL PECANS.—The in-shell rate of assessment established under paragraph (1) shall be established for shelled pecans or pecan equivalents at twice such in-shell rate.

(3) SPECIAL STATE ASSESSMENT.—In addition to the maximum assessment rate prescribed in paragraph (1), an additional one-quarter cent special State assessment may be remitted to the Board in a manner prescribed by the Secretary for the purpose of utilizing such funds by the State Board for research projects to promote pecans conducted pursuant to State law.

(e) LATE CHARGE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a late payment charge imposed on any person who fails to remit to the Board the total amount that such person is liable for on or before the due date established by the Board under subsection (c)(2).

(2) AMOUNT OF CHARGE.—The amount of the late payment charge imposed under paragraph (1) shall be prescribed by the Board and approved by the Secretary.

(f) REFUND OF ASSESSMENTS FROM ESCROW ACCOUNT.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF ESCROW ACCOUNT.—The Board shall—

(A) establish an escrow account to be used for assessment refunds; and

(B) place funds in such account in accordance with paragraph (2) during the period beginning on the effective date of the order and ending on the date the referendum is conducted under section 1614.

(2) PLACEMENT OF FUNDS IN ACCOUNT.—The Board shall place in such account, from assessments collected during the period referred to in paragraph (1), an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying the total amount of assessments collected during such period by 10 percent.

(3) RIGHT TO RECEIVE REFUND.—Subject to paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), any grower, grower-sheller, or importer shall have the right to demand and receive from the Board a one-time refund of assessments collected from such grower, grower-sheller, or importer during the period referred to in paragraph (1) if—

(A) such grower, grower-sheller, or importer is responsible for paying such assessments;

(B) such grower, grower-sheller, or importer does not support the program established under this chapter; and

(C) the program established by this chapter is not approved pursuant to the referendum conducted under section 1614.

(4) FORM OF DEMAND.—Such demand shall be made in accordance with regulations, on a form, and within a time period prescribed by the Board.

(5) MAKING OF REFUND.—Such refund shall be made on submission of proof satisfactory to the Board that such grower, grower-sheller, or importer paid the assessment for which refund is demanded.

(6) PRORATION.—If the amount in the escrow account required to be established by paragraph (1) is not sufficient to refund the total amount of assessments demanded by all eligible growers, grower-shellers, or importers under this subsection and the program established by this chapter is not approved pursuant to the referendum conducted under section 1614, the Board shall prorate the amount of such refunds among all eligible growers, grower-shellers, and importers who demand such refund.

(7) PROGRAM APPROVED.—If the program established by this chapter is approved pursuant to the referendum conducted under section 1614, all funds in the escrow account shall be returned to the Board for use by the Board and no refunds shall be paid.

SEC. 1611. PETITION AND REVIEW.

(a) PETITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A person subject to an order issued under this chapter may file with the Secretary a petition—

(A) stating that the order, any provision of the order, or any obligation imposed in connection with the order is not in accordance with law; and

(B) requesting a modification of the order or an exemption from the order.

(2) HEARINGS.—The petitioner shall be given the opportunity for a hearing on the petition, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(3) RULING.—After such hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling on the petition, which shall be final if in accordance with law.

(b) REVIEW.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—The district courts of the United States in any district in which such person is an inhabitant or carries on business are vested with jurisdiction to review such ruling, if a complaint for that purpose is filed within 20 days after the date of the entry of such ruling.

(2) PROCESS.—Service of process in such proceedings may be had on the Secretary by delivering a copy of the complaint to the Secretary, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

(3) REMANDS.—If the court determines that such ruling is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand such proceedings to the Secretary with directions—

(A) to make such ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law; or

(B) to take such further proceedings as, in its opinion, the law requires.

(4) ENFORCEMENT.—The pendency of proceedings instituted under subsection (a) shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary from obtaining relief pursuant to section 1612(a).

SEC. 1612. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) JURISDICTION.—The several district courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, this chapter or a regulation issued under this chapter.

(b) REFERRAL TO ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The facts relating to any civil action authorized to be brought under this section shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action, except that nothing in this chapter shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to refer to the Attorney General a violation of this chapter or a regulation issued under this chapter if the Secretary believes that the administration and enforcement of this chapter would be adequately served by administrative action under subsection (c) or suitable written notice or warning to any person committing the violation.

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES AND ORDERS.—

(1) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person who violates any provision of this chapter or a regulation issued under this chapter, or who fails or refuses to pay, collect, or remit any assessment or fee duly required of the person under this chapter or a regulation issued under this chapter, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each violation shall be considered as a separate offense.

(2) CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS.—In addition to, or in lieu of, such civil penalty, the Secretary may issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from continuing such violation.

(3) NOTICE AND HEARING.—No penalty shall be assessed or cease-and-desist order issued unless such person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary with respect to such violation.

(4) FINALITY.—The order of the Secretary assessing a penalty or imposing a cease-and-desist order shall be final and conclusive unless the affected person files an appeal from the Secretary's order with the appropriate United States court of appeals.

(d) REVIEW BY COURT OF APPEALS.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—Any person against whom a violation is found and a civil penalty assessed or cease-and-desist order issued under subsection (c) may obtain review of the penalty or order by—

(A) filing, within the 30-day period beginning on the date such penalty is assessed or order issued, a notice of appeal in—

(i) the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or carries on business; or

(ii) the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; and

(B) simultaneously sending a copy of the notice by certified mail to the Secretary.

(2) RECORD.—The Secretary shall promptly file in the court the record on which such violation was found.

(3) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The findings of the Secretary shall be set aside only if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence.

(e) FAILURE TO OBEY ORDERS.—Any person who fails to obey a cease-and-desist order after the order has become final and unappealable, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered a final judgment in favor of the Secretary, shall be subject to a civil penalty assessed by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing and for judicial review under the procedures specified in subsections (c) and (d) of not more than $500 for each offense. Each day during which the failure continues shall be considered as a separate offense.

(f) FAILURE TO PAY PENALTIES.—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for recovery of the amount assessed in an appropriate district court of the United States. In the action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

SEC. 1613. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make such investigations as the Secretary considers necessary—

(1) for the effective carrying out of the responsibilities of the Secretary under this chapter; or

(2) to determine whether a person has engaged or is engaging in any acts or practices that constitute a violation of any provision of this chapter, or any plan, rule, or regulation issued under this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—For the purpose of any such investigation, the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, and documents that are relevant to the inquiry.

(c) SUBPOENA.—Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Secretary may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Secretary, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation.

(d) CONTEMPTS.—Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as contempt thereof.

(e) PROCESS.—All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district of which such person is an inhabitant or wherever such person may be found.

(f) JURISDICTION.—The site of any hearings held under this section shall be within the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or has a principal place of business.

SEC. 1614. REQUIREMENT OF REFERENDUM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 24 months after the effective date of this chapter, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among growers, grower-shellers, and importers, who during a representative period determined by the Secretary have been engaged in the production or importation of pecans, for the purpose of ascertaining whether growers, grower-shellers, and importers favor continuation, termination, or suspension of the order.

(b) SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION.—If, as a result of any referendum conducted under this chapter, the Secretary determines that suspension or termination of an order is favored by a majority of the growers, grower-shellers, and importers voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall—

(1) within 6 months after making such determination, suspend or terminate, as appropriate, collection of assessments under the order; and

(2) suspend or terminate, as appropriate, activities under the order in an orderly manner as soon as practicable.

(c) COSTS OF REFERENDUM.—The Secretary shall be reimbursed from any assessments collected by the Board for any expenses incurred by the Department in connection with the conduct of any referendum under this chapter, except for the salaries of Government employees.

(d) MANNER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Referenda conducted pursuant to this chapter shall be conducted in such a manner as is determined by the Secretary.

(2) ADVANCE REGISTRATION.—A pecan grower, grower-sheller, or importer who chooses to vote in any referendum conducted under this chapter (1) shall register in person prior to the voting period at the appropriate local office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service for such pecan grower or grower-sheller, after receiving notice from such office concerning such referendum under paragraph (4).

(3) VOTING.—A pecan grower, grower-sheller, or importer who votes in any referendum conducted under this chapter shall vote in person at the appropriate local office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

(4) NOTICE.—Each Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office shall notify all pecan growers and grower-shellers in the area of such office at least 30 days prior to a referendum conducted under this chapter. Such notice shall explain the procedure established under this subsection.

SEC. 1615. SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION OF ORDERS.

(a) MANDATORY SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION.—The Secretary shall, whenever the Secretary finds that the order or any provision of the order obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this chapter, terminate or suspend the operation of such order or provision.

(b) OTHER REFERENDA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may conduct a referendum at any time, and shall hold a referendum on request of the Board or 10 percent or more of growers, grower-shellers, and importers, to determine if growers, grower-shellers, and importers favor the termination or suspension of the order.

(2) SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION.—The Secretary shall terminate or suspend such order, in accordance with section 1614(b), whenever the Secretary determines that such suspension or termination is favored by a majority of those voting in a referendum.

(3) COSTS; MANNER.—Subsections (c) and (d) of section 1614 shall apply to a referendum conducted under this subsection.

SEC. 1616. AMENDMENTS.

The provisions of this chapter applicable to plans shall be applicable to amendments to plans.

SEC. 1617. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The funds so appropriated shall not be available for payment of the expenses or expenditures of the Board in administering any provision of any order issued under this chapter.

CHAPTER 4—MUSHROOMS

SEC. 1701. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Mushroom Promotion, Research, and Consumer Information Act".

SEC. 1702. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) mushrooms are an important food that is a valuable part of the human diet;

(2) the production of mushrooms plays a significant role in the Nation's economy in that mushrooms are produced by hundreds of mushroom producers, distributed through thousands of wholesale and retail outlets, and consumed by millions of people throughout the United States and foreign countries;

(3) mushroom production benefits the environment by efficiently using agricultural byproducts;

(4) mushrooms must be high quality, readily available, handled properly, and marketed efficiently to ensure that the benefits of this important product are available to the people of the United States;

(5) the maintenance and expansion of existing markets and uses, and the development of new markets and uses, for mushrooms are vital to the welfare of producers and those concerned with marketing and using mushrooms, as well as to the agricultural economy of the Nation;

(6) the cooperative development, financing, and implementation of a coordinated program of mushroom promotion, research, and consumer information are necessary to maintain and expand existing markets for mushrooms; and

(7) mushrooms move in interstate and foreign commerce, and mushrooms that do not move in such channels of commerce directly burden or affect interstate commerce in mushrooms.

(b) POLICY.—It is declared to be the policy of Congress that it is in the public interest to authorize the establishment, through the exercise of the powers provided in this chapter, of an orderly procedure for developing, financing through adequate assessments on mushrooms produced domestically or imported into the United States, and carrying out an effective, continuous, and coordinated program of promotion, research, and consumer information designed to—

(1) strengthen the mushroom industry's position in the marketplace;

(2) maintain and expand existing markets and uses for mushrooms; and

(3) develop new markets and uses for mushrooms.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this chapter may be construed to provide for the control of production or otherwise limit the right of individual producers to produce mushrooms.

SEC. 1703. DEFINITIONS

As used in this chapter:

(1) COMMERCE.—The term "commerce" means interstate, foreign, or intrastate commerce.

(2) CONSUMER INFORMATION.—The term "consumer information" means information and programs that will assist consumers and other persons in making evaluations and decisions regarding the purchase, preparation, and use of mushrooms.

(3) COUNCIL.—The term "Council" means the Mushroom Council established under section 1705(b).

(4) DEPARTMENT.—The term "Department" means the United States Department of Agriculture.

(5) FIRST HANDLER.—The term "first handler" means any person, as described in an order issued under this chapter, who receives or otherwise acquires mushrooms from a producer and prepares for marketing or markets such mushrooms, including mushrooms of the person's own production.

(6) IMPORTER.—The term "importer" means any person who—

(A) imports, on average, over 500,000 pounds of mushrooms annually from outside the United States; or

(B) with respect to an amount of mushrooms that, on average, exceeds 500,000 pounds annually, acts as agent, broker, or consignee of any person or nation that produces mushrooms outside the United States for sale in the United States.

(7) INDUSTRY INFORMATION.—The term "industry information" means information and programs that will lead to the development of new markets and marketing strategies, increased efficiency, and activities to enhance the image of the mushroom industry.

(8) MARKETING.—The term "marketing" means the sale or other disposition of mushrooms in any channel of commerce.

(9) MUSHROOMS.—The term "mushrooms" means all varieties of cultivated mushrooms grown within the United States for the fresh market, or imported into the United States for the fresh market, that are introduced into the channels of commerce, except that such term shall not include mushrooms that are commercially marinated, canned, frozen, cooked, blanched, dried, packaged in brine, or otherwise processed, as may be determined by the Secretary.

(10) PERSON.—The term "person" means any individual, group of individuals, partnership, corporation, association, cooperative, or any other entity.

(11) PRODUCER.—The term "producer" means any person engaged in the production of mushrooms who owns or who shares the ownership and risk of loss of such mushrooms and who produces, on average, over 500,000 pounds of mushrooms per year.

(12) PROMOTION.—The term "promotion" means any action determined by the Secretary to enhance the image or desirability of mushrooms, including paid advertising.

(13) RESEARCH.—The term "research" means any type of study to advance the image, desirability, marketability, production, product development, quality, or nutritional value of mushrooms.

(14) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(15) STATE AND UNITED STATES.—The terms "State" and "United States" include the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

SEC. 1704. ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To effectuate the declared policy of section 1702(b), the Secretary, subject to the procedures provided in subsection (b), shall issue orders under this chapter applicable to producers, importers, and first handlers of mushrooms. Any such order shall be national in scope. Not more than one order shall be in effect under this chapter at any one time.

(b) PROCEDURES.—

(1) ISSUANCE OF AN ORDER.—The Secretary may propose the issuance of an order under this chapter, or an association of mushroom producers or any other person that will be affected by this chapter may request the issuance of, and submit a proposal for, such an order.

(2) PUBLICATION OF ORDER.—Not later than 60 days after the receipt of a request and proposal by an interested person for an order, or when the Secretary determines to propose an order, the Secretary shall publish the proposed order and give due notice and opportunity for public comment on the proposed order.

(3) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—After notice and opportunity for public comment are given, as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall issue the order, taking into consideration the comments received and including in the order provisions necessary to ensure that the order is in conformity with the requirements of this chapter. Such order shall be issued and, if approved by producers and importers of mushrooms as provided in section 1706(a), shall become effective not later than 120 days following publication of the proposed order.

(c) AMENDMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, from time to time, may amend any order issued under this section.

(2) APPLICATION OF CHAPTER.—Except as otherwise provided in section 1705(g)(2)(B), the provisions of this chapter applicable to an order shall be applicable to amendments to the order.

SEC. 1705. REQUIRED TERMS IN ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each order issued under this chapter shall contain the terms and conditions prescribed in this section.

(b) MUSHROOM COUNCIL.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND MEMBERSHIP OF COUNCIL.—

(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—The order shall provide for the establishment of, and selection of members to, a Mushroom Council that shall consist of at least four members and not more than nine members.

(B) MEMBERSHIP.—Except as provided for in paragraph (2), the members of the Council shall be mushroom producers and importers appointed by the Secretary from nominations submitted by producers and importers in the manner authorized by the Secretary, except that no more than one member may be appointed to the Council from nominations submitted by any one producer or importer.

(2) APPOINTMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In making appointments, the Secretary shall take into account, to the extent practicable, the geographical distribution of mushroom production throughout the United States, and the comparative volume of mushrooms imported into the United States.

(B) UNITS.—In establishing such geographical distribution of mushroom production, a whole State shall be considered as a unit and such units shall be organized into four regions that shall fairly represent the geographic distribution of mushroom production within the United States.

(C) IMPORTERS.—Importers shall be represented as a separate region.

(D) MEMBERS PER REGION.—The Secretary shall appoint one member from each region that produces or imports, on average, at least 35,000,000 pounds of mushrooms annually.

(E) ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.—Subject to the nine-member limit on the number of members on the Council provided in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall appoint an additional member to the Council from a region for each additional 50,000,000 pounds of production or imports per year, on average, within the region.

(3) TERMS; COMPENSATION.—

(A) TERMS.—The term of appointment to the Council shall be for 3 years, except that the initial appointments shall to the extent practicable be proportionately for 1-year, 2-year, and 3-year terms.

(B) COMPENSATION.—Council members shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for their expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the Council.

(c) POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COUNCIL.—The order shall define the powers and duties of the Council, which shall include the power and duty—

(1) to administer the order in accordance with its terms and provisions;

(2) to make rules to effectuate the terms and provisions of the order;

(3) to appoint members of the Council to serve on an executive committee;

(4) to propose, receive, evaluate, and approve budgets, plans, and projects of mushroom promotion, research, consumer information, and industry information, as well as to contract and enter into agreements with appropriate persons to implement plans or projects;

(5) to develop and propose to the Secretary voluntary quality and grade standards for mushrooms;

(6) to receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of the order;

(7) to recommend to the Secretary amendments to the order; and

(8) to invest, pending disbursement under a plan or project, funds collected through assessments authorized under this chapter, only in—

(A) obligations of the United States or any agency thereof;

(B) general obligations of any State or any political subdivision thereof;

(C) any interest-bearing account or certificate of deposit of a bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System; or

(D) obligations fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, except that income from any such invested funds may be used for any purpose for which the invested funds may be used.

(d) PLANS AND BUDGETS.—

(1) SUBMISSION TO SECRETARY.—The order shall provide that the Council shall submit to the Secretary for approval any plan or project of promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information.

(2) BUDGETS.—The order shall require the Council to submit to the Secretary for approval budgets on a fiscal year basis of its anticipated expenses and disbursements in the implementation of the order, including projected costs of promotion, research, consumer information, and industry information plans and projects.

(3) APPROVAL BY SECRETARY.—No plan or project of promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information, or budget, shall be implemented prior to its approval by the Secretary.

(e) CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure efficient use of funds, the order shall provide that the Council may enter into contracts or agreements for the implementation and carrying out of plans or projects of mushroom promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information, including contracts with producer organizations, and for the payment of the cost thereof with funds received by the Council under the order.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Any such contract or agreement shall provide that—

(A) the contracting party shall develop and submit to the Council a plan or project together with a budget or budgets that shall show estimated costs to be incurred for such plan or project;

(B) the plan or project shall become effective on the approval of the Secretary; and

(C) the contracting party shall keep accurate records of all of its transactions, account for funds received and expended, make periodic reports to the Council of activities conducted, and make such other reports as the Council or the Secretary may require.

(3) PRODUCER ORGANIZATIONS.—The order shall provide that the Council may contract with producer organizations for any other services. Any such contract shall include provisions comparable to those provided in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (2).

(f) BOOKS AND RECORDS OF COUNCIL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require the Council to—

(A) maintain such books and records (which shall be available to the Secretary for inspection and audit) as the Secretary may prescribe;

(B) prepare and submit to the Secretary, from time to time, such reports as the Secretary may prescribe; and

(C) account for the receipt and disbursement of all funds entrusted to the Council.

(2) AUDITS.—The Council shall cause its books and records to be audited by an independent auditor at the end of each fiscal year, and a report of such audit to be submitted to the Secretary.

(g) ASSESSMENTS.—

(1) COLLECTION AND PAYMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The order shall provide that each first handler of mushrooms for the domestic fresh market produced in the United States shall collect, in the manner prescribed by the order, assessments from producers and remit the assessments to the Council.

(B) IMPORTERS.—The order also shall provide that each importer of mushrooms for the domestic fresh market shall pay assessments to the Council in the manner prescribed by the order.

(C) DIRECT MARKETING.—Any person marketing mushrooms of that person's own production directly to consumers shall remit the assessments on such mushrooms directly to the Council in the manner prescribed in the order.

(2) RATE OF ASSESSMENT.—

(A) INITIAL RATE.—The rate of assessment prescribed by the order—

(i) for the first year of the order, may not exceed one-quarter cent per pound of mushrooms;

(ii) for the second year of the order, may not exceed one-half cent per pound of mushrooms; and

(iii) for the third and following years of the order, may not exceed one cent per pound of mushrooms, except as provided in subparagraph (B).

(B) ADJUSTMENT OF ASSESSMENT.—Effective beginning with the fourth year of the order, the Secretary may amend the order, on the recommendation of the Council, to prescribe a rate of assessment not to exceed 2 cents per pound of mushrooms. Any such amendment shall become effective on its issuance by the Secretary, except that an amendment that increases the rate of assessment above 1 cent per pound shall not be effective unless approved in a referendum conducted under section 1706.

(3) USE OF ASSESSMENTS.—The order shall provide that the assessments shall be used for payment of the expenses in implementing and administering this chapter, with provision for a reasonable reserve, and to cover those administrative costs incurred by the Secretary in implementing and administering this chapter, except for the salaries of Government employees incurred in conducting referenda.

(4) LIMITATION ON COLLECTION.—No assessment may be collected on mushrooms that a first handler certifies will be exported as mushrooms.

(h) PROHIBITION.—The order shall prohibit any funds received by the Council under the order from being used in any manner for the purpose of influencing legislation or government action or policy, except that such funds may be used by the Council for the development and recommendation to the Secretary of amendments to the order as prescribed in this chapter and for the submission to the Secretary of voluntary grade and quality standards for mushrooms under the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1946 (7 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.).

(i) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The order shall require that each handler of mushrooms, importer of mushrooms, and each person marketing mushrooms of such person's own production maintain, and make available for inspection, such books and records as may be required by the order and file reports at the time, in the manner, and having the content prescribed by the order.

(2) AVAILABILITY TO SECRETARY.—Such information shall be made available to the Secretary as is appropriate for the administration or enforcement of this chapter, the order, or any regulation issued under this chapter.

(3) OTHER INFORMATION.—In addition, the Secretary shall authorize the use under this chapter of information regarding handlers and importers that may be accumulated under a law or regulation other than this chapter or regulations under this chapter.

(4) CONFIDENTIALITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—All information obtained by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be kept confidential by all officers and employees of the Department and agents of the Council and only such information so obtained as the Secretary considers relevant may be disclosed by them and then only in a suit or administrative hearing brought at the request of the Secretary, or to which the Secretary or any officer of the United States is a party, and involving the order.

(B) LIMITATIONS.—Nothing in this paragraph may be construed to prohibit—

(i) the issuance of general statements, based on the reports, of the number of persons subject to the order or statistical data collected therefrom, which statements do not identify the information furnished by any person; or

(ii) the publication, by direction of the Secretary, of the name of any person violating the order, together with a statement of the particular provisions of the order violated by such person.

(5) AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in section 1708, information obtained under this chapter may be made available to another agency of the Federal Government for a civil or criminal law enforcement activity if the activity is authorized by law and if the head of the agency has made a written request to the Secretary specifying the particular information desired and the law enforcement activity for which the information is sought.

(B) PENALTY.—Any person violating this subsection, on conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, and if an officer or employee of the Council or the Department, shall be removed from office.

(6) WITHHOLDING INFORMATION.—Nothing in this subsection shall authorize the Secretary to withhold information from a duly authorized committee or subcommittee of Congress.

(j) OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The order also shall contain such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with this chapter, as are necessary to effectuate this chapter, including provisions for the assessment of a penalty for each late payment of assessments under subsection (g).

SEC. 1706. REFERENDA.

(a) INITIAL REFERENDUM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Within the 60-day period immediately preceding the effective date of an order issued under section 1704(b), the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among mushroom producers and importers to ascertain whether the order shall go into effect.

(2) APPROVAL OF ORDER.—The order shall become effective, as provided in section 1704(b), if the Secretary determines that it has been approved by a majority of the producers and importers voting in the referendum, which majority, on average, annually produces and imports into the United States more than 50 percent of the mushrooms annually produced and imported by all those voting in the referendum.

(b) SUCCEEDING REFERENDA.—

(1) DETERMINATION CONCERNING ORDER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Effective 5 years after the date on which an order becomes effective under section 1704(b), the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among mushroom producers and importers to ascertain whether they favor continuation, termination, or suspension of the order.

(B) REQUEST FOR REFERENDUM.—Effective beginning 3 years after the date on which an order becomes effective under section 1704(b), the Secretary, on request of a representative group comprising 30 percent or more of the number of mushroom producers and importers, may conduct a referendum, to ascertain whether producers and importers favor termination or suspension of the order.

(2) SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION.—If, as a result of any referendum conducted under paragraph (1), the Secretary determines that suspension or termination of an order is favored by a majority of the producers and importers voting in the referendum, which majority, on average, annually produces and imports into the United States more than 50 percent of the mushrooms annually produced and imported by all those voting in the referendum, the Secretary shall—

(A) within 6 months after making such determination, suspend or terminate, as appropriate, collection of assessments under the order; and

(B) suspend or terminate, as appropriate, activities under the order in an orderly manner as soon as practicable.

(c) MANNER.—Referenda conducted pursuant to this section shall be conducted in such a manner as is determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 1707. PETITION AND REVIEW.

(a) PETITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A person subject to an order issued under this chapter may file with the Secretary a petition—

(A) stating that the order, any provision of the order, or any obligation imposed in connection with the order is not in accordance with law; and

(B) requesting a modification of the order or an exemption from the order.

(2) HEARINGS.—The petitioner shall be given the opportunity for a hearing on the petition, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(3) RULING.—After such hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling on the petition, which shall be final if in accordance with law.

(b) REVIEW.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—The district courts of the United States in any district in which such person is an inhabitant or carries on business are vested with jurisdiction to review such ruling, if a complaint for that purpose is filed within 20 days after the date of the entry of such ruling.

(2) PROCESS.—Service of process in such proceedings may be had on the Secretary by delivering a copy of the complaint to the Secretary, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

(3) REMANDS.—If the court determines that such ruling is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand such proceedings to the Secretary with directions—

(A) to make such ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law; or

(B) to take such further proceedings as, in its opinion, the law requires.

(4) ENFORCEMENT.—The pendency of proceedings instituted under subsection (a) shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary from obtaining relief pursuant to section 1708.

SEC. 1708. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) JURISDICTION.—The several district courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, any order or regulation made or issued under this chapter.

(b) REFERRAL TO ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The facts relating to any civil action authorized to be brought under this section shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action, except that nothing in this chapter shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to refer to the Attorney General a violation of this chapter if the Secretary believes that the administration and enforcement of the order or regulation would be adequately served by administrative action under subsection (c) or suitable written notice or warning to any person committing the violation.

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES AND ORDERS.—

(1) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person who violates any provision of any order or regulation issued by the Secretary under this chapter, or who fails or refuses to pay, collect, or remit any assessment or fee duly required of the person under the order or regulation, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each such violation. Each violation shall be considered as a separate offense.

(2) CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS.—In addition to, or in lieu of, such civil penalty, the Secretary may issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from continuing such violation.

(3) NOTICE AND HEARING.—No penalty shall be assessed or cease-and-desist order issued unless such person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary with respect to such violation.

(4) FINALITY.—The order of the Secretary assessing a penalty or imposing a cease-and-desist order shall be final and conclusive unless the affected person files an appeal from the Secretary's order with the appropriate United States court of appeals.

(d) REVIEW BY COURT OF APPEALS.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—Any person against whom a violation is found and a civil penalty assessed or cease-and-desist order issued under subsection (c) may obtain review of the penalty or order by—

(A) filing, within the 30-day period beginning on the date such penalty is assessed or order issued, a notice of appeal in—

(i) the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or carries on business; or

(ii) the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; and

(B) simultaneously sending a copy of the notice by certified mail to the Secretary.

(2) RECORD.—The Secretary shall promptly file in the court the record on which such violation was found.

(3) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The findings of the Secretary shall be set aside only if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence.

(e) FAILURE TO OBEY ORDERS.—Any person who fails to obey a cease-and-desist order after the order has become final and unappealable, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered a final judgment in favor of the Secretary, shall be subject to a civil penalty assessed by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing and for judicial review under the procedures specified in subsections (c) and (d) of not more than $500 for each offense. Each day during which the failure continues shall be considered as a separate offense.

(f) FAILURE TO PAY PENALTIES.—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for recovery of the amount assessed in an appropriate district court of the United States. In the action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

SEC. 1709. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

(a) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Secretary may make such investigations as the Secretary considers necessary for the effective administration of this chapter or to determine whether any person subject to this chapter has engaged or is about to engage in any action that constitutes or will constitute a violation of this chapter or of any order or regulation issued under this chapter.

(b) SUBPOENAS, OATHS, AND AFFIRMATIONS.—For the purpose of such investigation, the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any records that are relevant to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from anyplace in the United States.

(c) AID OF COURTS.—In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Secretary may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of the person and the production of records. The court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Secretary to produce records or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Process in any such case may be served in the judicial district in which such person is an inhabitant or wherever such person may be found.

SEC. 1710. SAVINGS PROVISION.

Nothing in this chapter may be construed to preempt or supersede any other program relating to mushroom promotion, research, consumer information, or industry information organized and operated under the laws of the United States or any State.

SEC. 1711. SUSPENSION OR TERMINATION OF ORDERS.

The Secretary shall, whenever the Secretary finds that the order or any provision of the order obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this chapter, terminate or suspend the operation of such order or provision.

SEC. 1712. AMENDMENTS.

The provisions of this chapter applicable to orders shall be applicable to amendments to orders.

SEC. 1713. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The funds so appropriated shall not be available for payment of the expenses or expenditures of the Council in administering any provisions of an order issued under this chapter.

SEC. 1714. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

CHAPTER 5—LIMES

SEC. 1801. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Lime Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act".

SEC. 1802. FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND LIMITATIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) domestically produced limes are grown by many individual producers;

(2) virtually all domestically produced limes are grown in the States of Florida and California;

(3) limes move in large part in channels of interstate and foreign commerce;

(4) in recent years, large quantities of limes have been imported into the United States;

(5) the maintenance and expansion of existing domestic and foreign markets for limes and the development of additional and improved markets for limes are vital to the welfare of lime producers and other persons concerned with producing, marketing, or processing limes;

(6) a coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer information regarding limes is necessary for the maintenance and development of such markets; and

(7) lime producers, lime producer-handlers, lime handlers, and lime importers are unable to implement and finance such a program without cooperative action.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this chapter are—

(1) to authorize the establishment of an orderly procedure for the development and financing (through an adequate assessment) of an effective and coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer information regarding limes designed—

(A) to strengthen the position of the lime industry in domestic and foreign markets; and

(B) to maintain, develop, and expand markets for limes; and

(2) to treat domestic and foreign producers of limes equitably.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) QUALITY STANDARDS AND PRODUCTION.—Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to require quality standards for limes, control the production of limes, or otherwise limit the right of the individual producers to produce limes.

(2) IMPORTED LIMES.—Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as a trade barrier to limes produced in foreign countries.

SEC. 1803. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this chapter:

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Lime Board provided for under section 1805(b).

(2) CONSUMER INFORMATION.—The term "consumer information" means any action taken to provide information to, and broaden the understanding of, the general public regarding the use, nutritional attributes, and care of limes.

(3) HANDLE.—The term "handle" means to sell, purchase, or package limes.

(4) HANDLER.—The term "handler" means any person in the business of handling limes.

(5) IMPORTER.—The term "importer" means any person who—

(A) imports limes into the United States; or

(B) acts as an agent, broker, or consignee for any person or nation that produces limes outside of the United States for sale in the United States.

(6) LIME.—The term "lime" means the fruit of a citrus aurantifolia tree for the fresh market.

(7) MARKETING.—The term "marketing" means the sale or other disposition of limes in commerce.

(8) ORDER.—The term "order" means a lime research, promotion, and consumer information order issued by the Secretary under section 1804(a).

(9) PERSON.—The term "person" means any individual, group of individuals, partnership, corporation, association, cooperative, or other entity.

(10) PRODUCER.—The term "producer" means any person who produces limes in the United States for sale in commerce.

(11) PRODUCER-HANDLER.—The term "producer-handler" means any person who is both a producer and handler of limes.

(12) PROMOTION.—The term "promotion" means any action taken under this chapter (including paid advertising) to present a favorable image for limes to the general public with the express intent of improving the competitive position and stimulating the sale of limes.

(13) RESEARCH.—The term "research" means any type of research relating to the use and nutritional value of limes and designed to advance the image, desirability, marketability, or quality of limes.

(14) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(15) STATE AND UNITED STATES.—The terms "State" and "United States" include the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

SEC. 1804. ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to this chapter, and to effectuate the declared purposes of this chapter, the Secretary shall issue and, from time to time, amend lime research, promotion, and consumer information orders applicable to handlers, producers, producer-handlers, and importers of limes.

(b) NOTICE AND PUBLIC COMMENT.—The Secretary shall publish each order proposed to be issued under subsection (a) and give due notice and opportunity for public comment on such order.

(c) SUBMISSION OF A PROPOSED ORDER OR AMENDMENT.—A proposal for an order or amendment under subsection (a) may be submitted by, and an opportunity for public comment may be requested by, any person affected by this chapter.

(d) INITIAL PROPOSAL.—In the case of the first proposal for an order the Secretary receives under subsection (c), the Secretary shall comply with subsection (b) not later than the end of the 30-day period beginning on the date the Secretary receives such proposal.

(e) FINDINGS AND ISSUANCE OF AN ORDER.—After notice of and an opportunity for public comments has been provided under subsection (b), the order or amendment that is the subject of such notice and public comment shall be issued if the Secretary finds that, on the basis of the evidence introduced by such public comment, the issuance of the order or amendment and all the terms and conditions therein will further the purposes of this chapter.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—An order issued under subsection (a) shall take effect on the date such order is published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 1805. REQUIRED TERMS OF ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An order issued by the Secretary under section 1804(a) shall contain the terms and conditions described in this section and, except as provided in section 1806, no other terms or conditions.

(b) LIME BOARD.—Such order shall provide for the establishment of a Lime Board as follows:

(1) MEMBERSHIP.—The Board shall be composed of—

(A) seven members who are producers and who are not exempt from an assessment under subsection (d)(5)(A);

(B) three members who are importers and who are not exempt from an assessment under subsection (d)(5)(A); and

(C) one member appointed from the general public.

(2) APPOINTMENT AND NOMINATION.—

(A) APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary shall appoint the members of the Board.

(B) PRODUCERS.—The seven members who are producers shall be appointed from individuals nominated by lime producers.

(C) IMPORTERS.—The three members who are importers shall be appointed from individuals nominated by lime importers.

(D) PUBLIC.—The public representative shall be appointed from nominations of the Board.

(E) FAILURE TO NOMINATE.—If producers and importers fail to nominate individuals for appointment, the Secretary may appoint members on a basis provided for in the order. If the Board fails to nominate a public representative, such member may be appointed without a nomination.

(3) ALTERNATES.—The Secretary shall appoint an alternate for each member of the Board. An alternate shall—

(A) be appointed in the same manner as the member for whom such individual is an alternate; and

(B) serve on the Board if such member is absent from a meeting or is disqualified under paragraph (5).

(4) TERMS.—Members of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 3 years. Of the members first appointed—

(A) three members shall be appointed for a term of 1 year;

(B) four members shall be appointed for a term of 2 years; and

(C) four members shall be appointed for a term of 3 years;

as designated by the Secretary at the time of appointment.

(5) REPLACEMENT.—If a member or alternate of the Board who was appointed as a producer, importer, or public representative ceases to belong to the group for which such member was appointed, such member or alternate shall be disqualified from serving on the Board.

(6) COMPENSATION.—Members and alternates of the Board shall serve without pay.

(7) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of duties for the Board, members and alternates shall be allowed travel expenses, including a per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed travel expenses under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(8) POWERS AND DUTIES.—The Board shall—

(A) administer orders issued by the Secretary under section 1804(a), and amendments to such orders, in accordance with their terms and provisions and consistent with this chapter;

(B) prescribe rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of such orders;

(C) receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary accounts of violations of such orders;

(D) make recommendations to the Secretary with respect to amendments that should be made to such orders; and

(E) employ a manager and staff.

(c) BUDGETS AND PLANS.—Such order shall provide for periodic budgets and plans as follows:

(1) BUDGETS.—The Board shall prepare and submit to the Secretary a budget (on a fiscal period basis determined by the Secretary) of the anticipated expenses and disbursements of the Board in the administration of the order, including probable costs of research, promotion, and consumer information. A budget shall take effect on the approval of the Secretary.

(2) PLANS.—Each budget shall include a plan for research, promotion, and consumer information regarding limes. A plan under this paragraph shall take effect on the approval of the Secretary. The Board may enter into contracts and agreements, with the approval of the Secretary, for—

(A) the development and carrying out of such plan; and

(B) the payment of the cost of such plan with funds collected pursuant to this chapter.

(d) ASSESSMENTS.—Such order shall provide for the imposition and collection of assessments with regard to the production and importation of limes as follows:

(1) RATE.—The assessment rate shall not exceed $.01 per pound of limes.

(2) COLLECTION BY FIRST HANDLERS.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), the first handler of limes shall—

(A) be responsible for the collection from the producer, and payment to the Board, of assessments under this subsection; and

(B) maintain a separate record of the limes of each producer so handled, including the limes owned by the handler.

(3) PRODUCER-HANDLERS.—For purposes of paragraph (2), a producer-handler shall be considered the first handler of limes produced by such producer-handler.

(4) IMPORTERS.—The assessment on imported limes shall be paid by the importer at the time of entry into the United States and shall be remitted to the Board.

(5) EXCEPTIONS.—

(A) DE MINIMIS QUANTITIES.—The following persons are exempt from an assessment under this subsection—

(i) a producer who produces less than 35,000 pounds of limes per year;

(ii) a producer-handler who produces and handles less than 35,000 pounds of limes per year; and

(iii) an importer who imports less than 35,000 pounds of limes per year

(B) INTRASTATE SHIPMENTS.—Intrastate shipments of limes shall—

(i) be exempt from the assessment required under this subsection; and

(ii) not be included in the calculation of limes produced or handled for purposes of subparagraph (A).

(6) CLAIMING AN EXEMPTION.—To claim an exemption under paragraph (5) for a particular year, a person shall submit an application to the Board—

(A) stating the basis for such exemption; and

(B) certifying that such person will not exceed the limitation required for such exemption in such year.

(e) USE OF ASSESSMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Such order shall provide that funds paid to the Board as assessments under subsection (d)—

(A) may be used by the Board to—

(i) pay for research, promotion, and consumer information described in the then current budget of the Board under subsection (c) and for other expenses incurred by the Board in the administration of an order;

(ii) pay such other expenses for the administration, maintenance, and functioning of the Board as may be authorized by the Secretary; and

(iii) fund a reserve established under section 1806(5); and

(B) shall be used to pay the expenses incurred by the Secretary, including salaries and expenses of government employees in implementing and administering the order, except as provided in paragraph (2).

(2) REFERENDA.—Such order shall provide that the Board shall reimburse the Secretary, from assessments collected under subsection (d), for any expenses incurred by the Secretary in conducting referenda under this chapter, except for the salaries of Government employees.

(f) FALSE CLAIMS.—Such order shall provide that any promotion funded with assessments collected under subsection (d) may not make—

(1) any false or unwarranted claims on behalf of limes; and

(2) any false or unwarranted statements with respect to the attributes or use of any product that competes with limes for sale in commerce.

(g) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS.—Such order shall provide that funds collected by the Board under this chapter through assessments authorized by this chapter may not, in any manner, be used for the purpose of influencing legislation or governmental policy or action, except for making recommendations to the Secretary as provided for in this chapter.

(h) BOOKS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS.—

(1) BY THE BOARD.—Such order shall require the Board—

(A) to maintain books and records with respect to the receipt and disbursement of funds received by the Board;

(B) to submit to the Secretary from time to time such reports as the Secretary may require for appropriate accounting; and

(C) to submit to the Secretary at the end of each fiscal year a complete audit report regarding the activities of the Board during such fiscal year.

(2) BY OTHERS.—So that information and data will be available to the Board and the Secretary that is appropriate or necessary for the effectuation, administration, or enforcement of this chapter (or any order or regulation issued under to this chapter), such order shall require handlers, producer-handlers, and importers who are responsible for the collection of assessments under subsection (d)—

(A) to maintain and make available for inspection by the Secretary such books and records as may be required by the order; and

(B) to file, at the times, in the manner, and having the content prescribed by the order, reports regarding the collection of such assessments.

(i) CONFIDENTIALITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Such order shall require that all information obtained pursuant to subsection (h)(2) shall be kept confidential by all officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture and of the Board. Only such information as the Secretary considers relevant shall be disclosed and only in a suit or administrative hearing brought at the request of the Secretary or to which the Secretary or any officer of the United States is a party involving the order with respect to which the information was furnished or acquired.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—Nothing in this subsection prohibits—

(A) issuance of general statements based on the reports of a number of handlers, producer-handlers, and importers subject to an order, if the statements do not identify the information furnished by any person; or

(B) the publication by direction of the Secretary, of the name of any person violating an order issued under section 1804(a), together with a statement of the particular provisions of the order violated by such person.

SEC. 1806. PERMISSIVE TERMS OF ORDERS.

On the recommendation of the Board and with the approval of the Secretary, an order issued under section 1804(a) may—

(1) provide authority to the Board to exempt from such order limes exported from the United States, subject to such safeguards as the Board may establish to ensure proper use of the exemption;

(2) provide that, with respect to any Federal marketing order regarding limes, that—

(A) is in effect before the date of the enactment of this chapter; and

(B) the Secretary determines is comparable to the program established under this chapter;

there shall be paid to the Board as provided in section 1805(d) that portion of the assessment under such section that is greater than the assessment, if any, actually paid on the limes pursuant to such other marketing order;

(3) provide authority to the Board to designate different handler payment and reporting schedules to recognize differences in marketing practices and procedures;

(4) provide that the Board may convene from time to time working groups drawn from producers, handlers, producer-handlers, importers, exporters, or the general public to assist in the development of research and marketing programs for limes;

(5) provide authority to the Board to accumulate reserve funds from assessments collected pursuant to section 1805(d) to permit an effective and continuous coordinated program of research, promotion, and consumer information, in years in which production and assessment income may be reduced, except that any reserve fund so established may not exceed the amount budgeted for operation of this chapter for 1 year;

(6) provide authority to the Board to use, with the approval of the Secretary, funds collected under section 1805(d) for the development and expansion of lime sales in foreign markets; and

(7) provide for terms and conditions—

(A) incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the terms and conditions specified in this chapter; and

(B) necessary to effectuate the other provisions of such order.

SEC. 1807. PETITION AND REVIEW.

(a) PETITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A person subject to an order may submit to the Secretary, within a period prescribed by the Secretary, a written petition—

(A) stating that such order, a provision of such order, or an obligation imposed in connection with such order is not in accordance with law; and

(B) requesting a modification of the order or an exemption from the order.

(2) HEARINGS.—A person submitting a petition under paragraph (1) shall be given an opportunity for a hearing on the petition, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(3) RULING.—After the hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling on the petition that shall be subject to review under subsection (b).

(b) REVIEW.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—A person aggrieved by a ruling under subsection (a)(3) may obtain a review of such ruling by commencing, within the 20-day period beginning on the date such ruling is made, a civil action in the district court of the United States for the district in which—

(A) such person resides; or

(B) carries on business related to the subject matter of such action.

(2) PROCESS.—Service of process in such civil action may be made on the Secretary by delivering to the Secretary a copy of the complaint.

(3) REMANDS.—If the court determines that the ruling is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceedings to the Secretary with directions—

(A) to make a ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law; or

(B) to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires.

(4) ENFORCEMENT.—The pendency of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary from obtaining relief pursuant to section 1808.

SEC. 1808. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) JURISDICTION.—The several district courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, any order or regulation made or issued under this chapter.

(b) REFERRAL TO ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The facts relating to any civil action authorized to be brought under this section shall be referred to the Attorney General for appropriate action, except that nothing in this chapter shall be construed as requiring the Secretary to refer to the Attorney General a violation of this chapter if the Secretary believes that the administration and enforcement of the order or regulation would be adequately served by administrative action under subsection (c) or suitable written notice or warning to any person committing the violation.

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES AND ORDERS.—

(1) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person who violates any provision of any order or regulation issued by the Secretary under this chapter, or who fails or refuses to pay, collect, or remit any assessment or fee duly required of the person under the order or regulation, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each such violation. Each violation shall be considered as a separate offense.

(2) CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS.—In addition to, or in lieu of, such civil penalty, the Secretary may issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from continuing such violation.

(3) NOTICE AND HEARING.—No penalty shall be assessed or cease-and-desist order issued unless such person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary with respect to such violation.

(4) FINALITY.—The order of the Secretary assessing a penalty or imposing a cease-and-desist order shall be final and conclusive unless the affected person files an appeal from the Secretary's order with the appropriate United States court of appeals.

(d) REVIEW BY COURT OF APPEALS.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.—Any person against whom a violation is found and a civil penalty assessed or cease-and-desist order issued under subsection (c) may obtain review of the penalty or order by—

(A) filing, within the 30-day period beginning on the date such penalty is assessed or order issued, a notice of appeal in—

(i) the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or carries on business; or

(ii) the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit; and

(B) simultaneously sending a copy of the notice by certified mail to the Secretary.

(2) RECORD.—The Secretary shall promptly file in the court the record on which such violation was found.

(3) STANDARD OF REVIEW.—The findings of the Secretary shall be set aside only if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence.

(e) FAILURE TO OBEY ORDERS.—Any person who fails to obey a cease-and-desist order after the order has become final and unappealable, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered a final judgment in favor of the Secretary, shall be subject to a civil penalty assessed by the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing and for judicial review under the procedures specified in subsections (c) and (d) of not more than $500 for each offense. Each day during which the failure continues shall be considered as a separate offense.

(f) FAILURE TO PAY PENALTIES.—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Secretary, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for recovery of the amount assessed in an appropriate district court of the United States. In the action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

SEC. 1809. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make such investigations as the Secretary considers necessary—

(1) for the effective carrying out of the responsibilities of the Secretary under this chapter; or

(2) to determine whether a person has engaged or is engaging in any acts or practices that constitute a violation of any provision of this chapter, or any plan, rule, or regulation issued under this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—For the purpose of any such investigation, the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, and documents that are relevant to the inquiry.

(c) SUBPOENA.—Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Secretary may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Secretary, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation.

(d) CONTEMPTS.—Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as contempt thereof.

(e) PROCESS.—All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district of which such person is an inhabitant or wherever such person may be found.

(f) JURISDICTION.—The site of any hearings held under this section shall be within the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or has a principal place of business.

SEC. 1810. INITIAL REFERENDUM.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Not later than 2 years after the date on which the Secretary first issues an order under section 1804(a), the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among producers, producer-handlers, and importers who—

(1) are not exempt from assessment under section 1805(d)(5); and

(2) produced or imported limes during a representative period as determined by the Secretary.

(b) PURPOSE OF REFERENDUM.—The referendum referred to in subsection (a) is for the purpose of determining whether the issuance of the order is approved or favored by not less than a majority of the producers, producer-handlers, and importers voting in the referendum. The order shall continue in effect only with such a majority.

(c) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The ballots and other information or reports that reveal, or tend to reveal, the vote of any person under this section, or section 1811, shall be held strictly confidential and shall not be disclosed.

(d) REFUND OF ASSESSMENTS FROM ESCROW ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The assessments collected from producers, producer-handlers, and importers prior to announcement of the results of the referendum provided for in this section shall be held in an escrow account until the results of the referendum are published by the Secretary. The amount in the escrow account shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying the total amount of assessments collected during such period by 10 percent.

(2) APPROVAL OF ORDER.—If the order is approved, the funds in the escrow account shall be released on publication of the final regulations by the Secretary to be used for the purposes of this chapter.

(3) DISAPPROVAL OF ORDER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If the amendment to the order is not approved in such referendum, the funds in the escrow account shall be refunded on a pro rata basis to eligible producers, producer-handlers, and importers on publication of the order terminating the program established by this chapter, after a deduction for a proportionate amount of the expenses incurred by the Secretary and the agency of Government that assists in administering the import provisions of the order.

(B) RIGHT TO REFUND.—Any producer, producer-handler, or importer shall have the right to receive a refund—

(i) if demand is made personally, in accordance with regulations and on a form and within a time period prescribed by the Board, but in no event less than 90 days after the date of publication of the results of the referendum; and

(ii) on submission of proof satisfactory to the Board that the person paid the assessment for which refund is sought and did not collect the assessment from another person.

(C) SURPLUS FUNDS.—Any funds not refunded under this paragraph shall be released to be used to carry out this chapter.

SEC. 1811. SUSPENSION AND TERMINATION.

(a) FINDING OF SECRETARY.—If the Secretary finds that an order issued under section 1804(a), or a provision of such order, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the purposes of this chapter, the Secretary shall terminate or suspend the operation of such order or provision.

(b) PERIODIC REFERENDA.—The Secretary may periodically conduct a referendum to determine if lime producers, producer-handlers, and importers favor the continuation, termination, or suspension of any order issued under section 1804(a) and in effect at the time of such referendum.

(c) REQUIRED REFERENDA.—The Secretary shall hold a referendum under subsection (b)—

(1) at the request of the Board;

(2) if not less than 10 percent of the lime producers, producer-handlers, and importers subject to assessment under this chapter submit a petition requesting such a referendum; or

(3) whenever the Secretary conducts a referendum regarding limes pursuant to a marketing order issued under section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

(d) VOTE.—The Secretary shall suspend or terminate the order at the end of the marketing year if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the suspension or termination of the order is favored by not less than a majority of those persons voting in a referendum under subsection (b); and

(2) the producers, producer-handlers, and importers comprising this majority produce and import more than 50 percent of the volume of limes produced and imported by those voting in the referendum.

SEC. 1812. AMENDMENTS.

The provisions of this chapter applicable to orders shall be applicable to amendments to orders.

SEC. 1813. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The funds so appropriated shall not be available for payment of the expenses or expenditures of the Board in administering any provisions of an order issued under this chapter.

SEC. 1814. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

CHAPTER 6—POTATOES

SEC. 1901. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Potato Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 1902. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

Section 302 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2611) is amended—

(1) in the first paragraph—

(A) in the first sentence, by inserting "and foreign countries" after "United States"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by inserting "and imported into the United States from foreign countries" after "United States"; and

(2) in the last paragraph, by inserting "and imported into the United States from foreign countries" after "United States" each place it appears.

SEC. 1903. DEFINITIONS.

Section 303 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2612) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)—

(A) by striking "forty-eight contiguous" and inserting "50"; and

(B) by inserting after "United States" the following: "and foreign countries"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(g) The term 'importer' means any person who imports tablestock, frozen, processed potatoes for ultimate consumption by humans and seed potatoes into the United States or who acts as an agent, broker or consignee for any person or nation that produces Irish Potatoes outside the United States for sale in the United States.".

SEC. 1904. AUTHORITY TO ISSUE PLANS.

The last sentence of section 304 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2613) is amended—

(1) by striking "forty-eight contiguous" and inserting "50"; and

(2) by inserting after "United States" the following: "and foreign countries".

SEC. 1905. ALTERNATIVE PLAN.

The Potato Research and Promotion Act is amended by inserting after section 308 (7 U.S.C. 2617) the following new section:

"SEC. 308A. ALTERNATIVE PLAN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT TO ISSUE PLAN.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 305, 306, 308, and 314 that are inconsistent with this section, the Secretary shall publish the proposed alternative plan required by this section, within 60 days of the receipt of a request from a producer or producer organization to implement such a plan, if the Secretary determines that such alternative plan effectuates the declared policy of this Act.

"(2) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Any alternative plan issued pursuant to this section shall contain the terms and conditions prescribed in this section.

"(3) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER PLAN.—

"(A) PROVISIONS.—In issuing the alternative plan under this section, the Secretary shall incorporate by reference the provisions of the potato research and promotion plan in effect pursuant to this Act that are not inconsistent with the amendments made pursuant to the alternative plan.

"(B) BOARD MEMBERS.—Each board member that is sitting on the effective date of the alternative plan shall continue to serve the full term of appointment of the member pursuant to section 308.

"(b) NATIONAL POTATO PROMOTION BOARD.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The alternative plan shall provide for the establishment by the Secretary of a National Potato Promotion Board (hereinafter in this title referred to as 'the board').

"(2) POWERS AND DUTIES.—The alternative plan shall define the powers and duties of the board, which shall include powers—

"(A) to administer such plan in accordance with the terms and conditions of such plan;

"(B) to make rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and conditions of such plan;

"(C) to receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary complaints of violations of such plan; and

"(D) to recommend to the Secretary amendments to such plan.

"(3) COMPOSITION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall be composed of representatives of producers and up to five representatives of importers and the public appointed by the Secretary from nominations submitted in accordance with this subsection.

"(B) NOMINATION OF PRODUCER AND IMPORTER REPRESENTATIVES.—Representatives of producers and importers shall be nominated by producers and importers in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(C) NOMINATION OF PUBLIC REPRESENTATIVES.—Public representatives shall be nominated by the board in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(D) FAILURE TO NOMINATE.—If producers or importers fail to select nominees for appointment to the board, or the board fails to nominate public representatives, the Secretary may appoint persons on the basis of representation as provided for in such plan.

"(E) REFERENDUM.—The requirement for inclusion of public representatives on the board shall not be subject to approval in a referendum.

"(4) COMPENSATION.—The alternative plan shall provide that board members shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for reasonable expenses incurred in performing their duties as members of the board.

"(5) BUDGET.—The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall prepare and submit to the Secretary for the approval of the Secretary a budget, on a fiscal period basis, of the anticipated expenses and disbursements of the board in the administration of the plan, including probable costs of research, development, advertising, and promotion.

"(c) ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) RATE.—The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall recommend to the Secretary and the Secretary shall fix the assessment rate at not more than 2 cents per 100 pounds of potatoes handled, except that if approved by producers and importers pursuant to section 314, the rate of assessment shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent of the immediate past 10-calendar-year United States average price received for potatoes by growers as reported by the Department of Agriculture.

"(2) USE.—The alternative plan shall provide that—

"(A) funds collected by the board shall be used for research, development, advertising, or promotion of potatoes and potato products and such other expenses for the administration, maintenance, and functioning of the board, as may be authorized by the Secretary, including any referendum and administrative costs incurred by the Department of Agriculture under this title, except that the provision for payment to the Department of Agriculture for any referendum and administrative costs so incurred shall not be subject to producer or importer approval in a referendum;

"(B) no advertising or sales promotion program shall make any reference to private brand names or use false or unwarranted claims in behalf of potatoes or their products or false or unwarranted statements with respect to the attributes or use of any competing products; and

"(C) no funds collected by the board shall in any manner be used for the purpose of influencing governmental policy or action, except as provided by subsection (b)(2)(D).

"(3) REFUNDS.—The alternative plan shall not provide for a refund of funds collected by the board.

"(d) PROGRAMS AND PROJECTS.—The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall, subject to paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (c), develop and submit to the Secretary for the approval of the Secretary any research, development, advertising, or promotion programs or projects, and that any such program or project must be approved by the Secretary before becoming effective.

"(e) CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.—The alternative plan shall provide the board with authority to enter into contracts or agreements, with the approval of the Secretary, for the development and carrying out of research, development, advertising, or promotion programs or projects, and the payment of the cost thereof with funds collected pursuant to this title.

"(f) BOOKS AND RECORDS.—The alternative plan shall provide that the board shall maintain books and records and prepare and submit to the Secretary such reports from time to time as may be prescribed for appropriate accounting with respect to the receipt and disbursement of funds entrusted to the board and cause a complete audit report to be submitted to the Secretary at the end of each fiscal period.

"(g) ESCROW ACCOUNT FOR ASSESSMENT REFUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The board shall—

"(A) establish an escrow account to be used for assessment refunds; and

"(B) place funds in such account in accordance with paragraph (2) during the period beginning on the effective date of the alternative plan issued under this section and ending on the date of the referendum on the alternative plan issued pursuant to section 314(e).

"(2) AMOUNT PLACED IN ACCOUNT.—The board shall place in such account, from assessments collected during the period referred to in paragraph (1), an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying the total amount of assessments collected during such period by 10 percent.

"(3) RIGHT TO REFUND.—Subject to paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), any producer or importer shall have the right to demand and receive from the board a one-time refund of assessments collected from such producer or importer during the period referred to in paragraph (1) if—

"(A) such producer or importer is responsible for paying such assessments;

"(B) such producer or importer does not support the program established under this title; and

"(C) the alternative plan issued pursuant to this section is not approved pursuant to a referendum conducted under section 314(e).

"(4) FORM OF DEMAND.—Such demand shall be made in accordance with regulations, on a form, and within a time period prescribed by the board.

"(5) PROOF OF PAYMENT.—Such refund shall be made on submission of proof satisfactory to the board that such producer or importer paid the assessment for which refund is demanded.

"(6) PRORATION.—If the amount in the escrow account required to be established by paragraph (1) is not sufficient to refund the total amount of assessments demanded by all eligible producers and importers under this subsection and the alternative plan issued pursuant to this section is not approved pursuant to a referendum conducted under section 314(e), the board shall prorate the amount of such refunds among all eligible producers and importers who demand such refund.

"(h) APPLICATION TO ALL STATES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, an alternative plan issued under this section shall apply to all 50 States.".

SEC. 1906. ASSESSMENTS.

Section 310 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2619) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c), by striking "subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting "subsections (a), (b), and (d)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The assessment on imported tablestock, frozen, processed potatoes for ultimate consumption by humans and seed potatoes under an alternative plan issued under section 308A shall be—

"(A) established by the board so that the effective assessment rate shall equal that established on domestic production; and

"(B) paid by the importer to the Potato Board at the time of entry into the United States.

"(2) Each importer under an alternative plan issued under section 308A shall maintain a separate record indicating—

"(A) the total quantity of tablestock, frozen, processed potatoes for ultimate consumption by humans and seed potatoes imported into the United States that are included under the terms of the plan as well as those that are exempt under such plan; and

"(B) such information as may be prescribed by the board.

"(3) Importers responsible for payment of assessments under this subsection shall—

"(A) maintain and make available for inspection by the Secretary such books and records as are required by the plan;

"(B) file reports at the times, and in the manner, and having the content prescribed by the plan; and

"(C) make such information and data available to the board and Secretary as is appropriate or necessary for the effectuation, administration, or enforcement of this title or of any plan or regulation issued pursuant to this title.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, assessments collected under this section shall be used to reimburse the Secretary for costs incurred by the Secretary for implementing and administering the amendments made by Potato Research and Promotion Act Amendments of 1989.".

SEC. 1907. REFERENDUM REQUIREMENT FOR ALTERNATIVE PLAN.

Section 314 of the Potato Research and Promotion Act (7 U.S.C. 2623) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) Not later than 120 days after publication of the proposed alternative plan pursuant to section 308A(a)(1) and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall issue an alternative plan under section 308A. Such alternative plan shall become effective as provided in this subsection.

"(2) Not later than 24 months after the date of issuance of the alternative plan, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum among producers and importers, who during a representative period determined by the Secretary have been engaged in the production or importation of potatoes, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the alternative plan issued under section 308A is approved or disapproved by such producers and importers.

"(3) Such alternative plan shall be continued only if the Secretary determines that the alternative plan has not been disapproved by a majority of the producers and importers voting in the referendum.

"(4) If such alternative plan is not approved, the Secretary shall terminate such alternative plan, and the original plan issued under section 308 shall become effective.".

CHAPTER 7—HONEY

SEC. 1921. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the "Honey Research Promotion, and Consumer Information Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 1922. DEFINITIONS.

Section 3 of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 4602) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(18) The term 'exporter' means any person who exports honey or honey products from the United States.".

SEC. 1923. REQUIRED TERMS OF ORDERS.

Section 7 of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 4606) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "A State association may nominate not more than one person from such State to serve on the Committee."; and

(B) in paragraph (5), by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The Committee may nominate not more than one person for each member or alternate position on the Honey Board.";

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (2), by striking subparagraph (C) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

"(C) two members who are either importers or exporters of which at least one shall be an importer, appointed from nominations submitted by the Committee from recommendations by industry organizations representing importer and exporter interests;";

(B) in the matter following subparagraph (E), by striking "or alternates"; and

(C) in paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end and inserting ", except that if as a result of redistricting the residence of the member or alternate is no longer in the region from which such person was appointed, such member or alternate may serve out the term for which such person was appointed.";

(3) in subsection (e), by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) A producer or producer-packer who produces or produces and handles less than 6,000 pounds of honey per year, or an importer who imports less than 6,000 pounds of honey per year, shall be eligible for an exemption from the assessment if such producer, producer-packer or importer consumes at home, donates or distributes directly through local retail outlets the entire amount so produced, produced and handled or imported.

"(B) In order to claim such exemption, a person shall submit an application to the Honey Board stating that the person's production, handling or importation of honey for the year for which the exemption is claimed shall meet the requirements of this paragraph.

"(C) If, after a person receives an exemption from the assessment for any year, such person no longer meets the foregoing requirements of this paragraph for an exemption, such person shall file a report with the Honey Board in the form and manner prescribed by the Board and pay the assessment on or before March 15 of the subsequent year on all honey produced or imported during the year."; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(k) Any patents, copyrights, inventions, product formulations or publications developed through the use of funds collected by the Honey Board shall be the property of the Honey Board and any funds generated from such patents, copyrights, inventions, or publications shall inure to the benefit of the Honey Board.".

SEC. 1924. COLLECTION OF ASSESSMENTS; REFUNDS.

Section 9 of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 4608) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (d) and inserting the following new subsection:

"(d) In any case in which a loan is made with respect to honey under the honey price support loan program established under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.), the Secretary shall provide for the assessment to be deducted from the disbursement of any loan funds made to the producer and for the amount of such assessment to be forwarded to the Honey Board. The Secretary shall provide for the producer to receive a statement of the amount of the assessment deducted from the loan funds promptly after each time any loan funds are disbursed.";

(2) in subsection (f), by inserting after "assessments" the following: "and persons receiving an exemption from an assessment"; and

(3) by striking subsection (h) and inserting the following new subsections:

"(h)(1) Any producer or importer may obtain a refund of the assessment collected from the producer or importer if demand for such is made within the time and in the manner prescribed by the Honey Board and approved by the Secretary, except that during any year the amount of refunds made to each importer, as a percentage of total assessments collected from such importer, shall not exceed the amount of refunds made to domestic producers as a percentage of total assessments collected from such producers.

"(2) Such refund shall be made by the Honey Board in June and December of each year. A producer who has obtained a honey price support loan under the Agricultural Act of 1949 may obtain a refund at that time if the producer has submitted to the Honey Board the statement received under subsection (d) of the amount of assessment deducted from the loan funds and has otherwise complied with this subsection, even though the loan with respect to which the assessment was collected may still be outstanding and final settlement has not been made.

"(i) If a first handler or the Secretary fails to collect an assessment from a producer under this section, the producer shall be responsible for the payment of the assessment.".

SEC. 1925. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

The Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act is amended by inserting after section 11 (7 U.S.C. 4610) the following new section:

"SEC. 11A. INVESTIGATIONS AND POWER TO SUBPOENA.

"(a) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Secretary may make such investigations as the Secretary considers necessary for the effective administration of this Act or to determine whether any person subject to this Act has engaged or is about to engage in any action that constitutes or will constitute a violation of this Act or of any order or regulation issued under this Act.

"(b) SUBPOENAS, OATHS, AND AFFIRMATIONS.—For the purpose of such investigation, the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any records that are relevant to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from anyplace in the United States.

"(c) AID OF COURTS.—In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Secretary may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of the person and the production of records. The court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Secretary to produce records or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Process in any such case may be served in the judicial district in which such person is an inhabitant or wherever such person may be found.".

SEC. 1926. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Notwithstanding any provision of the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 4601 et seq.), the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue an amendment to the order provided for by the Honey Research, Promotion, and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 4601 et seq.) that implements the amendments made by this chapter after notice and opportunity for public comment. The amendment shall become effective on the date of the publication of the amendment in the Federal Register.

CHAPTER 8—KIWIFRUIT AND OTHER FRUIT

SEC. 1941. KIWIFRUIT AND OTHER FRUIT.

The first sentence of section 8e(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608e-1), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by striking "or eggplants" and inserting "eggplants, kiwifruit, nectarines, or plums".

CHAPTER 9—PAPAYA

SEC. 1951. PAPAYA.

The first sentence of section 8e(a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608e-1), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by inserting "papayas," after "table grapes,".

CHAPTER 10—EGGS

SEC. 1961. EGGS.

(a) EXEMPTED EGG PRODUCERS.—Section 12 of the Egg Research and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 2711) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. EXEMPTED EGG PRODUCERS AND BREEDING HEN FLOCKS, CONDITIONS AND PROCEDURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The following shall be exempt from the specific provisions of this title under such conditions and procedures as may be prescribed in the order or rules and regulations issued thereunder:

"(1) Any egg producer whose aggregate number of laying hens at any time during a 3-consecutive-month period immediately prior to the date assessments are due and payable, as determined under subsection (b), has not exceeded 30,000 laying hens.

"(2) Any flock of breeding hens whose production of eggs is primarily utilized for hatching of baby chicks.

"(b) NUMBER OF LAYING HENS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a)(1), the aggregate number of laying hens owned by an egg producer shall include—

"(A) in cases in which the producer is an individual, laying hens owned by such producer or members of such producer's family that are effectively under the control of such producer, as determined by the Secretary;

"(B) in cases in which the producer is a general partnership or similar entity, laying hens owned by the entity and all partners or equity participants in the entity; and

"(C) in cases in which a producer holds 50 percent or more of the stock or other beneficial interest in a corporation, joint stock company, association, cooperative, limited partnership, or other similar entity, laying hens owned by the entity.

Ownership of laying hens by a trust or similar entity shall be considered ownership by the beneficiaries of the trust or other entity.

"(2) STOCK OR BENEFICIAL INTERESTS.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(C), stock or other beneficial interest in an entity that is held by—

"(A) members of a producer's family described in paragraph (1)(A);

"(B) a general partnership or similar entity in which the producer is a partner or equity participant;

"(C) the partners or equity participants in an entity of the type described in subparagraph (B), or by a corporation, joint stock company, association, cooperative, limited partnership, or other similar entity in which the producer holds 50 percent or more of the stock or other beneficial interests, shall be considered as held by the producer.".

(b) EGG PROMOTION AND RESEARCH ORDER.—

(1) AMENDMENT.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall propose an amendment to the egg promotion and research order issued under the Egg Research and Consumer Information Act (7 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.) to implement the amendments made by this section. Such amendment shall be issued in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, and without regard to sections 556 and 557 of such title.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment to the egg promotion and research order required by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of the publication in the Federal Register and shall not be subject to a referendum under the Egg Research and Consumer Information Act (42 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.).

CHAPTER 11—PEANUTS

SEC. 1971. PEANUTS.

Section 8b of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608b), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the section designation; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) If an agreement with the Secretary is in effect with respect to peanuts pursuant to this section—

"(i) all peanuts handled by persons who have not entered into such an agreement with the Secretary shall be subject to inspection to the same extent and manner as is required by such agreement; and

"(ii) no such peanuts shall be sold or otherwise disposed of for human consumption if such peanuts fail to meet the quality requirements of such agreement.

"(B) Violation of this subsection by a person who has not entered into such an agreement shall result in the assessment by the Secretary of a penalty equal to 140 percent of the support price for quota peanuts, as determined under section 108B of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445c-2), for the marketing year for the crop with respect to which such violation occurs.".

CHAPTER 12—VIDALIA ONIONS

SEC. 1981. VIDALIA ONIONS.

(a) PROHIBITION.—No person shall label, package, classify, identify, or otherwise designate for sale any onions as "Vidalia onions", "Vidalias", or with any other usage of the term "Vidalia ", unless such onions—

(1) are produced in the "Production area", as that term is defined in section 955.4 of Federal Marketing Order No. 955, in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, as contained in part 955 of title 7, Code Of Federal Regulations; and

(2) satisfies the definition of the term "Vidalia onions" contained in section 955.5 of the Order.

(b) VIOLATIONS.—A violation of this section shall be considered a violation of paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 2 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930 (7 U.S.C. 499b(4) and (5)).

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, August 4, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Ranking Member, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM AND PETE: Under the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1990, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation was instructed to achieve $450 million in "unspecified reconciliation" in budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 1990.

On July 27, 1989, the Committee approved a package of legislative changes, in programs within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee, which meets these instructions. The package includes the following:

1. Federal Communications Commission Fees;
2. International Departure Fees;
3. Coast Guard Fees; and
4. Airport Slot Fees.

Enclosed are legislative provisions and explanatory language for each of these proposals, as well as the Congressional Budget Office cost estimates.

If you need anything else, please let us know.

With warmest personal regards, we are

Sincerely,

ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
Chairman.

JOHN C. DANFORTH,
Ranking Member.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION FEES

This section includes increases in the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) cost of regulation fees under Section 8 of the Communications Act and increases in the penalties in the Communications Act. This proposal is similar to that adopted in the House Energy and Commerce Committee and will raise $43 million.

Specifically, the reported provisions alter—generally increase—existing fees to reflect the current costs of processing. In addition, this proposal applies the fees to the following groups, who are not included under the current fee schedule:

Ship stations; aircraft stations; private carriers; amateur radio; general mobile radio; nationwide paging services; air-to-ground licenses; mobile satellite earth stations; radio determination satellite earth stations; radio operator examinations; ship inspections; and importation of radio frequency devices.

Unlike the House proposal, this proposal continues to exempt noncommercial broadcast services and services used by state and local governments. Also exempted are special emergency and public safety radio services, which are most often used by local government officials. Noncommercial broadcasters and special emergency and public safety radio services were exempted from the original fees legislation passed in 1986. The reason to continue these exemptions is that the federal government has direct funding programs for these agencies and groups. Imposing a cost of regulation fee would simply represent a transfer from one federal account to another. To offset these continued exemptions, the proposal increases the minimum fee under the House proposal from $30 to $35.

With respect to penalties, the Communications Act contains a wide variety of fines/penalties for violations of the Act. None of these fines/penalties has been revised since 1934. The provisions adopted by the Committee increase these fines/penalties to generally reflect increases in the consumer price index. The FCC estimates that these increases will raise approximately $600,000 in additional revenue annually.

PROPOSED BUDGET RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION RELATING TO FCC USER FEES AND PENALTIES

SEC. . FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION FEES, FINES, AND PENALTIES.

(a) FCC FEES.—

(1) UPDATE OF FEE SCHEDULE.—Section 8 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 158) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g) Until modified pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, the Schedule of Charges which the Federal Communications Commission shall prescribe pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be as follows:

"(D) The amount of such forfeiture penalty shall be assessed by the Commission, or its designee, by written notice. In determining the amount of such a forfeiture penalty, the Commission or its designee shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE; IMPLEMENTATION.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this section, and the Schedule of Charges required by the amendment made by subsection (a) of this subsection shall be implemented not later than 150 days after such date of enactment.

INTERNATIONAL DEPARTURE FEES

Subsection (a) of this section requires the Secretary of Transportation (Secretary) to establish, assess and collect a fee for each passenger departing the United States on an international flight. The aviation fees would be in the amount of $3.00 per passenger, and the funds generated by these fees would be deposited in the General Fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the Department of Transportation. These receipts would be applied specifically to offset costs of activities of that Department, and the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), involving the monitoring and regulation of international air transportation operations.

Currently, more than $2 billion in general funds are expended for the operations of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) These activities include security monitoring and assessment in the United States and throughout the world; air traffic control operations affecting international flights; participation and conformance with ICAO activities and agreements; FAA inspection of domestic and foreign-flag carriers servicing on international routes; and FAA-provided international weather forecasts and route information.

This subsection is expected to generate approximately $100 million in FY 1990, based on approximately 32 million international airline passenger departures.

Subsection (b) directs the Secretary to establish, assess and collect a fee from vessel owners, operators, or persons in charge of vessels that carry passengers to or from U.S. ports.

The federal government engages in several activities that directly benefit the cruise industry. These activities include harbor maintenance, the operation of ports and maintenance of port security. In FY 1988, $178,000,000 was appropriated for harbor maintenance, $156,000,000 for the operation and maintenance of ports, and $140,000,000 for port safety, including aids to navigation.

The Cruise industry has grown tremendously in recent years, and upwards of 4.5 million passengers embarked on cruise voyages in 1988. Another 1.5 million or so embarked on gambling-oriented cruises, which are not engaged in overnight service but still demand Coast Guard services. This is an 81% increase in passenger berth capacity since 1981, and it is estimated that another 29% will come into service by 1991. The Coast Guard is responsible for monitoring and regulating the operations of these vessels and their workload will naturally increase as a result of the growth in this industry.

Based upon these figures, the $3.00 per passenger fee imposed by this section would result in revenues of approximately $21 million in FY 1990. These funds would be deposited into the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund and into the general fund ascribed to Coast Guard activities.

The fee will not be assessed against vessels operated by State or political subdivisions of states. Other vessels which are exempt from the fee are those which operate on voyages of less than twelve hours in duration between points within the United States and vessels that operate on voyages that do not last over one or more nights. In this regard, the Committee notes that some cruise vessels make several stops in the course of a cruise that is between two points in the United States. Subsection (b)(1) provides that the fee will be assessed only once on each passenger on such multiple stop voyages.

The fee is to be assessed on vessels transporting passengers who engage in gambling on board the vessel when it is beyond the territorial sea of the United States, regardless of the duration or destination of such voyages or the sleeping capacity of such vessels. This section is to apply to all such vessels, even those which have gambling on board as only an incidental feature of the voyage.

The fee will be assessed on overnight voyages, but this should not be interpreted to include vessels which may operate during the evening hours, such as fishing vessels, whose primary function is not the provision of accommodations and services, such as gambling, to its passengers.

PROPOSED BUDGET RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE AND TRANSPORTATION RELATING TO INTERNATIONAL DEPARTURE FEES

SEC. . INTERNATIONAL DEPARTURE FEES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMERCIAL AVIATION FEE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall establish, assess, and collect a fee, which shall be imposed as of October 1, 1989, for each passenger on commercial aircraft departing the United States on international flights during fiscal year 1990.

(2) AMOUNT OF FEE.—The amount of a fee under this section is $3 per passenger on each flight with respect to which the fee is assessed.

(3) DEPOSIT OF FEES.—Amounts received by the United States Government under this subsection shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the Department of Transportation and ascribed to the activities of the Department of Transportation (including the Federal Aviation Administration) involving the monitoring and regulations of international air transportation operations, including air traffic control operations, aviation security and safety inspections, and activities associated with participation in the International Civil Aviation Organization.

(4) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Transportation shall prescribe regulations implementing this subsection not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this subsection.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF PASSENGER VESSEL FEE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 35 of title 46, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of the following new section:

"§ 3507. Passenger vessel fee

"(a) The Secretary shall establish, assess, and collect a fee, which shall be imposed as of October 1, 1989, for each covered voyage during fiscal year 1990 of—

"(1) a passenger vessel having berth or stateroom accommodations for more than 16 passengers that is on a voyage that extends over 1 or more nights, except a vessel that is—

"(A) on a voyage of less than 12 hours between 2 points in the United States; or

"(B) owned and operated by a State or a political subdivision of a State; or

"(2) a vessel transporting passengers engaged in gambling aboard the vessel beyond the territorial sea of the United States.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the amount of a fee under this section is $3 for each passenger on a vessel for a covered voyage with respect to which the fee is assessed. Such fee shall be assessed only once for each passenger on a covered voyage, either when such passenger first embarks in the United States or when the passenger first disembarks in the United States.

"(2) The Secretary shall reduce a fee under this section for a covered voyage of a vessel in an amount equal to—

"(A) the amount for which the person from whom the fee is collected is liable with respect to that voyage under section 4461 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 4461), relating to harbor maintenance tax; plus

"(B) an amount, to be determined by the Secretary, representing fees for which that person is liable for inspections of the vessel performed by the Coast Guard.

"(c) A fee under this section may be collected from an owner, operator, or person in charge of a vessel for a covered voyage with respect to which the fee is assessed.

"(d) Of amounts received by the United States Government under this section—

"(1) two-thirds shall be deposited as offsetting receipts into the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund established by section 9505 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 9505); and

"(2) one-third shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities.

"(e) In this section, 'covered voyage' means a voyage of a passenger vessel during which passengers of the vessel embark or disembark the vessel in the United States.".

(2) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall prescribe regulations implementing section 3507 of title 46, United States Code, as added by this subsection, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this subsection.

(3) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 35 of title 46, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"3507. Passenger vessel fee.".

(4) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 9505(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 9505(a)), relating to the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (2) by striking ", or" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma;

(B) in paragraph (3) by striking the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof ", or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) deposited into the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund under section 3507(d)(1) of title 46, United States Code (relating to passenger vessel fee).".

COAST GUARD USER FEES

This section directs the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating to collect receipts from payments by users of the Coast Guard services during fiscal year 1990 in the amount of $50 million. The Secretary is directed to establish a fee schedule for specific Coast Guard services and create a Coast Guard Support of Services (SOS) stamp that will relieve purchasers of the SOS stamp of the need to pay fees for those specified Coast Guard services.

It is intended that SOS Stamps be sold at modest prices and be designed to serve as both a voluntary means of contributing to the Coast Guard and as a type of insurance, entitling the purchaser who receives specified services to avoid additional charges. Those uninsured persons who have not purchased a SOS Stamp would pay fees for the services whenever they utilize them and would, therefore, pay a greater price for the same services.

The Secretary is given discretion to develop several different SOS Stamps, each providing coverage for different classes of services. Stamps and fees for non-emergency as well as other Coast Guard services should be considered and designed to minimize adverse economic effects upon the users as well as upon dependent and related commercial activities. For example, in establishing the fee schedule the Secretary should consider the economic impact that any fees would have on the barge industry or other segment of users at a time of drought or during periods of severe economic depression within that segment of the maritime industry.

The Secretary is directed to develop, by October 1, 1989, a schedule of fees to be charged to persons who utilize services and have not purchased a SOS Stamp for those same services. The Secretary is not authorized to issue regulations or collect fees under this section for any services for which there is not a corresponding and less expensive SOS Stamp available for sale. The fees are to be established by regulation under the General User Fee Statute (31 U.S.C. 9701). Such fees must, therefore, be set at a level no higher than the actual cost of the service and value to the individual to be charged a fee, and they must satisfy the other requirements of that Statute.

The collection of payments for Stamps and of fees for services under this section has no effect on the duties or liability of the United States to perform such services. It affects only the fee charged for any such service that is performed.

The Secretary is directed to report to Congress by September 1, 1989, prior to implementing the system and again after one year of experience with the system. The Committee intends to monitor the Secretary's efforts closely and to scrutinize the implementation and effects of the system.

PROPOSED BUDGET RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION RELATING TO COAST GUARD USER FEES

SEC. . COAST GUARD USER FEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2110 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish and implement a system for the collection, commencing October 1, 1989, of $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990 in receipts from payments by users of services provided by the Coast Guard, other than services associated with emergency search and rescue. Amounts received by the United States Government under this section shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities.

(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall, by October 1, 1989, issue regulations to carry out the provisions of subsection (a) of this section. Such regulations shall include a schedule of fees which shall be established in accordance with the provisions of section 9701 of title 31, United States Code.

(c) APPLICABILITY.—

(1) PAYMENTS FROM STAMPS AND FEES.—The system established and implemented under subsection (a) of this section shall include collections of payments from—

(A) the sale of Support of Services Stamps, possession of which will entitle the holder of such Stamps to specified services without charge; and

(B) fees to be charged to users of such specified services who have not purchased such a Support of Services Stamp.

(2) CONSIDERATION OF PAYMENTS FOR CERTAIN COAST GUARD SERVICES.—In developing such system and issuing regulations under this section, the Secretary shall consider collection of receipts from payments for non-emergency search and rescue, as well as other services provided by the Coast Guard.

(d) MINIMIZATION OF ADVERSE EFFECTS ON MARITIME INDUSTRY.—The Secretary shall, to the maximum extent practicable, ensure that such system minimizes adverse economic effects upon commercial towing services and other segments of the maritime industry.

(e) REPORT.—The Secretary shall report to the Congress on or before September 1, 1989, regarding activities undertaken to establish and implement such system and on or before September 1, 1990, regarding the implementation and effects of such system.

(f) DISCLAIMER.—Nothing in this section shall alter or expand the duties and liability of the United States under existing law for the performance of functions for which fees or payments are collected. The collection of such fees or payments shall not constitute an express or implied undertaking by the United States to perform any service or activity in a certain manner or to provide any service at a particular time or place.

AIRPORT SLOT FEES

This section requires the Secretary of Transportation, within 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, to establish a schedule of fees to be collected (1) for each slot issued by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) on behalf of the Federal Government and held by an air carrier, other than a commuter operator, at high density traffic airports; and (2) to the extent consistent with international law and treaty obligations of the United States, for each slot held by a foreign air carrier at such airports. Such fees shall reasonably reflect the value of each slot to its holder. The total amount of fees collected under this schedule shall be at least $239 million for fiscal year 1990. The fees collected under this section shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the FAA.

There are four airports designated by the FAA as "High Density Airports": Washington National, Chicago O'Hare, and New York's JFK and LaGuardia Airports. In 1969, due to capacity constraints, the FAA limited the number of flight operations at each of these airports, with each take-off and landing being defined as an individual "slot". There are a total of 4,631 slots at these four airports, of which 3,306 are used by airlines other than commuter operators.

The Committee believes that these operating rights are an asset of the Federal Government, specifically, a public property right that the airlines are using to their benefit. The slots were created by the FAA as the result of capacity limitations in the air traffic control system and at the four airports. Before 1985, these slots were allocated through the airline scheduling committee process, overseen by the Federal Government. In 1985, the Department of Transportation (DOT) issued a rule concerning these slots. Under this rule, DOT allocated access to the incumbent airlines, and allowed these airlines to buy and sell access to these slots.

The benefits derived by the airlines from the use of these slots are substantial: access to the four congested airports and assets on airline financial statements. The value of these slots is not insignificant, as they have been individually valued in several cases at close to $1 million. The Committee believes that the fees proposed under this section for the use of these slots, as Federal assets, are justified and appropriate.

PROPOSED BUDGET RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION RELATING TO AIRPORT SLOT FEES

SEC. . AIRPORT SLOT FEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, establish a schedule of fees to be collected—

(1) for each slot issued by the Federal Aviation Administration on behalf of the Federal Government and held by an air carrier, other than a commuter operator, at high density traffic airports; and

(2) to the extent consistent with international law and treaty obligations of the United States, for each such slot held by a foreign air carrier at such airports.

Such fees shall reasonably reflect the value of each such slot to its holder. The total amount of fees collected under this schedule shall be at least $239,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) DEPOSIT OF FEES.—The fees collected under these provisions shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the Federal Aviation Administration.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe appropriate regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

(d) DEFINITION.—As used in this section—

(1) the terms "air carrier" and "foreign air carrier" have the meanings given such terms, respectively, in section 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1301); and

(2) the term "high density traffic airports" means airports so designated in subpart K of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on the date of enactment of this section.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1989.

Hon. ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the proposed budget reconciliation provisions of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation relating to Federal Communications Commission user fees and penalties.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE—COST ESTIMATE, AUGUST 1, 1989

1. Bill number: Not yet available.

2. Bill title: Proposed Budget Reconciliation Provisions of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation Relating to Federal Communications Commission User Fees and Penalties.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, July 27, 1989.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would expand the schedule of charges of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to increase existing fees and to include new fees for processing certain applications. The bill also would substantially increase the maximum fines and penalties that could be levied for violations of the Communications Act of 1934.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The new fees and increases in existing fees mandated by this bill would result in an increase in receipts to the government, as shown in the following table.

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Estimated budget authority	−43	−43	−43	−43	−43
Estimated outlays	−43	−43	−43	−43	−43

Increasing the maximum fines assessed by the FCC could result in additional revenues to the Federal Government. However, the information necessary to estimate any additional revenues is not available.

During the first few months of 1990, we expect that additional resources would be needed to effectively collect and process the increased and new fees, because many applications likely would be filed with an incorrect fee payment. After this initial adjustment period, we expect that the FCC would require more processing, clerical, and accounting staff than at present, in order to handle the nearly one million additional fee payments each year. Although a firm estimate of the personnel needed to administer the new schedule is not available, we estimate that total additional costs would be about $750,000 in 1990 and about $500,000 each year thereafter.

The budget impact of this bill falls within function 370.

Basis of Estimate: Assuming enactment of the bill on October 1, 1989, the new schedule of charges would take effect immediately at the beginning of fiscal year 1990. Collection of new or increased fees would be difficult in the first few months, while the FCC makes the necessary changes in its accounting and collection system, and notifies the fee-payers about the changes. An influx of applications with incorrect fee payments is likely to delay processing and may make it difficult to collect the amounts due in 1990. Nevertheless, CBO has assumed that the FCC would have sufficient resources to collect a full year's worth of fees in 1990. The estimate of additional fee collections is based on CBO's baseline projections for existing fees, and on information provided by the FCC regarding the number of applications for services in 1990.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: None.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: On July 20, 1989, CBO prepared a cost estimate for the proposed budget reconciliation provisions relating to FCC fees as ordered reported by the House Committee on Energy and Commerce. The fee schedule in the Senate bill differs from the schedule in the House bill by setting a minimum fee of $35 (compared to $30 in the House bill), and by exempting public safety services and non-commercial broadcasters from the fee schedule. CBO estimates that enactment of the Senate bill would generate $3 million more in receipts each year than the House bill.

Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, August 4, 1989.

Hon. ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the reconciliation recommendations of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation relating to international departure fees, airport slot fees, and Coast Guard user fees.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE—COST ESTIMATE, AUGUST 4, 1989

1. Bill number: Not yet available.

2. Bill title: Reconciliation Recommendations of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation Relating to International Departure Fees, Airport Slot Fees, and Coast Guard User Fees.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, July 27, 1989.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to establish and collect a $3 commercial aviation fee for each passenger on commercial aircraft departing the United States on international flights during fiscal year 1990. The fees would be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the Department of Transportation.

The bill would also impose on cruise ship owners or operators a $3 fee for each passenger embarking or disembarking at U.S. ports. The new fee would apply during fiscal year 1990 to overnight voyages on vessels berthing 16 or more passengers and to voyages of any length on ships with gambling casinos. Two-thirds of the funds collected would be deposited as offsetting receipts in the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund, and the rest in the general fund of the Treasury.

In addition, the bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to establish a schedule of fees to be collected for each slot issued by the Federal Aviation Administration and held by an air carrier, other than a commuter operator, at high density traffic airports (National Airport in Washington, D.C., O'Hare Airport in Chicago, and LaGuardia and Kennedy Airports in New York). The bill would require that at least $239 million in fees be collected for fiscal year 1990. The fees would be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the Federal Aviation Administration.

Finally, the bill would require the U.S. Coast Guard (USCG) to establish a fee system designed to collect $50 million in fiscal year 1990 from users of Coast Guard services, other than emergency search and rescue. Amounts collected would be deposited as offsetting receipts in the U.S. Treasury.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The new fees mandated by the bill would result in an increase in receipts to the federal government, as shown in the following table.

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Commercial aviation fee:
Estimated budget authority	−111
Estimated outlays	−111
Passenger vessel fee:
Estimated budget authority	−19
Estimated outlays	−19
Airport slot leases:
Estimated budget authority	−239
Estimated outlays	−239
Coast Guard user fee:
Estimated budget authority	−50
Estimated outlays	−50
Total:
Estimated budget authority	−419
Estimated outlays	−419

The budget impact of this bill would fall within function 400.

Basis of Estimates:

The estimate for the commercial aviation fee is based on CBO's latest baseline estimate of revenues from the current international departure tax, which is also $3 per passenger.

The estimate of receipts from passenger vessel fees is based on information from industry groups and U.S. ports. CBO estimates that the fee would apply to about 6.4 million passenger embarkations or debarkations in fiscal year 1990, assuming that the number of cruise and gambling voyage passengers continues to grow at the current rates of about 10 percent and 20 percent per year, respectively. This would result in federal offsetting receipts totaling an estimated $19 million in 1990. This estimate reflects credits of about $1 million for harbor taxes paid by cruise operators under section 4461 of the Internal Revenue Code.

In preparing this estimate, CBO has assumed that the necessary regulations for the commercial aviation and passenger vessel fees would be promulgated within 60 days of enactment, as required by the bill, and that fees would be collected for all covered flights and voyages occurring during fiscal year 1990. The estimates for receipts from airport slot fees and Coast Guard user fees assume that regulations would be promulgated and implemented to collect the amounts specified in the bill for fiscal year 1990.

6. Estimated cost to State and local government: None.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: On August 1, 1989, the Congressional Budget Office transmitted a cost estimate for the reconciliation recommendations of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. That committee's recommendations included a passenger vessel fee of $20 per passenger, and was estimated to produce receipts of $128 million in 1990, increasing to $210 million by 1994.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, DC, July 27, 1989.

Hon. JAMES R. SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with H. Con. Res. 106, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1990, we are submitting the reconciliation recommendations adopted by the Environment and Public Works Committee on July 21, 1989.

We have requested, but not yet received, a formal cost estimate from the Congressional Budget Office for the attached legislation. Preliminary estimates indicate that our title of the reconciliation measure will meet, and possibly exceed, the savings this Committee was instructed to achieve by the Senate Budget Committee. The formal cost estimate will be provided to the budget committee when it is received.

Sincerely,

QUENTIN N. BURDICK.
JOHN H. CHAFEE.

REPORT TO ACCOMPANY TITLE IV—ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS, SUBTITLE A—ATMOSPHERIC POLLUTION FEES

GENERAL BACKGROUND

Fees

The President's budget recommendation for FY 1990 proposed the development and implementation of a system to charge market value for the limited rights to produce or import chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and other ozone depleting chemicals. These limited rights are the result of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer (the Protocol) [an international agreement negotiated and signed in 1987 and ratified by the United States in March 1988] and U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) regulations that have been promulgated under authority of the Clean Air Act to implement the Protocol.

CFCs and the other chemicals covered by the Protocol are persistent chemicals that rise into the stratosphere where they catalyze the destruction of stratospheric ozone. Stratospheric ozone is the Earth's main shield against ultraviolet (UV) radiation. A decrease in stratospheric ozone will allow more UV radiation to reach Earth, resulting in health and environmental damage, including increased incidence of skin cancer.

Signatories to the Protocol, including the United States, agreed to respond to this threat by imposing limits on what previously had been unlimited rights to produce, import and consume CFCs and other ozone depleting substances. Production of CFCs and related substance is being curtailed worldwide because of the risks that current production levels pose to human health and the environment. The Protocol requires industrialized countries such as the United States to limit CFC consumption, beginning in 1989, and to reduce CFC consumption 50 percent by 1998.

EPA has promulgated regulations under the authority of the Clean Air Act to implement the Montreal Protocol. Current EPA regulations assign production and importation privileges to firms based on each firm's 1986 levels of production and importation. The scarcity of CFCs brought about by the production and importation restrictions required to carry out the Protocol are predicted to result in a significant rise in CFC prices.

The Administration has been considering several mechanisms to charge market value for the limited rights to produce or import CFCs, including permit fees at a level designed to reflect the market value of CFC production and importation privileges or, as an alternative, periodic auctions of the limited rights. Such systems to charge market value are estimated by the Administration to produce $400 million in FY 1990, $1.35 billion in '91, $550 million in '92, $625 million in '93, and $950 million in '94.

The Senate Budget Resolution and the Committee on Environment and Public Work's reconciliation instructions accepted the President's assumption of capturing the market value for the limited rights to produce or import CFCs in FY 1990 and the estimate that such market value is $400 million. EPA's regulations implementing the Protocol will limit CFC production and importation in the United States to 670 million pounds in FY 1990. As such, unless the limited production and importation rights are allocated through periodic auctions, a production and importation fee of 60 cents per pound is necesary to capture the $400 million market value of the limited production and importation rights.

The legislation approved by the Environment Committee is modeled after S. 503, Senator Baucus' Chlorofluorocarbon and Halon Reduction Act of 1989, a bill that was introduced and referred to the Environment and Public Works Committee on March 2, 1989. That bill was the subject of a hearing before the Subcommittee on Environmental Protection on May 19, 1989 and, as approved by the Committee, establishes a base fee of 60 cents per pound to be paid in exchange for the limited right to produce or import certain CFCs.

In a memorandum dated April 14, 1989, the U.S. Department of Justice Office of Legal Counsel's Assistant Attorney General concluded that EPA has the authority under the Clean Air Act to allocate production privileges for CFCs through an auction or other market pricing mechanisms, such as a regulatory fee. That is correct reading of the law.

As noted in the Justice Department memorandum, EPA's authority to restrict or prohibit the production of CFCs derives from section 157(b) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7457(b)). Once the decision has been made to cap the production of CFCs with allowances, a method for allocating the allowances is necessary. The memorandum goes on to note that auctions and historically based allocations with fees merely constitute different methods of allocating the allowances. Under the existing EPA rule of allocated quotas, the allowances are distributed on historical grounds.

The memorandum continues to observe that, unless a fee is charged for the allowance, the effect of the existing rule is to make a "gift" of the allowances to firms which have produced CFCs in the past. The value of such a "gift" is expected to be so great that CFC producers who are the most likely developers of substitutes will, as long as the "gift" of the production or importation allowance is free, have an incentive to delay the introduction of safe substitutes that will be less profitable.

Notwithstanding EPA's existing statutory authority to allocate production privileges for CFCs through auctions or quotas with regulatory fees, the legislation reported by the Environment Committee establishes a statutory fee system to charge market value for the limited production rights to produce or import CFCs and other ozone depleting chemicals.

Requiring the payment of fees to the Government in an amount approximately the market value of limited production and importation rights in exchange for such limited rights will: supplement the regulations and controls applicable to CFCs and other ozone depleting substances pursuant to the Protocol, the Clean Air Act, and the Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act included as part of this legislation; eliminate the disincentive for the introduction of safe but less profitable substitutes that a quota system alone creates; and produce revenues to offset Government expenses associated with implementation of regulatory registrictions on production and use of CFCs and other ozone depleting chemicals pursuant to the Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act.

Controls and assessments

Two distinct but closely related global environmental crises are destruction of the stratospheric ozone layer, Earth's main shield against the Sun's harmful ultraviolet radiation, and massive, uncontrolled global climate change associated with intensification of the greenhouse effect.

Destruction of the ozone layer is caused primarily by the release of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and similar manufactured substances into the atmosphere. The threat of uncontrolled global climate change is caused by the accelerating accumulation of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, primarily carbon dioxide, CFCs and methane.

Carbon dioxide emissions account for an estimated 50% of current increases in the commitment to global warming. CFCs are estimated to account for 15 to 20% of current increases in the commitment to global warming, however, each molecule of CFC has approximately twenty thousand times more impact on global climate than does a single molecule of carbon dioxide. Similarly, emissions of methane account for an estimated 20% of current increases in the commitment to global warming and each molecule of methane has approximately twenty five times more impact on global climate than a molecule of carbon dioxide.

The predicted environmental impacts of an intensified greenhouse effect include:

—an increase in the global average temperature of 1.5 to 5.5 degrees Centigrade (2.7 to 9.9 degrees Fahrenheit) over the next 40 to 60 years to be compared with an average increase of less than 3 degrees Fahrenheit over the last 10,000 years) and continuing increases at an equally alarming rate in succeeding years;

—the extinction of numerous species of plants and animals and significant interference with natural evolutionary responses;

—reduced soil moisture content and altered storm patterns that may seriously disrupt the U.S. agricultural industry; and —a rise in sea level of 1 to 4 feet over the next 60 years and continuing sea level rise in succeeding years.

It is easy to overstate the uncertainty that surrounds this issue. It is true that scientists disagree about matters such as whether the greenhouse effect has already begun. Similarly, there is no scientific consensus about the precise timing of the predicted changes. Nevertheless, there is a remarkable degree of scientific consensus concerning the threat of massive, uncontrolled global climate change. Specifically, most experts agree that if we do not change our pattern of polluting the atmosphere, many of us, our children, and our grandchildren will experience devastating climate changes of a magnitude and at a rate that will preclude natural evolutionary responses.

There appears to be consensus on another critical point. That is: by the time there is scientific proof for every detail of the problem, it will be too late to avoid the most devastating impacts of an intensified greenhouse effect and global climate change. We can ill-afford to wait for ten years of research before we take action (1) to reduce atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases to limit the rate and extent of future climate change, and (2) to implement adaptation strategies for coping with the changes to which we are already committed.

Failure to act on the greenhouse effect on the basis of current scientific understanding would replicate the mistake made in the early 1980's with respect to destruction of the ozone layer.

In 1974, Drs. Sherwood Rowland and Mario Molina from the University of California published a paper demonstrating how CFCs destroy ozone in the stratosphere. In this country, the original scientific theory led to the ban of CFCs in aerosols in 1978. There were no measurements of actual ozone loss, just the scientific theory.

Recognizing the problem, industry began to look for safe substitutes. Progress was being made when, in the early 1980's, the search for substitutes came to a virtual standstill and worldwide use of CFCs continued to grow. Today, the U.S. produces approximately 700 million pounds of CFCs each year, accounting for roughly one-third of the world total. Non-aerosol uses of CFCs in the U.S. have grown to record high levels and per capita usage of CFCs in the U.S. is among the highest in the world.

In 1985, scientists discovered a significant loss of ozone over a portion of the southern hemisphere that is the size of North America. The collapse was not predicted and measurements have revealed losses greater than 50% in the total column and greater than 95% between an altitude of 15 to 20 kilometers (9 to 12 miles). The discovery of this "hole" in the stratospheric ozone layer over Antarctica gave renewed impetus to international efforts to understand and protect the ozone layer. In September 1987, the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was negotiated and signed by more than two dozen nations. The Protocol entered into force in January 1989 and 37 nations are now Parties to the Protocol.

Since the Montreal Protocol was negotiated and signed in 1987, scientists have observed and measured losses of ozone on a global scale. It has been discovered that destruction of the ozone layer is not limited to remote, uninhabited portions of Antarctica. Losses of ozone since 1970 have been measured during the winter months on a worldwide basis, including losses ranging from 2.3% to 6.2% over densely-populated portions of the Northern Hemisphere. These measurements of actual ozone loss are significantly greater than computer models had predicted and raise serious questions about the adequacy of the control measures set forth in the Montreal Protocol and existing EPA regulations.

Destruction of the ozone layer and the increased incidence of solar ultraviolet radiation that results will cause increased rates of disease in humans (including increased rates of skin cancer, cataracts, and, potentially, suppression of the immune system). It will also threaten food crops and marine resources.

Parts A and B of this legislation are necessary to supplement existing controls and the provisions of part C of this bill establishing production and importation fees. Part C of the bill will, in part, offset the Government costs of implementing existing controls and the controls provided for in this bill.

Failure to enact part A of this bill and the emission control measures for CFCs and other ozone depleting and greenhouse forcing chemicals would result in a significant contribution to aggravation of these environmental problems. Not only would the United States continue to pour almost 700 million pounds of new CFCs into the atmosphere on an annual basis, domestic sources would be releasing all of the CFCs produced in past years that are currently contained in products all across the country. Assuming the phase-out schedule in the bill is adopted and not accelerated by the Administrator, just new production of CFCs between now and the year 2000 will result in the release of more than 6 billion pounds of CFCs into the atmosphere unless the emission control measures set forth in this bill are enacted.

By waiting for measurements of actual ozone loss, by failing to take appropriate action on the basis of credible, undisputed scientific theory, governments around the world allowed a manageable environmental threat to become an environmental crisis. As a result of atmospheric lag time and the persistance of CFCs and similar ozone depleting and greenhouse forcing gases, it is too late to prevent additional damage to the ozone layer or anthropogenically induced global climate change. Our challenge is to take action as rapidly as possible that will, to the greatest extent possible, (1) reduce the threat of additional damage to the ozone layer and (2) reduce the rate and magnitude of anthropogenically-induced global climate change.

DISCUSSION

Subtitle A of Title IV of this reconciliation legislation shall be known as The Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act of 1989. The subtitle begins by emphasizing the facts that (1) the ozone depleting chemicals subject to controls under this Act are also powerful greenhouse gases and that (2) this Act will help address two related but distinct environmental problems—global climate change resulting from an intensified greenhouse effect and destruction of the stratospheric ozone layer.

The Act is divided into three parts:

A—Control of Chlorofluorocarbons and Other Manufactured Substances;

B—Methane Assessment; and

C—Offset of Government Expenses Associated with Implementation of Regulatory Controls and Imposition of Production, Importation and Distribution Fees on Ozone-Depleting Chemicals.

A discussion of Part C is in the preceding general background section. A discussion of Parts A and B and a section-by-section analysis of the entire bill follows:

PART A—CONTROL OF CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS AND OTHER MANUFACTURED SUBSTANCES

This portion of the Act is modeled after the Chafee/Baucus bill, S. 491, with the addition of provisions on: motor vehicle air-conditioning, modeled after the Jeffords/Leahy and Kerry bills, S. 1035 and S. 1052; fire extinguishers and nonessential consumer products, modeled after the Gore bill, S. 870; and safe alternatives, modeled after the McCain and Gore bills, S. 644 and S. 872. The Subcommittee on Environmental Protection held a hearing on May 19, 1989 to receive testimony on S. 491 and related legislation.

Part A of the Act has six main elements:

First, it establishes as a national policy that the production and use of the five most destructive chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) [#11, 12, 113, 114, and 115], the halons, and carbon tetrachloride should be reduced and eliminated "as expeditiously as possible." The Act directs the Administrator to implement a phase-out schedule to control, reduce and eliminate production more rapidly than the schedule set forth in the Act if (1) new information suggests such an accelerated schedule may be necessary, (2) the Administrator determines, based on the availability of substitutes, that an accelerated schedule is attainable, or (3) the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer is modified to include a schedule that is more stringent than that included in the Act;

Second, subject to acceleration by the Administrator as outlined above, the Act places the five most destructive CFCs on a production phase-down schedule that tracks the Montreal Protocol (20% reduction in 1993 and 50% reduction in 1998), and adds an additional step: virtual elimination by not later than 2000;

Third, where the Protocol will only freeze production of the halons and does not regulate carbon tetrachloride at all, powerful ozone depleters, the Act puts these chemicals on the same phase-out schedule as the most harmful CFCs;

Fourth, where the Montreal Protocol will allow unlimited growth in the production and use of other, less potent ozone depleting chemicals and, in turn, continue the threat to the ozone layer, the Act places a limit on the growth of such chemicals by requiring that total ozone depletion potential be reduced by 95% between now and 2010;

Fifth, the Act includes a supplement to the production phase-out: recognizing that it would be extremely difficult to eliminate all production and use of ozone depleting and greenhouse chemicals on a 2 to 3 year time frame, the Act provides for significant reductions in the emissions that are destroying the ozone layer and contributing to the greenhouse effect; to achieve this—

The practice of venting or releasing these chemicals from refrigeration and air-conditioning units into the environment will be prohibited as of January 1, 1992;

Labeling, recapture, recycling and safe disposal will be required;

EPA is directed to promulgate standards for control of emissions to the lowest achievable rate and for the use of alternative substances; and

Specific limitations and controls are prescribed for motor vehicle air-conditioning systems (including prohibitions, effective January 1, 1991, on the sale of do-it-yourself CFC canisters and, effective with model year 1994, on the sale of motor vehicle air-conditioning systems that are dependent on CFR-12 as a refrigerant), halon fire extinguishers for consumer applications (a ban on sale and distribution, effective 2 years after enactment), and nonessential consumer products containing CFCs (a ban on sale and distribution of items such as CFC-propelled plastic party streamers and noise horns, effective 1 year after enactment); and

Sixth, twelve months after this Act becomes law, importation of the five most destructive CFCs, halone and carbon tetrachloride in bulk or in products will be prohibited unless EPA certifies that the country of origin is implementing a phase-out and regulatory control program that is as stringent as ours; and persons subject to U.S. jurisdiction will be prohibited from transferring technology or investing in facilities to produce or use such substances in countries that have not been certified.

The importance of (1) phasing out the most harmful ozone depleting chemicals and (2) controlling growth in other, less potent ozone depleting substances was graphically demonstrated by testimony presented to the Committee by EPA on May 19, 1989. Subsequent analysis has produced the following estimates of total atmospheric chlorine concentrations under various scenarios.

In 1985, the year the "Hole" over Antarctica was discovered, total atmospheric chlorine concentrations were 2.7 parts per billion (ppb). Under the provisions of the Montreal Protocol as currently written, chlorine concentrations are projected to reach more than 12 ppb by the year 2075, approximately 14 ppb by 2100, and will continue to increase. A year 2000 phase-out of just the five most destructive CFCs would yield chlorine concentrations of almost 10 ppb by 2075, more than 10 ppb by 2100 and would continue to increase. If carbon tetrachloride is added to the year 2000 phase-out, chlorine concentrations are projected to increase to almost 7 ppb by 2075 and then level off at that concentration before starting a very gradual downward trend.

If methyl chloroform is added to the year 2000 phase-out of CFCs and carbon tetrachloride, chlorine concentrations are projected to rise to approximately 4 ppb and, depending on the amount of growth in other, less potent ozone depleting chemicals and the average ozone depletion potential (ODP) of the chemicals, such concentrations may or may not return to 1985 levels by 2075. For example, if such substitutes have an average ODP of .05 and are allowed to capture 50% of what the CFC market would have been without the Protocol, chlorine concentrations will remain at approximately 4 ppb through 2100. If, however, the growth of such substitutes is controlled and market capture is limited to 20%, chlorine concentrations will decrease to around 3 ppb by the year 2075. If the average ODP of such substitutes is .02 and market capture is limited to 20%, chlorine concentrations are projected to return to the pre-1985 Antarctic "Hole" concentration of 2.6 ppb by the year 2075.

PART B—METHANE ASSESSMENT

Part B of the Act is designed to develop information that is lacking on methane, one of the three most significant greenhouse gases (CFCs and carbon dioxide are the other two most significant greenhouse gases.) The Administrator is directed to study and report to Congress on the factors causing atmospheric concentrations of methane to increase; the sources of methane emissions; and opportunities for reducing such emissions.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 4001. Short title.—

The Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act of 1989.

Section 4002. Findings.—

The Act begins by emphasizing the facts that (1) the ozone depleting chemicals subject to controls under this Act are also powerful greenhouse gases and that (2) this Act will help address two related but distinct environmental problems—global climate change resulting from an intensified greenhouse effect and destruction of the stratospheric ozone layer.

Various findings are included regarding the nature of the problem, the status of scientific understanding and government responses, the effect such government responses wil have on CFC prices, the need to impose additional controls and to charge market value in exchange for the limited rights to produce or import CFCs and other ozone depleting chemicals.

Section 4003. Objectives and National Goal.—

The objectives of this Act are to restore and maintain the chemical and physical integrity of the Earth's atmosphere, to protect human health and the global environment, and to provide a smooth transition from the use of ozone depleting chemicals to safe substitutes.

The national goal is declared to be the elimination of emissions of manufactured substances with ozone depleting potential as well as global warming potential, to reduce to the maximum extent possible emissions of other greenhouse gases, and to provide for an orderly and equitable shift to safe alternatives.

Section 4004. Definitions.—

The following terms are defined: Administrator; distributor; household appliances; import; manufactured substances; medical purposes; ozone depleting chemicals; person; producer; Secretary; and substances covered by this Act.

Part A—Control of Chlorofluorocarbons and Other Manufactured Substances

Section 4005. Listing of Regulated Substances.—

This section directs the Administrator to publish a "priority list" of chemicals to be phased-out, including CFCs 11, 12, 113, 114, 115, carbon tetrachloride, and halons 1211, 1301, and 2402.

The priority list is intended to include those manufactured substances that pose the greatest risk to the environment as a result of high ozone depleting potential, high global warming potential, or low ozone depleting or global warming potential but extremely high levels of emissions. The examples listed in the bill are those substances known to pose the greatest threat to the ozone layer and global climate but may not be a complete list due to the problem of "designer chemicals" (the creation of substances that are virtually identical to the listed chemicals but identified by another name). For that reason, the Administrator is authorized to add substances to the priority list. In addition to the problem of "designer chemicals", analysis of recently published or new data on the high levels of emissions of, for example, methyl chloroform, might justify the addition of one or more chemicals to the priority list. The Administrator is authorized to make such additions.

The Administrator is also directed to publish a list of other regulated substances that will be subject to a limit on total ozone depleting potential (ODP) in section 4013, including CFCs 22, 123, 124, 125, 141(b), 142(b), and, unless added to the priority list by the Administrator, methyl chloroform. Such an approach will allow production of these "other regulated substances" to increase while, at the same time, assuring that total chlorine loading of the atmosphere is reduced. As with the priority list, the Administrator is authorized to add substances to the list of other regulated substances.

Pending publications by the Administrator of ozone depleting factors (the relative destructive force of each chemical), such factors are included in the Act for purposes of computing and enforcing the section 4013 limit on ODP that is applicable to all substances covered by this Act.

Section 4006. Reporting Requirements.—

This section requires annual reporting by producers, importers and distributors of chemicals covered by this Act.

Section 4007. Production phase-out of substances on the priority list.

(a) National policy.—

Congress declares it to be the national policy that the production and use of chemicals on the priority list be reduced and eliminated "as expeditiously as possible."

(b) Accelerated schedule.—

The Act directs the Administrator to implement a phase-out schedule to control and reduce production more rapidly than the schedule set forth in the Act if (1) new information suggests such an accelerated schedule is necessary, (2) the Administrator determines, based on the availability of substitutes, that an accelerated schedule is attainable; or (3) the Montreal Protocol is modified to include an accelerated schedule that is more aggressive than the schedule set forth in the Act.

In keeping with the policy of eliminating these chemicals as rapidly as possible and before the year 2000, to the maximum extent practicable, the Administrator is directed to determine no less often than every eighteen months whether any of the three conditions requiring acceleration of the schedule have been satisfied.

The importance of accelerating the phase-out schedule is reflected in the estimate, presented by expert witnesses, that a phase-out in 1995 could accelerate the recovery of the stratosphere and allow atmospheric concentrations of chlorine to return to current levels approximately 20 years faster than phase-out in 2000. An additional 20 years of elevated chlorine levels presents an unacceptable risk that must be avoided if it is at all possible to do so.

(c) Schedule.—

In the absence of regulations under the preceding subsection, the Act codifies the CFC reduction schedule currently set forth in the Montreal Protocol (20% reduction in 1993 and 50% reduction in 1998), makes the schedule applicable to halons and carbon tetrachloride, and adds an additional step: virtual elimination by not later than 2000.

(d) Exception for medical purposes.—

The Administrator May, in consultation with the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), authorize the production of limited quantities of substances on the priority list after the year 2000 if such authorization is necessary for medical purposes.

As set forth in the definition of "medical purposes," two conditions must be satisfied as predicates to a finding under this section. First, it must be shown that no safe substitutes have been developed. Second, the drug, medical device or diagnostic product must be essential, as determined by the Commissioner of the FDA in consultation with the Administrator.

"Medical purposes" may include drugs and drug delivery systems that satisfy the criteria set forth in the Act. For example, effective treatment of acute, chronic asthma currently is dependent on an inhaled dose delivered by a CFC propellant inhaler. Unless a safe substitute exists or until a substitute is developed, such a drug delivery system may be found by the Commissioner and the Administrator to be essential. To the extent priority list substances are necessary for the manufacture of essential drug products as, for example, reactants or building blocks in the chemical synthesis of a drug active ingredient, such use may fall within the purview of the Act's conditional exceptions for "medical purposes."

Section 4008. Production phase-out exception for national security.—

The President may authorize the production and use of CFC 114 and the three halons, notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, if he finds that substitutes are not available and such production and use is necessary to protect the national security interests of the United States.

Section 4009. National recycling and disposal program.—

By July 1, 1991, EPA is to promulgate standards and requirements to reduce the use and emissions of substances covered by this Act to the lowest achievable level. Such standards and requirements are expected to achieve, among other things, a reduction of at least 50 per cent in the use of nonrecycled priority list substances in the manufacture of products in which such substances from fire prevention or extinguishing equipment should be reduced by at least 90 per cent.

Prior to January 1, 1994, EPA is to promulgate standards and requirements for the recapture, recycling and safe disposal of substances covered by this Act, including provisions that:

Mandate removal of these substances from products, such as refrigerators and air-conditioners, prior to disposal of the products;

Prohibit the manufacture or distribution of products containing substances covered by this Act unless such products are equipped with a servicing aperture that allows recapture during service and repair; and Prevent, to the maximum extent practicable, the release of these substances during disposal of products in which the substances are incorporated, such as rigid and soft foams.

As of January 1, 1992, it will be unlawful for any person maintaining servicing, repairing or disposing of a household appliance or a commercial refrigeration or air-conditioning unit to knowingly vent, release, or dispose of substances covered by this Act in a fashion which permits such substances to enter the environment. Exceptions to this prohibition are included for de minimis releases associated with good faith attempts to recapture, recycle and safely dispose of such substances.

As of July 1, 2000, it will be unlawful to use a priority list substance except for approved medical purposes and, until the year 2010, to maintain and service household appliances and commercial refrigeration and air-conditioning units.

The Administrator is directed to promulgate regulations concerning manufactured substances to assure that the greenhouse forcing potential of CFC substitutes are considered by manufacturers and users and that the problem of global climate change will not be exacerbated by the use of such substitutes. The greenhouse threat of such substances must be examined and considered both from the perspective of direct radiative effect when such substitutes are emitted into the atmosphere and from the perspective of indirect effects of substitutes that, for example, result in a significant increase in energy usage and resulting increases in carbon dioxide emissions.

Section 4010. Motor vehicle air-conditioning.—

As of January 1, 1992, any person who services motor vehicles air-conditioning systems for consideration must use extraction and reclamation equipment that meets standards set by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

The sale of do-it-yourself recharge canisters of motor vehicle refrigerants will be prohibited as of January 1, 1991.

The sale or export of motor vehicles that contain passenger compartment air-conditioning systems that are dependent on CFC 12 (or similarly powerful ozone depleting chemicals) will be prohibited with respect to model year 1994 and subsequent model years. As of January 1, 1994, it will be unlawful to install or sell for installation any passenger compartment air-conditioning system that is dependent on CFC-12 or similarly powerful ozone depleting chemicals. If technological development problems will prevent the sale or installation of alternative air-conditioning systems prior to the effective date of the prohibitions on equipping motor vehicles with air-conditioning systems that are dependent on CFC 12, the Administrator is to report such fact to the Congress and recommend alternative effective dates for the prohibitions.

Section 4011. Fire prevention or extinguishing equipment.—

EPA's regulations on use and disposal under section 4009 are to include requirements to reduce release of priority list substances associated with training, testing, leakage and accidental discharges from fire control systems. Such releases are expected to be reduced by at least 90 per cent.

Effective 2 years after enactment, the sale and distribution of portable fire extinguishes containing halons will be prohibited. The Administrator is authorized to create an exception to this prohibition for commercial applications where use of such equipment is necessary to protect human health. For example, it may be necessary to allow, for a limited period, the sale of portable halon extinguishers for use in airplanes and similar closed environments.

Section 4012. Nonessential consumer products containing chlorofluorocarbons.—

Effective one year after enactment, the sale and distribution of CFC propelled plastic party streamers and noise horns, CFC cleaning fluids for noncommercial electronic and photographic equipment and other products determined by the Administrator to be nonessential will be prohibited.

Section 4013. Limitatin on ozone depletion potential.—

To supplement the section 4007 production caps and reductions applicable to priority list substances, production caps on total ozone depletion potential (ODP) of all substances covered by this Act are imposed.

By July 1, 1992, EPA is to promulgate regulations that will assure an overall ODP reduction of 95% by the year 2010. Such regulations should allow for market entry by new producers. If EPA fails to promulgate such regulations by July 1, 2000, it will be unlawful for any person to produce substances covered by this Act in annual quantities that yield a total ODP greater than 5% of such person's 1986 levels.

The elimination of CFCs, as provided for in this bill, will reduce total ODP by more than 95 per cent. By capping total ODP at 5 per cent of 1986 levels, this provision is projected to accommodate significant growth in, for example, hydrochlorofluorocarbons (HCFC). Unlimited growth in HCFCs, however, presents an unacceptable risk to the environment. Although HCFCs are less potent ozone depleters than CFCs, both classes of chemicals contribute to total chlorine loading of the atmosphere and destruction of the ozone layer. The 5 per cent cap will allow HCFS to capture a limited percentage of the CFC market which would have existed in the absence of the Montreal Protocol and this bill. It is estimated that such a cap will be reached around the year 2010.

Section 4014. Certification of equipment programs.—

Effective one year after enactment, the importation of priority list substances in bulk or in products will be prohibited unless EPA certifies that the country of origin is implementing a phase-out and regulatory control program that is as stringent as that set forth in this Act.

To prevent persons subject to U.S. jurisdiction from transferring technology or investing in facilities to produce priority list substances in countries that are not so certified, the President is directed to prohibit such technology transfers and investments within one year of enactment. Similarly, the President is directed to prohibit technology transfers and investments in facilities that produce products that will create or expand the demand for priority list substances in such countries.

Section 4015. Labeling.—

Twenty-one months after a substance is listed under this Act, canisters or products containing or made with such substances must be labeled as such prior to being introduced into commerce.

Section 4016. Safe alternatives policy.—

To the maximum extent practicable, substances covered by this Act are to be replaced with alternative substances and processes that reduce overall risk to human health and the environment.

The Administrator is directed to recommend Federal research programs and other activities to assist in the identification of safe alternatives; and to examine Federal procurement practices and recommend measures to promote a transition by the Government to the use of safe substitutes.

The Administrator is also directed to collect health and safety studies from producers of chemical substitutes. Not less than 60 days prior to introducing a chemical substitute, the producer of such chemical must notify EPA.

Section 4017. Federal enforcement.—

The Administrator is authorized to issue compliance orders, assess administrative civil penalties up to $25,000 per day of noncompliance for each violation, and commence civil actions in court.

Criminal penalties (up to 2 years imprisonment and fines as set forth in the uniform criminal code) and civil penalties (up to $25,000 per violation) are provided for violations of the Act. The list of "knowing" activities subject to criminal penalties are specified in the Act.

Section 4018. Judicial review.—

Review of any final action under this Act may be had in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Federal judicial district in which the petitioner resides or transacts business.

Section 4019. Citizens suits.—

Citizen suits are authorized in the same manner as in most environmental statutes.

Section 4020. Separability.—

Invalidation of a portion of this Act will not affect the balance of the Act.

Section 4021. Relationship to other laws.—

This Act does not affect the authority of the Administrator under the Clean Act Act or TSCA, the authority of other agencies, or the authority of any State or political subdivision.

Section 4022. Authority of administrator.—

The Administrator is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

Part B—Methane Assessment

Section 4023. Objective and national goal.—

The objective of this part is to identify and analyze options to reduce the risks of tropospheric ozone formation and global climate change by: reducing methane emissions enough to keep atmospheric concentrations from increasing; and promoting additional analyses of (1) the factors causing methane concentrations to increase, (2) the sources of methane emissions, (3) the opportunities for reducing such emissions, and (4) the relationships among methane and other atmospheric pollutants.

The national goal is to reduce methane emissions in the U.S. and other countries; stimulate international agencies to fund projects in developing countries that will reduce methane emissions; and provide data in support of international efforts to reduce methane emissions.

Section 4024. Information collection.—

For purposes of completing the studies required by this Act, the Administrator is authorized to collect information from persons responsible for the release of methane during manufacturing, processing, resource recovery or distribution, or waste management. The agency's need for this information should be considered carefully and, given the difficulties inherent in reporting on sources as diverse as agriculture and human activities, the authority to collect such information should be used advisedly. To the extent information concerning methane releases is already reported to other federal or state agencies and is available to the Administrator, duplicate reporting requirements are to be avoided. The Administrator is authorized to use survey techniques or to rely on reasonably accurate estimates of emissions and should not seek to establish an extensive new monitoring system.

Section 4025. Economically justified actions.—

By September 30, 1990, EPA is to report to Congress on measures that could reduce methane emissions and are economically justified with or without consideration of environmental benefits.

Section 4026. Domestic Methane Source Inventory and Control Options.—

By September 30, 1990, EPA is to submit to Congress reports, including inventories of emissions associated with the following activities in the U.S.:

Natural gas and coal extraction, transportation, distribution, storage, and use;

Management of solid waste;

Agriculture;

Biomass burning; and

Other activities deemed by the Administrator to be significant.

By September 30, 1990, EPA is to submit a plan to Congress that could be implemented to stop the growth in atmospheric concentrations of methane from sources in the U.S. and shall include an analysis of U.S. programs that could be used to induce developing countries to implement measures that will reduce methane emissions.

Section 4027. International Studies.—

By September 30, 1990, EPA is to submit to Congress reports on methane emissions from other countries and on the potential for preventing an increase in atmospheric concentrations of methane from sources in other countries.

Section 4028. Natural Sources.—

By September 30, 1992, EPA is to submit to Congress reports on methane emissions from natural sources such as forests, tundra, and wetlands, and on the changes in emissions that may occur as a result of increased atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide.

Part C—Offset of Government Expenses Associated With Implementation of Regulatory Controls and Imposition of Production, Importation and Distribution Fees on Ozone Depleting Chemcials

Section 4029. Imposition of Fees.—

Production, importation and distribution fees are established for the 5 CFCs and the 3 halons covered by the Montreal Protocol. The effective dates for such fees are July 1, 1989 for CFCs and January 1, 1992 for halons. The Administrator is authorized to add ozone depleting chemcials to the list when and if production or importation limits are imposed for such chemcial.

A base fee of 60 cents per pound is established for each person producing or importing substances subject to the fee. An alternative fee is established in an amount representing the greater of (1) the base fee or (2) an amount equal to each producer's, importer's and distributor's share of the total revenues collected by the industry and attributable to sales of each covered chemcial less (1) an amount equal to the revenues that such sales would have generated at the adjusted 1987 average sales price and (2) an amount equal to income taxes due and payable on the revenues collected. In instances where the 60 cents per pound base fee has been passed through to a distributor by a producer or importer, the distributor will receive an additional allowance of 60 cents per pound. This provision is designed to avoid imposition of a double fee and the pass through to the consumer of $1.20 per pound.

Under this Act, producers and importers who have been granted the limited right to produce or import substances subject to the fee will be required to pay, on a quarterly basis, a fee of 60 cents per pound for each pound of substance produced or imported during the previous quarter. At the end of the year, the alternative fee provided for in this Act shall be computed and, if the alternative fee is greater than the base 60 cents per pound fee, producers and importers who paid the 60 cents base fee will owe the Government the difference between the base fee and the alternative fee and distributors who did not pay the base fee will owe the Government the entire alternative fee.

Section 4030. Off-setting Government Expenses Associated with Implementation of Regulatory Controls and Support for Activities Related to Alternatives to Ozone-Depleting Chemicals.—

The fees established by this Act are estimated to produce approximately $400 million in FY 1990. The Administration's proposal is estimated to produce $400 million in FY 1990, $1.3 billion in '91, $500 million in '92, $600 million in '93, and $900 million in '94. This section directs that this money be deposited each year in a new Ozone Layer and Climate Protection Trust Fund and that up to $100 million shall be available

29-059 O-90-32 (Pt. 17)

each year, subject to appropriations, for grants related to alternatives to chemicals that contribute to ozone depletion or global climate change. The Trust Fund shall also be available, as provided in appropriation Acts, to implement the Montreal Protocol and this Act. The balance of these monies are to remain in the Trust Fund and the interest earned shall be available, subject to appropriations, for appropriation to the EPA. One half of such appropriation shall be allocated to EPA for abatement and control activities, and one half shall be allocated to EPA for research and development activities.

Section 4031. Advisory Committees.—

The Administrator is required to establish advisory committees composed of relevant government agency members and representatives of public interest and industry groups to provide recommendations to fund appropriate and innovative efforts for development of safe alternatives to substances that contribute to ozone depletion and climate change, through the grants authorized in Section 4032. Participants should have expertise in scientific and engineering disciplines compatible with the established purposes of the grant program including persons knowledgeable in the fields of alternative energy and conservation technologies.

Subsection (c) outlines the factors to be taken into account by the advisory committees in providing advise and formulating recommendations to the Administrator with respect to grant awards. It is intended that, consistent with the factors specified in this subsection, consideration be given to emerging technologies which do not rely on fossil fuels as an energy source as well as technologies which increase the efficiency of converting fossil fuels to other forms of energy and reduce emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases.

Section 4032. Grants.—

This section authorizes the grant program referred to in section 4030. The grants are available for the purpose of stimulating development of technologies, processes and safe substances that can be substituted for technologies, processes and substances which contribute to ozone depletion and climate change. It is intended that in awarding grants, the Administrator shall consider overall climate impacts and, in addition to other factors, the contributions that alternative energy and conservation technologies can make to solving the problem of global climate change.

Section 4033. Trust Fund.—

This section establishes the Trust Fund referred to in section 4030.

Section 4034. Authorizations.—

This section authorizes appropriations to EPA to carry out the grant program referred to in section 4030, to offset government costs associated with implementation of the Montreal Protocol and this Act, and for other purposes.

Subtitle B—Nuclear Regulatory Commission User Fees

Section 4101 amends the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-272) to require the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to recover 45% of its budget for fiscal year 1990 through the collection of user fees.

Section 4102 amends the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 to clarify the authority of the NRC to reduce any penalties assessed against a licensee in an amount equal to the contribution such person agrees to pay to a nonprofit educational institution for use in furthering the protection of the radiological health and safety of the public.

DISCUSSION

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 established permanent fee collection authority for the NRC at a maximum level equal to 33 percent of the Commission's annual estimated costs. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (P.L. 100-203) authorized a fee collection increase to 45 percent of the Commission's budget for fiscal years 1988 and 1989. Without additional legislation, the fee recovery level for fiscal year 1990 would revert to the 33 percent level.

The present standard for the collection of these fees is maintained. The fees shall be reasonably related to the regulatory service provided by the Commission and shall fairly reflect the cost to the Commission of providing such service.

The second section of the subtitle clarifies that the NRC has the power to reduce any penalties assessed against any of its licensees (e.g., operators of nuclear power plants, persons licensed to possess nuclear materials, etc.) by an amount equal to the amount which such person agrees to pay to a nonprofit educational institution for use in furthering the protection of the radiological health and safety of the public. The NRC currently has this authority through its power to remit and mitigate fines; however, this legislation will remove any doubts that may have existed as to the NRC's ability to accomplish this purpose.

The United States is suffering from a declining interest in nuclear sciences among our students and it is in the national security interest to maintain a high level of expertise within the hands of American citizens. It is intended that the NRC use this process to establish programs to enhance the quality of education of nuclear workers, such that the recurrence of violations might ultimately be prevented, and to establish programs to promote the protection of the radiological health and safety of the public. Further, it is strongly recommended that payments be made to a local institution in order to benefit the public health and safety of residents of the area wherein the licensee's facility is located and the violation occurred.

Because these payments are to be made in lieu of fines, they shall have the same tax consequences as a fine. They are not tax deductible. It is believed that these type of payments to nonprofit educational institutions will further the protection of public health and safety to a greater degree than if the payments were simply absorbed into the general revenues of the U.S. Treasury. The Environmental Protection Agency has been engaging in this sort of fine mitigation program for some time. It has been well received by the public and the industries affected.

The modest amount of additional administrative effort required on the part of the NRC to remit or mitigate fines in this manner will be more than compensated for by the benefits to the public health and safety achieved through the programs established by this effort. NRC is strongly encouraged to make greater use of this authority.

Subtitle C—Payments to the Offshore Oil Protection Compensation Fund

Section 4201 amends the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act to continue payments to the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund until a balance of $200,000,000 is reached.

DISCUSSION

Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (OCS) established the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund to assist in clean-up in the event of an oil spill associated with OCS operations. The Fund is supported by a charge of three cents per barrel of oil produced on OCS lands. Current law provides for a minimum balance within the Fund of $100,000,000 and a ceiling of $200,000,000. The Secretary of Transportation is authorized to suspend collection of payments if the balance is within these limits.

In April of this year, two weeks after the accident involving the Exxon Valdez, the Secretary exercised his authority and suspended payments to the Fund, though it was well short of the authorized ceiling. As a result, annual payments to the Fund of approximately $10-15 million are lost until such time as the fee is reinstated.

This legislation requires continued collection of the three cent per barrel charge until the $200 million level is reached. Reimposition of the charge would occur at any time the balance in the Fund drops below that level.

Subtitle D—Onondaga Lake Restoration Program

Onondaga Lake is located in central New York and borders on the city of Syracuse (population 170,000). Onondaga Lake has been called the most polluted large body of water in the nation. Other lakes, rivers or bays may have higher concentrations of individual contaminants, but in terms of overall use impairment due to pollution, Onondaga Lake has few rivals.

From 1884 to 1985 the Allied Chemical Corporation and its predecessors produced synthetic soda ash at a plant on the lakeshore, and discharged waste into the Lake. It is estimated that the lake contains 100 tons of mercury from the soda ash plant, and that as much as 30 percent of its original volume has been lost due to a thick layer deposited on the lake bottom.

Swimming in the lake is not allowed, and fish cannot be eaten due to mercury contamination. In addition, discharges of raw sewage have been common due to combined sewer overflows.

Despite this high degree of toxic pollution, Onondaga Lake has not qualified as a Superfund site because its pollution is largely underwater. The Superfund Hazard Ranking System used by EPA to assess hazardous waste sites does not take into account the specifics of underwater waste sites.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS AND LEGISLATION

The Subcommittee on Water Resources, Transportation and Infrastructure held a hearing concerning Onondaga Lake in Syracuse, New York on April 27, 1989 (S. Hrg. 101-80). Among witnesses testifying were Mr. William J. Muszynski, Acting Regional Administrator for the EPA's Region II Office, Col. Hugh F. Boyd III, Buffalo District Engineer for the Army Corps of Engineers, and Mr. Langdon Marsh, Executive Deputy Commissioner of the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation.

In the 100th Congress Senator Moynihan sponsored S. 2824, the Onondaga Lake Restoration Act of 1988. This bill was reintroduced on January 25, 1989, the first day of the 101st Congress, as S. 27, the Onondaga Lake Restoration Act of 1989. The amendment adopted by the Committee is based on this bill.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Section 4301 was added as part of an amendment offered by Senator Moynihan on July 21, 1989. This section would authorize the Environmental Protection Agency to establish and participate in a management conference for the conservation, restoration and management of Onondaga lake.

Subsection (a) directs the EPA administrator to convene the management conference, and states the two general purposes of the management conference.

First, the conference is to develop a comprehensive plan for the cleanup of the lake. This plan will include the specific actions to be taken by all members of the conference to assure the level of clean up that the plan commits to. Important tasks of the management conference will be to identify sources of funding for cleanup work, and set goals for the degree of cleanup to be accomplished. These cleanup goals should be consistent with what the management conference is willing and able to fund, including funds obtained from non-conference members such as parties responsible for lake pollution.

Second, the conference is to serve as a coordinating body for all lake cleanup. The conference should assure that work performed by conference members and others is consistent with the plan, and that these efforts are consistent with one another and are not duplicative.

Subsection (b) describes the membership of the conference. It is the intended that the membership outlined in the bill be representative of the various governmental and non-governmental interests in the lake. The seven-member management conference would be a forum to debate issues of disagreement, and to make decisions.

In general, it shall be the responsibility of the management conference to adopt its own bylaws. Such bylaws shall be adopted by majority vote, except that the representatives of the EPA and the Governor of the State of New York must concur in all votes. In addition, the representative of the Technical Advisory Committee shall serve ex officio, and shall not vote. The primary purpose of the Technical Advisory Committee is to advise the conference on technical and scientific issues relating to management of the lake.

The Citizens' Advisory Committee shall be convened by the management conference and shall consist of 15 members, as follows: 3 persons who are members of locally represented environmental organizations incorporated under sec. 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code that have been so incorporated for at least one year from the date of the convening of the Citizens' Advisory Committee; 3 persons representing the local business community; 1 person who is a resident of the Town of Geddes; 1 person who is a resident of the Town of Salina; 1 person who is a resident of the City of Syracuse; 4 persons representing the Onondaga Lake Advisory Committee; and 2 members at large. The Citizens' Advisory Committee shall choose a Chairman to represent it on the management conference. The vote of the Chairman on matters before the management conference shall reflect the majority views of the Citizens' Advisory Committee.

Subsection (c) address the approval and implementation of the plan. The plan assembled by the management conference must be approved by the EPA before federal funds can be granted for activities under subparagraph (d)(2)(B) of this section. It is not the intended that this requirement block funds from being expended for the purposes of carrying out other parts of subsection (d) or of this section in general.

EPA is charged with a special responsibility for approval of the plan because of its prominent role in funding the clean up options identified in the plan. In addition, a similar role is given to the governor of the State of New York. It is expected that the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation will take a lead role in both directing activities of the management conference, and in identifying funding for the non-federal share of costs associated with developing and implementing the plan.

The special status of these two conference members effectively creates within the management conference an ad hoc executive committee that must approve all final decisions integrated into the plan. It is intended that the plan adopted by the management conference should as much as possible reflect the views of its members. However, it also recognizes that the management conference will function most efficiently only if leadership is exercised by the New York DEC and the EPA, each of which has substantial experience with the legal and technical details involved in environmental restoration projects.

Subsection (d) authorizes the conference to make grants to both develop and carry out the plan. Grants for collection of information and other activities related to preparation of the plan shall have a federal share of 75 percent, and grants to carry out provisions of the plan shall have a federal share of 55 percent. In order to assure accountability, grants under subparagraph (d)(2)(B) involving federal funds may not be available for work that is not prescribed by the plan. Reasonable operating expenses for the functioning of the management conference are to be considered as "necessary for the development of the plan", and shall be funded subject to subparagraph (d)(2)(A), with a federal share of 75 percent.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (d) allows for the non-federal share of any expenditures authorized by this section to be made up entirely or in part by in-kind contributions of services, materials, or other items of value. It shall be the responsibility of the EPA to determine the fair market value of any in-kind contributions.

Subsection (e) authorizes expenditures to carry out the provisions of section 4301, not to exceed $5 million in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for following years. It is intended that this authorization be available for reasonable operational expenses of the management conference as prescribed in subparagraph (d)(2)(A).

The additional authorization is provided for EPA to fund lake cleanup projects that may at some future time be subject the terms of legal settlement with responsible parties. It is intended that the EPA receive reimbursement for the federal share of any activities funded subject to this authorization in any such case.

Subtitle E

MAGLEV

Section 4401, included as part of an amendment offered by Senator Moynihan, would authorize the Army Corps of Engineers to complete a comprehensive work plan for the construction of a U.S. magnetic levitation (Maglev) system on the interstate highway rights-of-way.

A maglev system consists of magnetically levitated and propelled vehicles that run along a guideway at high speeds. The system designs, to be evaluated by the Corps of Engineers, will allow for guideway alignments along the interstate highway rights-of-way.

The Corps has the engineering and project management capability to perform this work, and has developed a plan to do so. Both the Chief of Engineers, Lt. General Henry J. Hatch, and the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, Mr. Robert Page, have stated that the Corps has the necessary skills to build a U.S. maglev system.

It is intended that the Corps of Engineers consult with other interested federal agencies. The interest of the Department of Transportation in maglev is recognized, including their involvement in numerous studies on the feasibility of maglev systems in the U.S. It is intended that the Department of Transportation be closely involved with the development of maglev systems. For this reason, the Secretary of the Army is expected to coordinate and consult with the Secretary of Transportation during the development and execution of the pilot program.

COMMITTEE ACTIVITIES

On June 22, 1989, the Maglev Technical Advisory Committee, convened at the request of the Subcommittee on Water Resources, Transportation and Infrastructure, issued a report describing the general characteristics of a U.S. maglev system to be located on the interstate highway rights-of-way (Benefits of Magnetically Levitated High-Speed Transportation for the United States, Volume 1—Executive Report, Maglev Technical Advisory Committee, June 1989.)

During the 100th Congress, the Subcommittee held three hearings on maglev, on January 21, 1988 (S. Hrg. 100-244, Part 3), February 26, 1988 (S. Hrg. 100-556), and September 28, 1988 (S. Hrg. 100-556, Part 2). During these hearings, the Committee received testimony from 15 witnesses.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Section 4401 was added as part of an amendment offered by Senator Moynihan on July 21, 1989.

Subsection (a) gives authority to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to formulate a detailed implementation plan for a U.S. maglev/interstate highway rights-of-way pilot program. The Corps should consider construction and engineering issues regarding maglev, and options for cooperation with U.S. industry.

Subsection (b) directs the Corps of Engineers to formulate the implementation plan authorized by subsection (a), and directs that the Corps finish this implementation plan and report to the Congress and the President by May 30, 1990.

SUMMARY OF COMMITTEE ACTIONS ON RECONCILIATION RECOMMENDATIONS

The Committee on Environment and Public Works met July 20 and 21, 1989 to consider legislation to comply with Senate Budget Committee reconciliation instructions pursuant to H. Con. Res. 106, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1990. During the course of consideration, five amendments were adopted as follows:

An amendment offered by Senator Reid as modified by a second degree amendment offered by Senator Chafee, with respect to placing all CFC fees in the Ozone Layer and

Climate Protection Trust Fund and authorized use of the accrued interest for EPA abatement, control and research and development activities—adopted by a vote of 14-1;

An amendment offered by Senator Lautenberg as modified to extend the deadline to 1992 for prohibiting release of regulated substances into the environment in the course of repairing or maintaining air conditioning units or household appliances—adopted by voice vote;

An amendment offered by Senator Moynihan with respect to Onondaga Lake restoration and magnetic levitation technology—adopted by voice vote;

An amendment offered by Senator Breaux with respect to NRC penalties—adopted by voice vote.

The Committee voted 13-0 in favor of recommending the reconciliation recommendations to the Senate Budget Committee on July 21, 1989.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR DAVE DURENBERGER

I want to begin by saying that I wholeheartedly support the general principles embodied in the legislation which has been reported by the Committee. This title of the reconciliation bill includes a virtual ban on the production of CFCs by the year 2000. It establishes an environmentally sound regulatory scheme for the introduction of alternatives. And it recaptures the windfall revenues created by the phaseout. I want to commend Senator Chafee and Senator Baucus for developing this important piece of legislation.

But there are three problems I have with the proposal which should be addressed before the bill is finally enacted. First, it contains no prohibition on the production of methyl chloroform. This chemical—also called 1,1,1-trichloroethane or TCA—is a solvent with impacts on the ozone layer which is currently produced in large quantities and which is the substitute of choice for many CFC applications.

Recently EPA issued the Toxics Release Inventory of 350 chemicals for which manufacturers are required to report emissions. Methyl chloroform is one of the chemicals on that list. The EPA data showed air releases for methyl chloroform of 150 million pounds a year and total releases of 180 million pounds.

This data is only for the largest manufacturers and, thus, includes only a fraction of all release. Methyl chloroform production is approximately 700 million pounds per year and there is every reason to believe that most of that eventually reaches the atmosphere. By way of comparison production of the five CFCs regulated under this bill totals 670 million pounds per year.

The reason that methyl chloroform is not listed for a complete phaseout in this bill is that it has a low ozone depletion potential compared to CFCs. One molecule of methyl chloroform does only 15 percent of the damage caused by one molecule of CFC-11 or -12.

Nevertheless, 700 million pounds of methyl chloroform is a lot of production. With a .15 depletion factor it does damage equivalent to 105 million pounds of CFCs. I don't think an amendment to leave 105 million pounds of CFC-12 out there would pass the Congress. The phaseout of other CFCs may also cause the use of methyl chloroform to increase dramatically. I don't think we should overlook methyl chloroform. It ought to be on the basic list for early phaseout along with the other highly destructive CFCs.

My second problem with the bill is with the provision banning the packaging of CFC-12 in small cans for use by do-it-yourselfers to refill auto air conditioners. A few companies package the freon, auto air conditioner fluid, in these small cans and sell them in auto parts stores and service stations, so that consumers can refill their own car cooling systems. This might seem a profligate use of an ozone depleting chemical. But the prohibition contained in this bill has only symbolic effect.

If we ban the can, folks with leaky air conditioners will be required to go to their dealers or repair shops to get refills. The replacement CFC will come out of a 40-pound cylinder rather than a 14-ounce can. But once out, it will get to the stratosphere just as fast and do just as much damage. We have a limit on overall CFC production in this bill. If one assumes that all of the CFCs produced will reach the ozone layer, it doesn't really matter whether they are released from new cars or old cars . . . from boards or computer equipment . . . from big cylinders or small cans.

Banning the packaging of CFCs in small containers is gratuitous regulation. If the ban comes in 1991, well before a substitute for CFC-12 is available, the only effect is to put a few companies out of business. There is very little environmental benefit.

It may be that banning CFCs in new automobiles after 1994 will create the kind of intensive research effort which will bring substitutes on earlier. It may allow us to accelerate the schedule for phasing out CFC-12 to a date earlier than 2000. But banning the can won't have that effect. These packagers don't have the resources to run substitute development programs.

My final problem with this proposal is the trust fund which spends the money. The bill contains a $100 million grant program to pay for research and development on CFC alternatives. This is completely unnecessary in my view.

Testimony before the Environment and Public Works Committee indicates that the private sector is already spending millions on substitute development. The entrepreneur who finds it will make millions selling it. We don't need to throw government money after a problem that is already being pursued aggressively by the largest chemical companies in the world.

The Committee has ordered that the remainder of the revenues from the fee be held in a trust fund and that interest earned on these funds be appropriated for programs at the environmental Protection Agency. This proposal, in my view, is directly contrary to the purpose of reconciliation and in violation of Senate rules. The Committee has used the reconciliation process as an opportunity to create a new spending program which is not relevant in any way to the fee program established to meet its reconciliation targets. If the American public wonders why the Congress has failed to balance the budget after so many years of trying, there is no better example of our lack of discipline than the trust fund created by this bill.

MEMORANDUM

To: John Hilley, Agnes Bundy, John Callahan, Julie Lenz, Joan McAndrew, Sue Nelson, Dave Williams.
From: Bill Dauster.
Date: September 12, 1989.
Subject: Addition to Environment and Public Works Reconciliation.

Attached is a cost estimate recently submitted by CBO to be included in the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee reconciliation package.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1989.

Hon. QUENTIN N. BURDICK,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the reconciliation recommendations of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works—to be included as Title 4 of the reconciliation bill.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE, SEPTEMBER 8, 1989

1. Bill number: Not yet available.

2. Bill title: Reconciliation Recommendations of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works—to be included as Title 4 of the reconciliation bill.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, July 21, 1989.

4. Bill purpose: Subtitle A would create a regulatory framework to abate and control the release of ozone-depleting chemicals into the environment. Subject to specific minimum requirements, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) would be directed to regulate U.S. production, importation, use and handling of such substances. Part B of this subtitle would require the EPA to prepare and submit a number of reports analyzing methane emissions in the United States and internationally. The agency would be required to develop specific emissions inventories and identify potential control measures. Part C would require the agency to impose fees on the production, importation and distribution of eight specified ozone-depleting substances. Fee collections would be deposited as offsetting receipts in a newly created Ozone Layer and Climate Protection Trust Fund, from which they would be available (subject to appropriation) for EPA expenses. For each fiscal year, up to $100 million could be appropriated for a grant program authorized under Section 4032 for research and testing related to the objectives of this subtitle.

Subtitle B would allow an increase in Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) fees and annual charges in 1990 to cover 45 percent of the agency's budget; under current law the NRC is permitted to collect fees and annual charges totaling no more than 33 percent of its budget.

Subtitle C would amend the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 to require the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain a balance of no more or less than $200 million in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund. Until that balance is reached, the Secretary would be required to levy a $0.03 per barrel fee on oil obtained from Outer Continental Shelf facilities. (Current law allows the Secretary authority to levy a fee between zero and $0.03 per barrel. A fee of $0.03 per barrel was in effect until April 1, 1989, when it was suspended because the fund balance was within the statutory requirement.)

Subtitle D would direct the EPA to convene a management conference in order to develop and implement a restoration plan for the Onondaga Lake in New York. The conference, subject to approval by EPA, would be authorized to make grants for research and for plan implementation. Funding of $5 million would be authorized for appropriation to the agency in fiscal year 1990. For subsequent years, the bill would authorize the appropriation of whatever sums are necessary.

Subtitle E would authorize the appropriation of $6 million to the Secretary of the Army for a pilot program to construct a high-speed magnetic levitation ground transportation system. The bill would require completion of the program by May 30, 1990.

[1] Positive revenue figures represent an increase in Federal revenues and a decrease in the deficit.

The budget impact of this bill falls within functions 270, 300, and 400.

Basis of Estimate:

For purposes of this estimate, CBO has assumed that the reconciliation bill will be enacted on or about October 1, 1989.

Subtitle A: Offsetting receipts from fees on certain ozone-depleting substances have been estimated on the assumption that, by December 1, 1989, the EPA will promulgate final regulations to impose a $0.60 per pound fee on importation and consumption of the substances specified in Section 4029(a)(1). Fee collections have been estimated on the basis of the phase-in production limits set in Section 4007 and the assessment schedule contained in Section 4029. Under the provisions of Section 4029(c), the EPA would be authorized to accelerate the assessment schedule and expand the list of substances subject to fee. If such revisions are made, receipts would be higher. Conversely, fee collections would fall if the agency exercises the authority provided under Section 4007 to impose more restrictive production limits.

Receipt estimates have been adjusted slightly to reflect refunds for chemicals exported to developing countries that are parties to the Montreal Protocol. Currently, such exports account for less than five percent of all U.S. exports. However, refunds may become more significant in the future as more developing countries adopt the Protocol.

This estimate does not include any receipts that might be collected beginning in fiscal year 1991 from the alternative fee specified under Section 4029(b)(2). How EPA would interpret this provision and implement an alternative fee is very uncertain. How market participants would respond to the fee in their sales and pricing decisions is also unclear. (For example, firms may be discouraged from charging market-clearing prices if the resulting profits must be paid to the government.) Moreover, uncertainties regarding interpretation of this section's requirements are likely to hinder implementation and collection efforts, possibly delaying receipts from the alternative fee for several years. As a result, CBO cannot estimate the amount of receipts if any, that would result from the alternative fee.

The authorization level shown in the table includes $100 million a year authorized for grants under Section 4032. In addition, CBO estimates that the EPA would spend about $20 million annually to carry out the activities mandated by this subtitle, including the promulgation of necessary regulations, fee collection, and administration of the grant program. Of this amount, about one-half would be used to hire and equip additional personnel.

Subtitle B: This title would authorize the NRC to collect 45 percent of its 1990 budget through fees and annual charges. Relative to the budget resolution baseline, this proposal would save $54 million in 1990. NRC fees would remain unchanged, relative to current law, for the 1991 to 1994 period.

Subtitle B would also amend the Atomic Energy Act to authorize the NRC to reduce penalties proposed under subsection 234(b) by the amount a penalized party would agree to pay to a nonprofit educational institution for use in the furtherance of the protection of the radiological health and safety of the public. This amendment to the Atomic Energy Act could result in the loss of revenues to the Treasury; however, CBO cannot estimate the amount. In 1988, the NRC collected about 45 million in fines under subsection 234(b).

Subtitle C: By the end of fiscal year 1989, the Offshore Oil Compensation Fund balance is expected to be about $184 million. Under the amendments made by this bill, imposition of a $0.03 per barrel fee would begin upon enactment and would cease when the fund balance reaches $200 million. CBO estimates that collections would be about $11 million in fiscal year 1990 and about $12 million in 1991. At that time (assuming continuation of existing investment policies and in the absence of any major spills), the fund balance would reach the new statutory maximum and no further amounts would be collected. After offsets for resulting decreases in income and payroll taxes, the net additional revenues to the government would be about $9 million in each of these two fiscal years.

Subtitle D: This estimate is based on the assumption that the full amounts shown in the table would be appropriated for each fiscal year. The 1990 authorization level—$5 million—is that stated in the bill. This amount would be spent by the EPA over fiscal years 1990-1992 to conduct the management conference, support any necessary research, and carry out plan development and preliminary restoration work. The 1992 authorization level of $400 million has been estimated on the basis of information provided by the State of New York and the EPA. This amount represents 55 percent of the estimated cost to implement the restoration plan, the maximum federal share permitted by the bill. Total restoration costs cannot be estimated precisely at this time but are expected to be between $500 million and $1 billion; for purposes of this estimate, CBO has used the midpoint of about $750 million.

Subtitle E: For purposes of this estimate, it is assumed that the $6 million authorized for the magnetic levitation project would be appropriated for fiscal year 1990. It is further assumed that the U.S. Army would be able to complete the project within the time frame set in the bill, resulting in additional 1990 outlays of $6 million.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: None.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: None.

9. Estimate prepared by: Deborah Reis and Kim Cawley (226-2860); Caroline Ratcliffe (226-2720).

Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
Washington, DC, October 6, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reconciliation instructions contained in section 5(b)(5) of H. Con. Res. 106 of the 101st Congress, the Committee on Finance has approved legislative recommendations which increase revenues and reduce outlays by the amounts specified in that section. I am transmitting herewith legislative language to implement those recommendations to be included in the budget reconciliation bill for fiscal year 1990 to be reported by the Committee on the Budget. This submission by the Committee on Finance incorporates the revenue effects of Public Law 101-73, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 as amended by the attached legislative language. I am also transmitting explanatory materials related to those recommendations. These should be incorporated in the committee report or such other compilation of legislative history as may be used by the Budget Committee in connection with this bill.

Sincerely,

LLOYD BENTSEN.

EXPLANATION OF TITLE VI

(REVENUE RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989)

SUBTITLE A. EXTENSIONS OF CERTAIN EXPIRING TAX PROVISIONS

1. EXCLUSION FOR EMPLOYER-PROVIDED EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE (SEC. 6101 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 127 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, an employee is required to include in income, for income and employment tax purposes, the value of educational assistance provided by an employer to the employee, unless the cost of such assistance qualifies as a deductible job-related expense of the employee. Amounts expended for education qualify as deductible job-related expenses if the education (1) maintains or improves skills required for the employee's current job, or (2) meets the express requirements of the individual's employer that are imposed as a condition of continuing employment in the same job.

Under prior law, an employee's gross income for income and employment tax purposes also did not include amounts paid or incurred by the employer for educational assistance provided to the employee if such amounts were paid or incurred pursuant to an educational assistance program that met certain requirements (sec. 127). The exclusion was limited to $5,250 of educational assistance with respect to an individual during a calendar year and did not apply to any payment for, or the provision of any benefits with respect to, any graduate-level courses.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 required that employers file information returns with respect to educational assistance plans under section 127 (sec. 6039D). The purpose of this requirement was to collect data with respect to the use of such plans so as to provide Congress with a means to evaluate the effectiveness of the exclusion.

The educational assistance exclusion expired for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

Reasons for change

The exclusion for educational assistance was originally enacted for a temporary period in order to provide Congress with an opportunity to evaluate the use and effectiveness of the exclusion. The committee is concerned that there is insufficient data to determine whether or not section 127 has achieved its objectives. The provision is therefore extended in order to allow additional time for this determination.

Explanation of provision

The exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance is retroactively reinstated and extended so that it expires for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991. The provision clarifies that, to the extent employer-provided educational assistance is not excludable under section 127 because it exceeds the maximum dollar limitation or because of the limitation on graduate-level courses, it may be excludable from income as a working condition fringe benefit (sec. 132(d)), provided the requirements of that section are otherwise satisfied (e.g., the education is job-related as defined under section 162). Educational assistance may not be excluded under any other provision of section 1321.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

2. EXCLUSION FOR EMPLOYER-PROVIDED GROUP LEGAL SERVICES (SEC. 6102 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 120 AND 501(C)(20) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, amounts contributed by an employer to a group legal services plan on behalf of an employee generally are includible in the employee's gross income.

Under prior law, amounts contributed by an employer to a qualified group legal services plan for an employee (or the employee's spouse or dependents) were excluded from the employee's gross income for income and employment tax purposes (sec. 120). The exclusion also applied to any services received by an employee or any amounts paid to an employee under such a plan as reimbursement for the cost of legal services for the employee (or the employee's spouse or dependents). The maximum amount that could be excluded from gross income was $70 per year. The exclusion for group legal services benefits expired for taxable years ending after December 31, 1988.

In addition, under prior law, an organization, the exclusive function of which was to provide legal services or indemnification against costs of legal services as part of a qualified group legal services plan, was entitled to tax-exempt status (sec. 501(c)(20)). The tax exemption for such an organization expired for years ending after December 31, 1988.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 required that employers file information returns with respect to qualified group legal services plans (sec. 6039D). The purpose of this requirement was to collect data with respect to the use of such plans so as to provide Congress with a means to evaluate the effectiveness of the exclusion.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend, on a temporary basis, the exclusion for employer-provided group legal services and the tax exemption for group legal services organizations.

Explanation of provision

The exclusion for employer-provided group legal services and the tax exemption for group legal services organizations is retroactively reinstated and extended so that it expires for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

Effective date

The provision is effective for group legal services provided in taxable years ending after December 31, 1988, or taxable years of group legal services organizations ending after December 31, 1988.

3. TARGETED JOBS TAX CREDIT (SEC. 6103 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 51 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Tax Credit Provisions

The targeted jobs tax credit is available on an elective basis for hiring individuals from nine targeted groups. The targeted groups are: (1) vocational rehabilitation referrals; (2) economically disadvantaged youths aged 18 through 22; (3) economically disadvantaged Vietnam-era veterans; (4) Supplemental Security Income (SSI) recipients; (5) general assistance recipients; (6) economically disadvantaged cooperative education students aged 16 through 19; (7) economically disadvantaged former convicts; (8) Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients and Work Incentive (WIN) registrants; and (9) economically disadvantaged summer youth employees aged 16 or 17. Certification of targeted group membership is required as a condition of claiming the credit.

The credit generally is equal to 40 percent of the first $6,000 of qualified first-year wages paid to a member of a targeted group. Thus, the maximum credit generally is $2,400 per individual. With respect to economically disadvantaged summer youth employees, however, the credit is equal to 40 percent of up to $3,000 of wages, for a maximum credit of $1,200. The employer's deduction for wages must be reduced by the amount of the credit claimed.

The credit is not available for wages paid to a targeted-group member unless the individual either (1) is employed by the employer for at least 90 days (14 days in the case of economically disadvantaged summer youth employees), or (2) has completed at least 120 hours of work performed for the employer (20 hours in the case of economically disadvantaged summer youth employees).

The credit is available with respect to targeted-group individuals who begin work for the employer before January 1, 1990.

Authorization of Appropriations

Present law also authorizes appropriations for administrative and publicity expenses relating to the targeted jobs tax credit through September 30, 1989. These monies are to be used by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and Department of Labor to inform employers of the credit program.

Reasons for change

The committee understands that the targeted jobs tax credit provides a useful incentive for hiring disadvantaged individuals, but an opportunity for further assessment by the Congress and the Treasury Department is appropriate given changes in the labor market and the use of the targeted jobs credit that may occur over time. In addition, the committee believes that certain minor changes will improve the administration and efficiency of the program.

Explanation of provisions

Extension of the Credit

The targeted jobs tax credit is extended for two additional years, with one modification.

The modification requires that employers specifically identify the categories (but not to exceed two) for which an individual is believed to be eligible when requesting certification of individual eligibility for individuals who have not received a preliminary determination of eligibility from the designated local agency. In addition, the employer must include a statement on the certification request that a good faith effort was made to determine that the individual may be eligible for the credit.

Authorization of Appropriations

The authorization of appropriations for administration and publicity expenses is extended for two years. To the extent feasible, the IRS and the Department of Labor should inform employers (e.g., through press releases or announcements) of the extension of the credit.

Effective date

The provision applies to targeted-group individuals who begin work for the employer after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 1992. Under the provision, the credit does not apply with respect to individuals who begin work for the employer after December 31, 1991.

The authorization of appropriations is effective for fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

4. ALLOCATION AND APPORTIONMENT OF RESEARCH AND EXPERIMENTAL EXPENDITURES (SEC. 6104 OF THE BILL AND 864(f) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Foreign Tax Credit and Source Rules

Under the Code, each item of income is assigned either a U.S. source or a foreign source. The foreign tax credit for foreign taxes paid on foreign source income is limited to the amount of U.S. tax otherwise payable on foreign source income. The foreign tax credit is not available against U.S. tax on U.S. source income. (This is known as the foreign tax credit limitation.) A shift in the source of income from foreign to U.S. may increase net U.S. tax for some taxpayers by reducing the foreign tax credit limitation.

In determining foreign source taxable income for purposes of computing the foreign tax credit limitation, and for other tax purposes, taxpayers are required to apportion expenses between foreign source income and U.S. source income (Code secs. 861–864). A shift in the apportionment of expenses from U.S. source to foreign source gross income decreases foreign source taxable income. This decrease may increase U.S. tax by reducing the foreign tax credit limitation.

Research and Experimental Expense Allocation Regulation

Treasury Regulation section 1.861–8 (promulgated in 1977) sets forth detailed rules for allocating and apportioning several categories of expenses, including deductible research and experimental expenditures ("research expenses"). The regulation provides that research expenses are ordinarily considered definitely related to all gross income reasonably connected with one or more of 32 product categories based on two-digit classifications of the Standard Industrial Classification ("SIC") system. Research expenses are not traced solely to the income generated by the particular product which benefited from the research activity. Instead, these expenses are associated with all the income within the SIC product group in which the product is classified.

The Treasury regulation contemplates that taxpayers will sometimes undertake research solely to meet legal requirements imposed by a particular governmental entity with respect to improvement or marketing of specific products or processes. In some cases, such research cannot reasonably be expected to generate income (beyond de minimis amounts) outside that governmental entity's jurisdiction. If so, the deductions allowable for such associated research expense are allocated solely to gross income from the geographic source that includes that jurisdiction.

After research expenses incurred to meet legal requirements are allocated under the above rule, any remaining research expenses are generally apportioned to foreign source income based on the ratio of total foreign source sales receipts in the SIC product group with which the expenses are identified to the total such worldwide sales receipts in that product group (the "sales" or "gross receipts" method). In computing this fraction, sales by a party controlled or uncontrolled by the taxpayer may be taken into account if the party can reasonably be expected to benefit from the research expense. However, the regulation provides that a taxpayer using the sales method may first apportion at least 30 percent of research expense remaining after allocation to meet legal requirements exclusively to income from the geographic source where over half of the taxpayer's research and development is performed.

Thus, for example, a taxpayer that performs 50 percent or more of its research and development in the United States may automatically apportion at least 30 percent of its remaining research expense to U.S. source income. A taxpayer can choose to apportion to the geographic source where research and development is performed a percentage of research expense significantly greater than 30 percent if the taxpayer establishes that the higher percentage is warranted because the research and development is reasonably expected to have a very limited or long-delayed application outside that geographic source.

Alternatively, subject to certain limitations, a taxpayer may elect to apportion its research expense remaining after any allocation to meet legal requirements under one of two optional gross income methods. Under these optional methods, a taxpayer generally apportions its research expense on the basis of relative amounts of gross income from U.S. and foreign sources. If a taxpayer makes an automatic place-of-performance apportionment, the taxpayer may not use either optional gross income method.

The basic limitation on the use of optional gross income methods is that the respective portions of a taxpayer's research expense apportioned to U.S. and foreign source income using these methods can not be less than 50 percent of the respective portions that would be apportioned to each income grouping using a combination of the sales and place-of-performance apportionment methods.

If this 50-percent limitation is satisfied with respect to both income groupings, the taxpayer may apportion the amount of its research expense that remains after allocation under the legal requirements test ratably on the basis of foreign and U.S. gross income. If the 50-percent limitation is not satisfied with respect to one of the income groupings, then the taxpayer must apportion to that income grouping 50 percent of the amount of its research expense which would have been apportioned to that income grouping under the sales and place-of-performance methods. A taxpayer electing an optional gross income method may be able then to reduce the amount of its research expense apportioned to foreign source income to as little as one-half of the amount that would be apportioned to foreign source income under the sales method.

For example, consider a taxpayer with $110 of U.S.-performed research expense and equal U.S. and foreign sales. Assume that $10 of the research expense is to meet U.S. legal requirements and is allocated to U.S. source income. Of the remaining $100, 30 percent ($30) is exclusively apportioned to U.S. source income under the automatic place-of-performance rule and the remaining $70 is divided evenly betwen U.S. and foreign source income, using the sales method. Thus, under this method $35 would be allocated to foreign source income and $75 would be allocated to U.S. source income. Under the optional gross income methods, the $35 of research expense allocated to foreign sources can be reduced as much as 50 percent, to $17.50. This can occur, for example, if the foreign sales were made by a foreign subsidiary that did not repatriate earnings to the U.S. corporation, and thus a disproportionately high fraction of the U.S. corporation's income is from U.S. sources.

The optional gross income methods apply to all of a taxpayer's gross income, not gross income on a product category basis.

Temporary Moratorium and Treasury Study

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (ERTA) provided that, for a taxpayer's first two taxable years beginning within two years after the date of its enactment (August 13, 1981), all research and experimental expenditures (within the meaning of sec. 174) paid or incurred in those years for research activities conducted in the United States were to be allocated or apportioned to income from sources within the United States (sec. 223 of ERTA).

This two-year moratorium was effectively extended for two additional years by the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (the "1984 Act"). Under section 126 of the 1984 Act, for taxable years beginning generally after August 13, 1983, and on or before August 1, 1985, all of a taxpayer's research and experimental expenditures (within the meaning of sec. 174) attributable to research activities conducted in the United States were to be allocated to sources within the United States for purposes of computing taxable income from U.S. source and taxable income from sources outside the United States.

One reason Congress cited for enacting the original two-year moratorium was that some foreign countries do not allow deductions under their tax laws for expenses of research activities conducted in the United States. Taxpayers argued that this disallowance caused U.S.-based research to be disadvantaged. First, U.S.-based research expense is deemed to be allocated to a foreign country which may not recognize that such amount is deductible as an expense. The allocation of this U.S.-based research expense to foreign sources had the effect of reducing the foreign tax credit of U.S. taxpayers. Because those taxpayers could take their deductions if the research occurred in the foreign country, taxpayers argued that there was an incentive to shift their research expenditures to those foreign countries whose laws disallow tax deductions for research activities conducted in the United States but allow tax deductions for research expenditures incurred locally.

Accordingly, Congress concluded that the Treasury Department should study the impact of the allocation of research expenses under the 1977 regulation on U.S.-based research activities and on the availability of the foreign tax credit. Pending the outcome of the study, Congress concluded that expenses should be charged to the cost of generating U.S. source income, regardless of whether such research was a direct or indirect cost of producing foreign source income.

On the ground that a reduction in research and development might adversely affect the competitive position of the United States, the 1983 Treasury report recommended the two-year extension of the moratorium that was ultimately enacted by Congress in 1984. The extension was intended to allow Congress to consider further the results of the Treasury study.

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (the "1985 Act") extended the moratorium on the application of the research and experimental expense allocation rules of the 1977 regulation generally for one additional taxable year beginning after August 1, 1985, and on or before August 1, 1986.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act") permitted the moratorium on application of the research expense allocation rules in regulation section 1.861–8 to expire. However, for taxable years beginning after August 1, 1986, and on or before August 1, 1987, application of the regulation was liberalized by the 1986 Act in three respects, which were intended by Congress to provide an additional tax incentive to conduct research in the United States while Congress analyzed whether any additional permanent incentive was necessary.

The first liberalization under the 1986 Act was that for the specified one-year period, 50 percent of all remaining amounts allowable as a deduction for qualified research and experimental expenditures (that is, research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 that are attributable to activities conducted in the United States) after allocation of legally required research expenses could be apportioned to U.S. source income and deducted from such income in determining the amount of taxable U.S. source income. The 1986 Act thus had the effect of increasing the automatic place-of-performance apportionment percentage for U.S.-based research expense from 30 percent to 50 percent.

The 1986 Act further provided that, for the specified one-year period, the portion of those amounts allowable as a deduction for qualified research and experimental expenditures that remained after any legal requirements allocation and the 50 percent automatic a place-of-performance apportionment were apportioned either on the basis of sales or gross income. Thus, the 1986 Act's second effective liberalization of the regulation was to allow the automatic place-of-performance apportionment temporarily to taxpayers who elected to apportion expenses using the optional gross income method, rather than only to taxayers that used the standard sales method of apportionment. Third, the 1986 Act had the effect of temporarily suspending the regulatory rule that prohibits taxpayers from using the optional gross income method to reduce allocation of research expense to foreign source income by more than 50 percent of the amount that would be allocated to foreign source income under the sales method.

The temporary modifications made by the 1986 Act to the research expense allocation rules in regulation section 1.861-8 applied for purposes of computing taxable income from U.S. sources and taxable income from sources outside the United States. The modifications applied only to the allocation of expenditures for research and experimental activities conducted in the United States, and only for the purposes of geographic sourcing of income; the modifications did not apply for other purposes, such as the computation of combined taxable income of a FSC (or DISC) and its related supplier. Also, the modifications did not apply to any expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of land, or for the acquisition or improvement of depreciable or depletable property to be used in connection with research or experimentation.

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (the "1988 Act") further modifed, again on a temporary basis, the rules for sourcing research expenditures. These modifications were effective only for the first four months of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1987 (treating all applicable expenditures in that taxable year as if they were incurred rateably over the year). Under the 1988 Act, the treatment of research and development expenditures incurred to meet certain legal requirements was unchanged. After applying the legal requirements rule, however, the 1988 Act modifications provided that 64 percent of the U.S.-based research expenses remaining to be allocated and apportioned were allocated to U.S. source income and 64 percent of the remaining foreign-based research expenses were allocated to foreign source income. The remaining research expenditures treated as having been incurred during this four-month period were allocated and apportioned either on the basis of sales or gross income. However, if the gross income method of apportionment was utilized, the amount apportioned to foreign source income could be no less than 30 percent of the amount that would have been apportioned to foreign source income had the sales method been used.

Generally, for the remainder of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1987 (and for subequent taxable years), the rules set forth in regulation section 1.861-8 were (and are) applicable with respect to sourcing research and experimental expenditures.

Reasons for change

In the 8 years since the first temporary moratorium on the 1977 regulation was enacted, Congress, the Treasury Department, and representatives of affected industries have intensely scrutinized the effects of the research and experimental allocation rules on research activities.[1] That scrutiny has not resulted in an unambiguous recommendation regarding the appropriateness of allocating U.S.-based research expenses to U.S. source income under either the 1977 regulation, the complete moratorium, or the partial moratoria of the 1986 and 1988 Acts. On the one hand, there are those who argue that the moratorium and the partial moratoria had a beneficial effect on U.S. research activity and on U.S. competitiveness in world-wide markets. On the other hand, there are those whose studies prompt them to conclude otherwise. Furthermore, the tax costs of both the total and the partial moratoria have been significant, and the tax benefits they have bestowed are distributed somewhat arbitrarily among taxpayers. At the same time, these taxpayers have faced a prolonged period of uncertainty as to the research and experimental allocation rules that will apply in the coming years, making it more difficult for them to predict the after-tax costs of the research in which they generally must engage, if at all, over extended future periods.

In April 1987 the Treasury Department, noting that "we all have a stake in ending [the controversy] as soon as possible," [2] expressed its view that an appropriate way to balance the concerns of promoting U.S. research and development, on the one hand, and appropriately dividing income tax receipts between the United States and foreign taxing jurisdictions, on the other, would be to make the 1986 Act liberalizations permanent, while further increasing the automatic place-of-performance apportionment percentage from 50 percent to 67 percent. In 1988, a somewhat modified temporary proposal was adopted by the committee, and was subsequently adopted by Congress.

The committee continues to believe that the substantive modifications adopted in the 1988 Act are consistent with tax and competitiveness policy, while reducing somewhat the cost of the permanent solution to these issues. The committee is concerned, for example, that the unlimited use of the gross income method of apportionment together with an automatic apportionment percentage of 67 percent would unfairly favor companies that delay or otherwise manipulate the repatriation of earnings of controlled foreign subsidiaries. The committee also wishes to avoid any possible inference, arguably arising under the language of the committee's 1987 bill, that while 64 percent of expenses for U.S. conducted research may be allocated to U.S. source income in order to encourage U.S. research, the regulation might also be used to automatically allocate in some cases 30 percent of the expenses of conducting research abroad to U.S. source income. Thus, the committee believes that if research is conducted abroad, most of those expenses should be allocated and apportioned against foreign source income.

In light of the 1986 Act provisions regarding the sourcing of income from space, the high seas, and Antarctica, the committee believes that it is appropriate to clarify on a permanent basis whether expenses for research conducted in such places is allocated and apportioned according to the rules for allocating expenses of U.S. conducted research or foreign conducted research.

Explanation of provision

General Allocation Rule

The bill establishes a new Code provision, section 864(f), which supersedes the Treasury's research and experimentation expense allocation regulation for purposes of determining the source of taxable income, and extends for these purposes the statutory rules for allocation of such expenses contained in the 1988 Act. These rules do not apply, for example, in the allocation and apportionment of deductions for research and experimental expenditures for purposes of computing the taxable income of a foreign taxpayer effectively connected with its conduct of a trade or business in the United States.

The bill allocates research and experimental expenditures as defined by section 174 of the Code ("qualified research and experimental expenditures" as that phrase is used in the bill) entirely to one geographic source if they were incurred to meet legal requirements imposed with respect to improvement or marketing of specific products or processes and cannot reasonably be expected to generate income (beyond de minimis amounts) outside that geographic source (see Treas. Reg. sec. 1.861-8(e)(3)(i)(B)).

With respect to qualified research and experimental expenditures not specifically allocated under the rules described in the preceding paragraph, the bill provides that a taxpayer shall allocate 64 percent of such expenses for research conducted in the United States to U.S. source income, and 64 percent of expenses for foreign-based research and experimentation to foreign source income. Under the bill, a taxpayer may allocate and apportion the remainder of research and experimental expenses on the basis of either sales or gross income. However, if the income based method of apportionment is chosen, the amount apportioned to foreign source income can be no less than 30 percent of the amount that would be apportioned to foreign source income had the sales method been used.

For example, assume that an unaffiliated U.S. taxpayer has $100 of US. research expenses and $100 of foreign research expenses, that 50 percent of relevant gross sales produce foreign source income, and that 10 percent of the taxpayer's gross income is from foreign sources. Under the bill, assuming there is no legal requirements allocation, $125.20 of the qualified research and experimental expenditures may be allocated and apportioned to U.S. source income. The bill allocates $64 to U.S. source income using the automatic place-of-performance allocation for U.S. research expenses, and $64 to foreign source income using the automatic place-of-performance allocation for foreign research expenses. Of the remaining $72 of qualified research and experimental expenditures, $61.20 may be apportioned to U.S. source income. A straight gross income apportionment of the $72 remainder would have resulted in apportioning $64.80 to U.S. source income, and $7.20 to foreign source income, while a gross sales apportionment would have resulted in apportioning $36 to U.S. source income and $36 to foreign source income. The gross sales limit provides that a minimum of 30 percent of $36, or $10.80, must be apportioned to foreign source income. Therefore, of the $72 of expenses remaining for apportionment after the automatic place-of-performance allocations, no more than $61.20 may be apportioned to U.S. source income.

The bill expressly does not apply to any expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of land, or for the acquisition or improvement of depreciable or depletable property to be used in connection with research or experimentation. Additionally, any qualified research and experimental expenditures treated as deferred under section 174(b) shall be taken into account for purposes of applying these source allocation rules in the taxable year such expenditures are allowed as a deduction.

Affiliated Group and Possessions Corporations

As is already true for research expenses that would, but for the bill, be covered by the general expense allocation rules introduced in the 1986 Act (sec. 864(e)), the bill provides generally that allocation and apportionment of research expenses, like other expenses, is to be determined as if all members of the affiliated group (plus any section 936 companies (possession corporations) that would be eligible to consolidate absent statutory prohibition) were a single corporation. However, in the case of a section 936 company that has elected either the cost sharing or profit split method of computing its intangible property income (sec. 936(h)(5)(C)), its sales and gross income from products produced in whole or in part in a possession, and dividends paid by such company attributable to sales of such products, will not be taken into account under the bill to the extent that the company is allowed a credit under section 936 with respect to gross income on those products that is intangible property income.

Where an affiliated group with qualified research and experimental expenditures has a possession corporation that has elected either the cost sharing or profit split method for computing its intangible property income, its cost sharing amount will be an adjustment to the group's qualified research and experimental expenditures subject to allocation and apportionment under the bill. (This rule applies to the profit split method as well as the cost sharing method with respect to section 936 companies because the amount allocated and apportioned to combined income in the case of such a company electing the profit split method is computed taking into account the cost sharing amount.) Thus, for example, if a group has a possession corporation using cost sharing with respect to its only product and all of the group's research expenses are qualified research and experimental expenditures, then the cost sharing amount under section 936 that is attributable to those qualified research and experimental expenditures will reduce the research expenses allocated between the group's U.S. and foreign source income based on the gross income or gross sales of the group. Similarly, where an affiliated group with qualified research and experimental expenditures has a section 936 company that has elected the profit split method, the qualified research and experimental expenditures taken into account in computing combined taxable income will be an adjustment to the group's qualified research and experimental expenditures subject to allocation and apportionment under the bill.

The bill provides the Treasury with the authority to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the one taxpayer rule and its exceptions regarding section 936 companies. In addition to providing the safeguard addressed in the regulations under the general one taxpayer rule of section 864(e), these regulations are to provide for the source of gross income and the allocation and apportionment of deductions to take into account the adjustment to group-allocable qualified research and experimental expenditures for research expenses treated as cost sharing amounts under section 936. In addition, these regulations may provide for an adjustment to group-allocable research expenditures to take into account certain bona fide cost sharing payments by foreign affiliates, where necessary and appropriate in light of the purposes of the one taxpayer rule. The committee anticipates that in taking into account cost sharing amounts, the regulations will prevent any disproportionate reduction in the amount of research expenses allocated and apportioned to foreign source income.

Allocation for Space, Ocean, and Antarctica Research Expenses

The bill clarifies the rules for research conducted in space, on or beneath the ocean, or in Antarctica. Research expenses incurred by U.S. persons for activities conducted in space, in Antarctica, or on or under water not within the jurisdiction (as recognized by the United States) of a foreign country, U.S. possession, or the United States, are allocated and apportioned in the same manner as if they were attributable to activities conducted in the United States. Similarly, research expenses for such activities incurred by non-U.S. persons are allocated and apportioned as if they were attributable to activities conducted outside the United States.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after August 1, 1989, and on or before August 1, 1991.

5. QUALIFIED SMALL-ISSUE BONDS (SEC. 6105 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 144(A) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Interest on certain small issues of private activity bonds is exempt from tax if at least 95 percent of the net proceeds of the bonds is to be used to finance manufacturing facilities or certain land or property for first-time farmers ("qualified small-issue bonds").

Qualified small-issue bonds are issues having an aggregate authorized face amount (including certain outstanding prior issues) of $1 million or less. Alternatively, the aggregate face amount of the issue, together with the aggregate amount of certain related capital expenditures during the 6-year period beginning three years before the date of the issue and ending three years after that date, may not exceed $10 million. In determining whether an issue meets the requirements of the small-issue exception, certain previous small issues (and, in the case of the $10-million limitation, capital expenditures during a 6-year period) are taken into account.

Interest on qualified small-issue bonds is taxable if the aggregate face amount of all outstanding tax-exempt private activity bonds (including exempt-facility bonds, qualified redevelopment bonds, and qualified small-issue bonds) that would be allocated to any beneficiary (other than a section 501(c)(3) organization) of the qualified small-issue bonds exceeds $40 million.

The aggregate amount of qualified small-issue bond financing for first-time farmers for all types of depreciable farm property (including both new and used property) is limited to $250,000 for any person or related persons. The $250,000 is a lifetime limit.

To issue a qualified small-issue bond, the issuer must receive an allocation from the State private activity volume cap. Authority to issue qualified small-issue bonds expires December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to permit State and local governments to continue to issue qualified small-issue bonds.

Explanation of provision

The provision extends authority to issue qualified small-issue bonds for two years (through December 31, 1991).

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

6. HEALTH INSURANCE DEDUCTION FOR SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS (SEC. 6106 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 162(1) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, self-employed individuals are entitled to deduct 25 percent of the amount paid for health insurance for the individual and the individual's spouse and dependents (sec. 162(1)). This deduction expires for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

Under present law, more than 2-percent shareholders of S corporations are generally treated as partners in a partnership for purposes of the employee fringe benefit provisions of the Code (sec. 1372).

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend the 25-percent deduction on a temporary basis and to clarify the application of the provision in the case of certain shareholders in S corporations.

Explanation of provision

The provision extends the 25-percent deduction so that it expires for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991. The provision also provides that the 25-percent deduction applies to a more than 2-percent shareholder (as defined under sec. 1372). For purposes of the 25-percent deduction, such an individual's earned income is determined exclusively by reference to the individual's wages (as defined in sec. 3121) from the S corporation. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe additional adjustments relating to the application of the deduction in the case of S corporation shareholders.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

7. ESOP EXCEPTION TO ADDITIONAL TAX ON EARLY WITHDRAWALS (SEC. 6107 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 72(T) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, an additional 10-percent income tax applies to early withdrawals from a qualified retirement plan (sec. 72(t)). However, certain distributions from an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) or a tax credit ESOP are exempt from the additional income tax to the extent that the distribution is attributable to assets that have been invested, at all times, in employer securities (as defined in sec. 409(1)) that satisfy the applicable requirements of sections 409 and 401(a)(28) for the 5-year period immediately preceding the plan year in which the distribution occurs (sec. 72(t)(2)(C)). The ESOP exception does not apply to distributions made after December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend the exception to the 10-percent additional income tax for certain distributions from an ESOP on a temporary basis.

Explanation of provision
